Does any Senator think the President will deal inequitably not only with the foreign countries, but also with the Philippines? Certainly not if we know the temper of the President. He is one of the fairest and most equitable persons ever to grace the White House, and he will rely on the suggestions and the advice of those who have competence and expert knowledge in this field.

Finally, we say: "The balance, including any unfilled balance from allocations," and so forth, "may be purchased" in certain areas. Why was that done? It was done for a very good reason. The State Department and the White House were fearful that if we left the word "shall" in the bill, the President would have to buy sugar from Trujillo—from the Dominican Republic; and that gave the President great concern. So that part has been modified.

When we stop and consider that we have to satisfy the Senate and satisfy the House and satisfy the State Department and satisfy the Chief Executive, I think this bill—notwithstanding the fact that it comes here at a most unseasonable hour, when the spirit droops and when the mind is not too acute and not too perceptive—and I do not mind confessing publicly that I am growing pretty tired, myself, because I got in bed at 2 o'clock yesterday morning, and now the clock shows 5 minutes after 1—raises this question: Assuming that the House will wait, are we going to get this job done, and for how long? Until August 8, no longer. Then we will be back here, to work our will on it, because we shall not have extended the Sugar Act; we shall simply have amended it, to provide emergency powers to the President. And at the same time we shall make it possible to procure sugar from various areas, and still maintain a very sweet relationship with those countries. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, that is a sugary relationship. [Laughter.]

If I know the temper of the President, he would proceed most cautiously, so as not to offend any country, and would express the hope that after we have returned from the recess, the Congress would quickly give this matter primary consideration, because the Sugar Act expires on December 31, and this measure does not extend the act; it merely amends it.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I have stated my case; but I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. The change of the word "shall" to "may" makes a great amount of difference, as the Senator from Illinois well knows.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; I think so.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. In view of the changes, it seems to me the measure is put pretty much in line with what the Senate agreed to, by unanimous vote, as temporary authority to handle this matter, which the President could exercise during the next 30 days. Upon that basis, I feel very much more attracted to it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I have one further observation to make, and then I shall resume my seat: I assume that the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] will offer a substitute which, in effect, will leave in only the Cuban portion, on page 3 of the measure, and will strike out all else. I have not seen the text; but from his discussion, I assume that is what he will do.

If that is what he does, the measure then will say nothing, of course, about procuring sugar to meet the deficit if the Cuban quota is cut. This has some specifics; but under the new amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico, it will be put on a permissive basis, not a mandatory basis, and will effectuate the same result.

Finally, let me point out that a little pride is involved—the pride of the House of Representatives. I do not want to affront the House. I think this bill, with these suggestions and these amendments, is the most agreeable thing we can do; and I earnestly and fervently hope that although it is 10 minutes after 1, the House of Representatives will still be patient a while longer, and that we can get this matter disposed of.

Mr. President, I am prepared to vote.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I direct the attention of the Senator from New Mexico to the changes he has just now suggested.

I suggest that on page 4, in line 3, we do what we did in line 16, namely, change the word "allocated to" to "purchased from." We do not want to create the impression of an allocation, at that point in the bill, any more than we did in the line farther down on that page.

Would the Senator consider that would be a wise extension of his second amendment?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the Senator's suggestion improves my amendment, and I modify my amendment, in line 3, to read "There may be purchased from other foreign countries."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be made.

Mr. BENNETT. And in line 11, should we not use the same language—"There may be purchased from the Republic of the Philippines"?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; and I so modify the amendment in line 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified accordingly.

Mr. ANDERSON. I thank the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I believe one thing has not been mentioned—namely, that by the language on page 3 of the bill, a certain part of the Cuban allotment, if it were canceled, would come to domestic sugar producers to fill, if they had the sugar with which to fill it. I do not believe that has been mentioned.

Senators will note in lines 21 to 23 that that is set forth in these words:

Provided, however, That any part of such quantity equivalent to the proration of domestic deficits to the country whose quota has been reduced may be allocated to domestic areas.

I call attention to that fact, because in the memorandum coming from Mr. Myers, I note that 161,800 tons would come under that classification—that is, Cuba's share of deficits which will go to her within the next few days unless the President is left with power to cancel that. And, judging from what I have heard about the sugar that is available in this country, I think much of that would be available to be supplied.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I am not convinced by the arguments of the Senator from Illinois that the changing of the word "shall" to "may" changes the situation in the least, but the bill is still restricted to the same countries under the word "may" as under the word "shall." I do not see that it makes the slightest bit of difference.

Here we are trying to write a sugar bill, even though a temporary one, at 10 minutes past 1 on Sunday morning, and there are many people to be affected by what we do here tonight: the domestic cane producers, the beet producers, the foreign countries with which we try to get along on reasonable terms, the domestic consumers—180 million of them—and, if one wants to add another group, those who have investments in the sugar industry. They are a reasonably important consideration.

I think we are making a horrible mistake in trying to write a sugar bill at this late hour.

If the President wants authority to deal with the Cuban situation, he can find it in the five lines at the top of page 3, and he does not need the rest of the complicated bill.

I cannot, for the life of me, see how anyone expects us to vote on all the complicated matter contained in the bill. We do not have copies of the bill. We do not have information on it. We have had no hearings of any kind.

I think it is going to be pretty bad business, and possibly costly business, if we try to write a sugar bill at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock on Sunday morning.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote! Vote!

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, we ought to have a quorum here, and I suggest the absence of a quorum. If anyone wants to ride roughshod over the Senate, let him try it, but I want a quorum.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his request?

Mr. AIKEN. Yes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I am aware of the pressures being exerted to obtain an immediate vote, but I have been in this situation, in my 16 years in the Senate, so many times that shouts of "vote" do not bother me when I want to serve notice of a mistake the Senate is about to make.

I agree with everything the Senator from Vermont has said. He is one of the most able members of the Foreign Relations Committee. He and I have traveled throughout Latin America, as have other members of the committee. We have been confronted in capital after capital all over Latin America with the sugar quota problem. It happens already to be one of the causes of a tremendous amount of discontent through Latin America. In spite of all the work we have been trying to do on the Foreign Relations Committee in respect to it, we are confronted here, on this Sunday morning, at 1:15 a.m., with pressures for speedy action on the part of the Senate of the United States, without a minute of hearings on the proposal, on the sugar quota problem, that is going to arise to plague us time and time again.

The Senator from Vermont is correct when he points out that changing the word "shall" to "may" does not in any way change the fact that the House proposal, in effect, limits the action to the countries mentioned therein, and they are going to continue to believe they have some rights vested in them through the passage of this bill.

The countries in Latin America are not interested in parliamentary gymnastics in the Congress of the United States over the word "shall" or "may." So far as they are concerned, they will think the word "may" gives them the same right as the word "shall." I invite Senators to go down there to try to explain the difference to them, and they will see what the response will be.

As the Senator from Vermont has pointed out, we do not have to have the Anderson amendments in the bill other than the provision which provides authority to the President to take the action necessary in order to fix the Cuban quota.

Let us look at what the administration has said to us in the Foreign Relations Committee. I am accustomed to hearing, at the last minute in debate, about some telephone conversation that has been held between the leader of the Senate and the White House, or the State Department, or some other department of the Government. It always makes a great deal of difference when one has those representatives before the committee, in hearings, presenting testimony, and subject to examination upon that testimony.

We have had representatives of the State Department before the Foreign Relations Committee, and they have never testified in support of any such proposal as that before the Senate tonight. What they have testified to is that they need the very substitute the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Oregon are going to offer before the Senate finally disposes of the matter. Whether the Senate likes it or not, the Senate is going to be given the chance to vote on it, and there is going to be an urging to have a yea-and-nay vote on it, because on a matter as vital as this, I think Members of the Senate ought to stand up and be counted on a record vote.

Representatives of the executive department have come before the Foreign Relations Committee. We have had several briefings on this matter in which there have been discussions of the sugar quota problem. Every time the State Department representatives have talked to us, they have talked to us in terms of the recommendation that we give to the President the power—the substitute we are going to offer will seek to give to him—to administer the Cuban quota this year. The important thing is to give the President the power. The State Department officials have said that this is the important thing, when they have been given the opportunity to testify on it.

I am not at all persuaded by the report of the Senator from Illinois that the administration would go along with the bill. I expect the administration would, if it thought it could not get anything better. But I am satisfied that if the administration were given the opportunity to testify on this matter and to express its preference, it would not say it wanted the pending proposal, but it would say it wanted the power to be given to the President for the time being, until the Congress can work out a strong Sugar Act. That should be the job before us when we get back here in August, and that is what we should do, rather than to create the problems we are going to create by adopting the Anderson amendments in their present form.

Mr. President, we have had a great deal of trouble in Guatemala, and we have taken a pretty vigorous stand as a nation with regard to Guatemala. Things have been coming along in Guatemala. I know of no Latin American government that has been more anti-Castro than has Guatemala in recent months. But it is also well known that Guatemala thinks it is getting a raw deal on sugar, and our Government's policies on sugar toward that country are a source of ill will. We shall make it worse tonight if we adopt the Anderson amendments in their present form, because the people of Guatemala are going to interpret the action as leaving them outside, looking in.

Ecuador is another country in which we have some serious problems. In Ecuador the sugar policy is one of the bases of criticisms of Ecuador against the United States. We are about to adopt amendments tonight that will be interpreted by many persons in Ecuador as being another slap in their face, and as playing into the hands of the Communists in Ecuador.

There is El Salvador. We are having our troubles in El Salvador. Here, again, American sugar policy is one of the bases of the criticisms against the United States, and they are going to interpret the amendments as a slap in their face.

I have already mentioned Colombia, Venezuela, and Brazil.

I am at a complete loss to understand how we can be this shortsighted. There can be no excuse that we are under pressure and that we can justify this action because we are under pressure.

The fact is that all we need to do between now and August 8 is to pass that section of the Anderson amendments which the Senator from Vermont pointed out would give to the President the discretionary power to follow the course of action he thinks necessary in our best national interest in respect to the Cuban sugar quota.

The Senator from Illinois says that my subsitute is not going to do anything about the deficit. We do not need to do do anything about the deficit between now and August 8. If we return August 8, we can take care of the deficit problem then. We do not have to take care of the deficit problem in any amendment adopted tonight.

The job before the U.S. Senate tonight is to adopt what we believe is a sugar program which will be in the best foreign policy interests of the United States.

What Senators are trying to do, in my judgment, is to fly in the face of facts on the basis of the argument that the House has the heat on.

Mr. President, I do not scorch very easily. I have an asbestos hide.

I think we ought to submit the situation to the House. The House has some responsibility, too, in respect to American foreign relations in Latin America. I have great respect for the Members of the House of Representatives. I have such respect for the Members of the House of Representatives that I think if we took a little time between now and sunrise for people in the House to explain to the Members of the House the problems the bill will create in Latin America, the House Members will decide, now that we have respected their procedural rights, and now that the bill goes to them in a proper parliamentary form, that they should recede from their position and join with us in the position that they, also, do not wish to follow a course of action which would create greater problems between the United States and the countries of Latin America.

I do not ask Senators to follow this course of action merely because those of us on the subcommittee which deals with Latin American affairs of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations are seeking to warn the Senate—we hope before it is too late—about the great mistake the Senate my make tonight. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry [Mr. ELLENDER] has also warned Senators. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], who is one of the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and one of our keen students of Latin American problems, has been warning the Senate.

This is not a time for haste. Now is a time to put up a sign in the Senate, saying: "Go slow. Take your time."

Although I think we could do what I have suggested between now and morning, if we do not wish to do it that way, if we wish to have more time, and even though I should like to see us recess between now and morning, in my judgment we ought to come back on Monday and take more time to legislate on Monday.

I do not think we ought to go along with what I am satisfied will prove to be a great mistake insofar as American foreign policy is concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The clerk will continue to call the roll.

The legislative clerk resumed and concluded the call of the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does the Senator from South Dakota understand the situation correctly that the vote will come on the Anderson amendments which are in the nature of perfecting amendments, and that if they should be agreed to, it will still be in order for the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] to offer his motion as a substitute to strike and to insert a substitute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments offered by the Senator from New Mexico are in the nature of perfecting amendments. They take precedence over a substitute. Whether they are agreed to or rejected, the proposed amendment or substitute of the Senator from Oregon will be in order.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, I thank the Chair for that ruling. I think the Anderson amendments are better than the bill. I shall vote for the Anderson amendments. I think the Morse substitute would be a further improvement and I shall then vote for the Morse substitute.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AIKEN. Are the Anderson amendments a substitute for the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, the Anderson amendments are perfecting amendments, and not a substitute for the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. Then an amendment which is a complete substitute, as I assume the Morse amendment is, would be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be in order, whether the perfecting amendments offered by the Senator from New Mexico are agreed to or rejected.

The question is on the amendments of the Senator from New Mexico as modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. CANNON], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. TALMADGE], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] are absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] is absent because of illness.

I further announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. BIBLE], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. MCGEE], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SYMINGTON] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. BIBLE], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. CANNON], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], the Senator South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. MCGEE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] would each vote "yea."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BEALL], the Senators from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES and Mr. COTTON] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BUTLER], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH], the Senators from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON and Mr. SCHOEPPEL], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] are necessarily absent. If present and voting, the Senators from Maryland [Mr. BEALL and Mr. BUTLER], the Senators from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES and Mr. COTTON], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] would each vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 7, as follows:

So the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HOLLAND. I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment in the form of a substitute which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That notwithstanding the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended,

The President shall determine the quota for Cuba under such Act for the balance of the calendar year 1960 in such amount or amounts as he shall find from time to time to be in the national interest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. What was the year reference? Was it fiscal year 1960?

Mr. MORSE. 1960. It is the same as in the bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is it the calendar year?

Mr. MORSE. I took it from the bill.

Mr. ALLOTT. Which is it? It makes quite a bit of difference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the amendment reads "calendar year."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Senator from Oregon says he is willing to limit debate to 10 minutes on each side, if he can have the yeas and nays on the amendment.

If that is agreeable, all Senators will know that we shall vote shortly. I ask that 10 minutes of debate be allowed on each side, and that the yeas and nays be ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request with respect to the time limitation?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I would like to have a half minute out of the 10 minutes. I shall not object to the 10-minute limitation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request with respect to the time limitation? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] a question in regard to the question which he raised. Is the amendment in its present form the way he wanted it?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I wanted it to apply to the calendar year, because the fiscal year 1960 has already passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How much time does the Senator from Oregon yield himself?

Mr. MORSE. I yield myself 3 minutes.

We have already debated this matter at great length. I merely wish to summarize what I have already pointed out.

First, my amendment puts the Senate in the same position it was in when we sent the resolution to the House originally, except that we are now in proper parliamentary form. We have the proposal as an amendment to a House bill. We have respected the rights of the House, which should always be respected.

Second, as I have pointed out, the Anderson amendment, in my judgment, can create serious difficulties throughout Latin America, because it will be interpreted as a slap in the face of a considerable number of Latin American countries, such as Brazil, Colombia, Venezuela, El Salvador, Ecuador, and Guatemala. Let us not forget that these countries are among our greatest friends, and are very outstanding anti-Castro nations.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should also like to point out that if the authority in the Anderson amendments is granted to the President and he reduces the Cuban quota for sugar, without allocating it to any other countries, the price of sugar to the consumers in America will go up, and someone is going to make a big killing.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from Vermont stresses the fact that the American consumers have a great interest. We pointed out that we have had no hearings on this matter, which involves a very important American foreign policy problem.

I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

When the administration witnesses have appeared before the Committee on Foreign Relations in regard to the sugar matter—and they have been before us several times—they have been urging that we place in the hands of the President some kind of power to administer the Cuban quota, as a weapon with which to meet the Cuban crisis. This is what I have proposed to do in my amendment.

Even though the hour is late, I believe the House ought to be given an opportunity to strengthen the President's hand without, at the same time, following a course of action which will weaken our position in a great many parts of Latin America.

We are to return on August 8, and on August 8 we can start to come to grips with the sugar bill problem.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has said that my amendment does not take care of the deficit problem. That is true. It is not intended to. The Sugar Act should do that. We should decide that problem in August, when we get back. We should then have full hearings, with State Department officials giving testimony in chief and on cross-examination. In this way we can find out on the record what the administration needs in order to handle this problem.

I now yield 1 minute to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I agree with the general observations of the Senator from Oregon. The House bill, as it came to the Senate, would, in my judgment as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, raise some very complicated international problems, especially with Latin America and some of our friends.

I believe that the bill with Anderson perfecting amendments is much better than the House bill as it came over. Therefore, I voted for the Anderson amendments, so that if we could not get the substitute which the Senator from Oregon is offering, we would at least have the Anderson amendments.

I believe that what the Senator from Oregon is offering—and it is in effect the resolution which was sent to the House by the Senate earlier—is infinitely better than the Anderson amendments. It will give the President leeway to handle the situation without manipulating the quotas and causing embarrassment. It will answer the question. Then when we come back we can give orderly consideration to the matter and proceed in an orderly way that will be satisfactory all around.

Mr. MORSE. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, I should like to point out that by the adoption of the measure now before the Senate we will be redoing what we did last night, by adopting the substance of the resolution which was approved by the Senate and sent to the other body.

That is precisely what we will be doing under the proposal of the Senator from Oregon. The situation is simple. We will have had no hearings whatever in that regard. It involves many serious implications. The cry of the Nation today is for some implementation of means to deal with some shameful conduct by those in charge of the Cuban Government, which has been directed against citizens and investors of this Nation.

If the Senate rejects the amendment of the Senator from Oregon it will mean that we will fail to face up to our responsibility.

Mr. MORSE. I reserve the rest of my time. I am willing to yield back the remainder of my time if the other side is willing to do the same.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield 2 minutes to the minority leader.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, it would be fantastic if after marching up the hill we were to march down again, and strip the Anderson proposal. The Senator from Oregon takes just about everything out of it and leaves only the naked provision with respect to the authority over the Cuban quota. He says of course it was not expected to deal with the deficit. It will be a month before we return. It will be another month before we get anything on the books. That is one-sixth of a year. When we are dealing with 9 million tons of sugar which the country needs every 12 months, there are involved 150 million tons.

The Anderson amendment provides on a permissive basis what we are to get from foreign countries. The distinguished Senator from Vermont says it does not change the countries. Certainly it does not. But the President does not have to buy 1 pound from those countries if he does not want to do so. It is permissive as to the Philippines. It gives the President the power to meet the situation, and he is not compelled to buy from Trujillo of the Dominican Republic.

If we are going to strip the bill of the Anderson amendments, I do not know what the House will do. I have an idea that perhaps they will reject the bill, and that will be the end of it. This is not said as a threat. I simply say that if what has been disclosed means that this situation has deteriorated, we either stay here or we come back and meet the problem.

I believe the bill as it stands is in good form. I do not propose to strip it to nothing more than a naked power dealing with the Cuban quota, leaving unsaid, unsolved, and unanswered the question of what the President permissively can do to fill the deficit in the American sugar bowl to the extent of 150 million tons, before we can work our will on this matter again.

This measure does not extend the act. The title has been amended. The proposal amends the Sugar Act of 1948 and gives the President power. It defines within permissive range what shall be done, taking into account the interest of the State Department, which goes along with the measure, and the interest of the White House, which goes along with it and has to exercise the power.

Having a proper regard for the other branch of the legislative establishment, it seems to me that we best serve their purpose by supporting the so-called Anderson proposal, and rejecting the Morse substitute.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield 2 minutes to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. What is before the Senate is the language which was before us earlier, when the issue was before us, and the question was raised whether the President could acquire sugar if there were no specific provisions in the amendment.

I have made inquiries, and have received information to this effect.

Those of us familiar with the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation of the Department of Agriculture know that under its broad power it has the authority to buy such sugar as may be needed as a result of any action which the President might take under this resolution. For many, many years the Commodity Credit Corporation has in times of emergency purchased commodities of all kinds at times and places and at prices needed to protect the national interest.

If the President under the bill, as amended, should in effect reduce the Cuban quota, then the sum total of the quotas under the act would be less than the Secretary's estimate of the amount of sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers. This bill in addition to giving the President the power to determine the Cuban quota, contemplates that he shall have the power to acquire X quota either in foreign countries or domestic areas and market in the United States such replacement sugar as may be needed.

Mr. President, on the basis of this advice, I do not believe we would make it impossible for the President to acquire sugar if we adopted the Morse amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I say that what is proposed is not the easiest way to dispose of our problem. There were only two votes in the Committee on Ways and Means against the resolution which was offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. BENNETT], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCCARTHY], and myself. The Senator from Minnesota and I are former members of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House. We recognized that this was not the way to proceed.

If we want to reach an agreement with the House, we might as well go ahead with the proposal we have adopted. I do not say it is the last word in human wisdom. I do not say it is perfect. I say it furnishes us a means by which we can meet with the House yet tonight, if they do not accept it as it is, and work out a bill. That is what I should like to do.

I do not enjoy staying here until 2 o'clock in the morning. There are many reasons why I should not be here at this hour. However, we have stayed with the bill up until now, and we ought to try to complete it without having to come back next week.

If we leave the language as it is, I believe it will be acceptable. The adoption of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Oregon will provide us with new difficulties.

I suggest that we vote to reject the amendment and pass the bill and see what the House will do with it. I hope that will be the action of the Senate.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the effect of the bill will be to disturb Latin American relations. This is a Sugar Act, no matter how we try to describe it. It is a measure on which we have had no hearings. We have not had the advantage of the testimony of State Department officials, which we ought to hear. What we ought to do is to give the President a weapon to meet Castro. My substitute does that.

When we return in August, we can pass a Sugar Act, after we have received testimony, and on the basis of the record made.

I refuse to believe that the Members of the House of Representatives, once they understand the issue, will not take the position that we ought to strengthen American relations with Latin America, and not weaken them, as I am satisfied the proposal we have adopted would do, as it has been changed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. MORSE. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senators from Virginia [Mr. BYRD and Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. TALMADGE] are absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senators from Nevada [Mr. BIBLE and Mr. CANNON], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. MCGEE], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator Missouri [Mr. SYMINGTON] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] is absent because of illness.

On this vote, the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. LONG] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA]. If present and voting, the Senator from Hawaii would vote "yea," and the Senator from Michigan would vote "nay."

I further announce that if present and voting, the Senators from Nevada [Mr. BIBLE and Mr. CANNON], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] would each vote "nay."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BEALL], the Senators from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES and Mr. COTTON], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BUTLER], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER], the Senators from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON and Mr. SCHOEPPEL], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] are necessarily absent. If present and voting, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER] would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 30, as follows:

So Mr. MORSE's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill (H.R. 12311) was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to amend the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Texas to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. (Putting the question.)

The "ayes" have it, and the motion to lay on the table is agreed to.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, on that question, I ask for the yeas and nays. Was there a motion to reconsider, and then a motion to lay on the table? If so, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has announced the result.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference thereon with the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: Was a motion made to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and was a motion then made to lay on the table the motion to reconsider? Then, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announced that the motion to lay on the table was agreed to—by means of a voice vote.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, intervening business was transacted. The motion was not made immediately; and I asked for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled.

In connection with the motion of the Senator from Texas, which has been agreed to, the Chair appoints as conferees the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. BENNETT].

RECESS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 4 minutes a.m.) the Senate took a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

At 3 o'clock and 15 minutes a.m. the Senate reassembled, when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. RANDOLPH in the chair).

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12311) to extend for 1 year the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. COOLEY, Mr. POAGE, Mr. ALBERT, Mr. THOMPSON of Texas, Mr. HOEVEN, Mr. BELCHER, and Mr. MCINTIRE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

RECESS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 17 minutes a.m.) the Senate took a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

At 6 o'clock and 8 minutes a.m., the Senate reassembled, when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. BARTLETT in the chair).

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12311) to extend for 1 year the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR ACT OF 1948—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12311) to extend for 1 year the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read, for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

[No. 278]

Aiken	Case, N.J.	Dworshak
Allott	Case, S. Dak.	Ellender
Bartlett	Church	Engle
Bennett	Clark	Ervin
Bush	Curtis	Fong

Hruska	McClellan	Stennis
Jackson	Mansfield	Talmadge
Johnson, Tex.	Morse	Thurmond
Jordan	Mundt	Williams, N.J.
Keating	Muskie	Yarborough
Kuchel	Prouty	Young, Ohio
Lausche	Proxmire

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 112) providing for an adjournment of the two Houses from July 2, 1960, to August 8, 1960, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 712) authorizing the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and found truly enrolled, notwithstanding the adjournment of the two Houses until August 8 and 15, 1960.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR ACT OF 1948—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I do not think there is any objection to the present consideration of the conference report. The results of the conference between the managers of the Senate and the House were that the Senate amendments were accepted by the House with these exceptions:

First, the act would be extended until April 1 of next year rather than allowed to expire on December 31 of this year. The House was absolutely insistent upon that provision, because it is the position of the House that if it is to consider another act, it should hold hearings on it, consider it, and allow others to present their views. When the House of Representatives returns in August, it will not have time to hold such hearings. A great number of the Members will be out campaigning in their own reelections, seeking various and sundry offices, and it was felt it was impossible for the House to do justice to any sugar legislation after its return in August. But the House did agree that it would send us either this same bill again or a bill like it, so that if the Senate wishes, it can amend the bill, send it back to the House, request a conference and go to conference if the Senate wishes to try to act on this kind of legislation in August.

The House is not optimistic about the possibility, but it is willing to send us a bill and has agreed to do so. The floor manager so stated.

In addition, the House also assures us that it will send to the Senate a bill during the first 2½ months of next year, so that the Senate will have time to study it, consider the House bill, and conduct hearings, so that we can pass a Sugar Act before the present bill expires.

We have those two assurances:

First. We get the opportunity to act on sugar legislation in this session, so far as the Senate is concerned, and to go to conference with the House insofar as there are differences between the two.

Second. If those measures are not fruitful, the House will send us a bill in the early part of the next session, in time for the Senate to act, instead of sending it over to the Senate in the last 2 days of the session, as the House did this time.

The major difference, aside from that, is the difference between the amount of discretion given to the President when he reduces the Cuban quota, and whether the terms of the bill are mandatory or permissive.

Senators recall that the junior Senator from Louisiana, who was the chairman of the Senate conferees, himself strongly objected to the mandatory requirement in the House bill. It was the position of the junior Senator from Louisiana that the Senate has not had an opportunity to study the subject, and that we are asked to legislate in the dark and are in no position to tell the President what he should do if he is going to reduce the quota of sugar for Cuba, and that we should leave it entirely up to the President.

The House conferees took the position, in the conference about which they were adamant, that they are well satisfied that they know what the President should do if he reduces the Cuban quota. They have precedent on their side. The Sugar Act has never been one under which the Executive has been permitted any considerable amount of discretion. The committees of Congress have always carefully said what the President could do if he had more sugar to allocate. It has not been left discretionary with the President.

That is the one reason why we find ourselves confronted with the necessity of passing the bill, because historically every time there has been a reduction of quotas, the act spelled out what foreign countries would get and what domestic producers would get. The House was willing to accept the Senate language in which the word "allocation" was stricken in each case, and the word "purchase" was substituted therefor. I believe that suggestion was made on the floor by my distinguished colleague [Mr. ELLENDER], and also by the very able Senator from Utah [Mr. BENNETT], because we wished to make clear that the precedent that would exist should not be the basis for any producing country claiming any vested right that by virtue of selling to the United States more sugar, we owed to that country an obligation to buy more sugar from it in the future.

The mandatory requirement, of course, would mean that the small countries would be the first to be considered in the event that there is a reduction. For example, countries like Panama, which is selling less than 10,000 tons—a small amount but meaningful to them—could come up to a minimum of 10,000 tons first. That is a relatively small amount of sugar compared with the amount that is involved in the act. When that is done, the Philippine quota of 15 percent of the Cuban reduction would be allowed.

There was no real basis for much quarrel between the Senate and the House on that question. It is my understanding that the administration, if granted discretionary power, intended to purchase more than 15 percent from the Philippines. On the other hand, the Philippines would much prefer to have the quota spelled out in mandatory language. It would rather have mandatory language in the act than to have a promise that a quota would be subject to the executive branch changing its mind.

So as far as the Philippines are concerned, what they probably get as a result of taking the House position is a little less sugar than they would get otherwise, but a more firm commitment, which they would prefer.

The junior Senator from Louisiana was reluctant to accept that phase of this mandatory portion, which would mean that the so-called full tariff areas, which are the large producing areas in which we presently buy sugar—such as Peru, the Dominican Republic, and the Republic of Nicaragua—have big quotas, and would expect to get the largest increases in the event there is a major reduction insofar as Cuba is concerned. However, the House was absolutely adamant upon that point. I can only say that I do not believe the House would yield on the point. So far as the junior Senator from Louisiana is concerned, if this were the early part of the session, I would be willing to sit and fight it out for 3 or 4 months, but I doubt whether the House will yield.

We have the assurance that when we come back in August we can send the House the same bill. It has firmly committed itself to giving us that opportunity. It will send us a bill on which to act and take this issue up with us if we wish to make this power discretionary in August.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to make clear that Mexico was included in the list of countries the Senator mentioned, although the Senator did not mention Mexico itself. There was a great deal of interest in that situation.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I regret very much that I neglected to mention it. I thought I had included Mexico. Peru, the Dominican Republic, Mexico, and Nicaragua, in that order, would be the nations that would be most benefited. To a lesser degree, Haiti would be benefited. The Netherlands would be benefited to a small amount; at present that nation receives only 3,000 tons a year. Of course, a country like Peru could expect a major increase.

I discussed this matter after leaving the conference, with a representative of the State Department. It was his position that the Department very much hoped that we would agree to the conference report. The State Department would prefer to have the President's power entirely discretionary. I doubt very much that the Senate Committee on Finance, after it studied the subject, would be willing to give the President discretionary power. I believe the strongest argument for discretionary power, if we ever had a chance to study the subject to know what we would be willing to do, would be that we would be willing to trust his discretion for a short period of time. However, I believe that the Finance Committee and a majority of the Senate will, when they have had a chance to study the matter, insist on mandatory requirements as to what the President can do.

Some years ago when we had the last Sugar Act before us, the State Department said it would prefer more discretion, but recommended how the mandatory provision should be drafted, and we took its recommendation.

I wish we could have brought the Senate everything the Senate agreed to. I personally would like to have given the President more discretion. If we do not pass this bill, the probabilities are that we will do what the State Department most fears and what the administration most fears, and that is that the act we have on the books now, with its mandatory provisions, will force the President to accord Castro a major increase this very month. That is out of all accord with logic and reason, with our properties and investments being seized down there, and every indication of unfriendliness from the rulers of that country. However, unless we change the law it would accord a major additional advantage to an unfriendly government.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I may have some comments on the report later in the discussion. However, with reference to one statement which the Senator made about the attitude of the State Department, I talked with the same representative of the State Department to whom the Senator from Louisiana talked, and I think my understanding is slightly different as to what he said.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Let us say that we did not talk with the same man at the same time, but at different times.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The statement was made to me by others, and I talked with this representative later, and the representative of the State Department said to me that they could "live with this report." I said, "What do you mean by that?"

He said, "Well, we have to live with what Congress gives us to live with. If this is what Congress gives us, we can live with it, or with no bill at all. We can live with the law that the Congress gives us to live with. We do not like it, but if we have to live with it, we can live with it."

I gained the very definite impression that they do not like any part of this conference report. If they get it, they get it, and that is all. They would prefer the discretionary provisions that were in the Anderson amendment.

Probably they would prefer the provisions that were in the Morse amendment. I am not sure, but I believe it is even more discretionary and would give greater leeway to the administration to adjust these things. I wished to make that clear.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Looking at the situation from hindsight, I wish the Senate had agreed to the Morse amendment. I voted for the Morse amendment. I believe we might have had a better chance if we had gone to conference with a proposal that merely permitted the President to cut the Cuban quota. However, one thing that made it difficult for the Senate conferees was that the State Department representatives told the House committee that the Department could live with this provision. They had gone to the House committee which had held hearings—of course we had no opportunity to hold hearings on it at all—and they asked for complete discretion in the President, as the Morse amendment and the Bennett proposal would have given.

The House committee said, "We are not disposed to give you that power. We are going to settle it in the law how you will redistribute this sugar in the event you reduce the quota for Cuba." They have all the precedents on their side, because this was what had been done.

The State Department said it could live with the provision. The committee said, "There be a 1-year extension." The State Department said, "We can live with it." The House conferees said, "If the State Department is willing to support it, we will favor it."

One can see that that does not help the position of the Senate conferees in trying to get complete discretionary power for the President.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. That reminds me of the statement that if a certain situation is inevitable, there is often only one thing that can be done.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I have often complained about losing to the House on a conference report. If this one is voted down, no one will hear me complain.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Adoption of this settlement appeared to me to be the best thing we could do under the circumstances.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I understood the Senator to say that if we do not accept the conference report, we will be forcing a bonus into Castro's hands.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. If we do not legislate; yes.

Mr. AIKEN. Would it not be more to the point to say, if the House insists upon our accepting an unworkable bill and an unwise bit of legislation, and forces us to the point where we have to reject it, the responsibility will rest with the House?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. That can be charged, but I would like to warn my friend from Vermont that while basically we are not in disagreement, and I believe that he and I would like to have the President given discretion, it was my impression in trying to support the Senate's position, that there is more unanimity on the House side than there is on this side.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. If I understood the report of the able chairman of the conferees, the first way in which the Senate prevailed was in the elimination of sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 from the House bill.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. HOLLAND. The second way, if I understood the able Senator's report, in which the Senate prevailed over the House, is that, instead of having the quota system apply throughout 1961, as provided by the House bill, the House has yielded except as to the first quarter in 1961, with the provision that the quotas shall be one-fourth of what they would otherwise have been.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Yes. The quotas will continue until April 1 of next year.

Mr. HOLLAND. The third way in which, as I understand, the Senate conferees have prevailed is that instead of making any allotment with reference to any tonnage of sugar taken away from Cuba, the matter of purchase is clearly outlined in every provision of the bill on that subject.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. HOLLAND. If I understand the Senator correctly, the Senate has prevailed in another matter, namely, that the Senate will have an opportunity, when it returns in August, to pass upon this same legislation or a duplicate thereof, one of the objections to the action of the House bill having been that the Senate committee would not have an opportunity to pass upon the House legislation. Am I correct?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Yes. The Senate conferees wanted to be in a position, at least, to be assured that, so far as the rules were concerned, we would have an instrument on which we could act, and a measure which would be entitled to be voted on by the House. We have that assurance. That assurance was also given to the House when the report was agreed to. It was stated by the House managers to the House, with a rather large membership present, that this assurance was given to the Senate conferees.

Mr. HOLLAND. Am I correct in my understanding that the matter of leaving power, in the first instance, to take away any unused part of the quota of Cuba in 1960 was left in the bill and was not in conference?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. HOLLAND. Am I also correct in my understanding that the same law applies to the first quarter of 1961 in the event the conference report prevails?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Yes; the Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is it not true, then, that the only substantial concession to the House which the conferees have made is in making mandatory the distribution of any tonnage taken from Cuba; making it come under the "shall" provisions of the House bill, rather than under the "may" provisions of the Senate version?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Yes; that is entirely correct. I believe that is as much as we shall be able to get from the House. We might go back again, confer again, and remain in session around the clock, day and night, for several more days; but I believe we shall find that there will be very little, if any, difference between what we have at present and what we will get in the end.

Mr. HOLLAND. I was informed from a memorandum furnished on information which came to me from Mr. Myers, the head of the Sugar Division, that the unused portion of the 1960 quota for Cuba is 830,000 tons; and that, according to his information, Cuba is now planning, with all speed, to dump all that amount in the United States within the next few weeks, so as to complete the shipment of her quota. In his conference with the State Department personnel did the Senator learn that same fact?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I have that information only by hearsay, but if I may testify from the hearsay I have, it is that Cuba is moving as rapidly as she can to get that sugar delivered to the United States as far ahead of the deadline as she can; because once she has shipped it here, she will be entitled to collect payment for it.

Mr. HOLLAND. The value of 830,000 tons at $100 a ton, or 5 cents a pound, is, as I understand it, $83 million.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. That is about correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator has talked of a deficit which, under existing law, would have to be assigned to Cuba within the next few days. The memorandum from the office of Mr. Myers showed that that deficit was 161,800 tons. Did the Senator get that information likewise?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I do not have the exact figures, but I knew it to be a very large amount.

Mr. HOLLAND. The 830,000 tons plus the 161,800 tons make practically 1 million tons, at a value of $100 million. As the Senator from Florida understands, we may easily be paying that much into Castro's pockets, in hard American currency, between now and the time we return in August, unless we leave some machinery in the hands of the Executive, so that the Executive can, if he feels our Nation's interests require it, which certainly seems probable, take away a part of the 1960 quota.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I am not certain I heard the figure the Senator gave.

Mr. HOLLAND. 100 million tons—830,000 tons plus 161,800 tons.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I am not such an expert on the whole situation as are the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Utah [Mr. BENNETT]; but the Senator is correct that there are in the vicinity of 100 million tons of economic benefits which can possibly go to Cuba within the next month, unless we act on this proposed legislation.

That is why the President has notified some Senators, according to what they tell me, that if we go to our national conventions, for example, without doing something about this problem, he will call Congress into session, because the matter is vital to the Nation's position; that while American-owned properties are being confiscated in many unfriendly attacks, the President's hands are tied by the act we passed some years ago, so that he cannot do anything about it.

Mr. HOLLAND. The three figures given in the memorandum which came from Mr. Myers' office are, first, 830,000 tons, the remainder of the 1960 quota, which, according to his information, is immediately to be shipped to the United States; second, 161,800 tons, the share of the deficits which will have to be apportioned to Cuba under existing law, and within the next few days, unless action is taken by Congress. The third figure given in the memorandum is 45,000 tons. On all these points I certainly hope the Senator from Utah, who has studied this matter much more closely than I, will correct me if I am in error. This relates to possible growth participation, Cuba having its full proportionate share in the growth of consumption in this Nation.

If the Senator from Louisiana will permit me to do so, may I ask the distinguished Senator from Utah if his information is in accord with that in the memorandum furnished to me from the files of my distinguished colleague from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS], who, I am sorry, cannot be here this morning.

Mr. BENNETT. It is my understanding that those figures are approximately correct. I certainly have no figures which are different.

I am glad the Senator from Florida presented them to the Senate, because we are talking here about a ruling about the President being required to give a small amount to the four or five countries getting less than 10,000 tons, and we are talking, with respect to Cuba, about a potential increase from its normal quota of around 200,000 tons—both the growth formula and the deficit allocation.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator enlighten us a little more fully as to what the April 1 date means? I have heard something said about the crop year beginning before April 1, and it was suggested to me that in effect that meant that we were extendiing the period for 2 crop years.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. The April 1 date, as I understand, would be of some assistance. I hope the distinguished Senator from Utah will hear my answer, because I may be in error, and the Senator from Utah knows more about this particular item than I do.

It is my understanding that the April 1 date affords some convenience and advantage, so far as the beet sugar producers are concerned, because at least the sugar will be cut at the time the seeds are planted. As the Senator knows, this date has no particular significance so far as cane sugar producers are concerned.

Mr. CLARK. It would not have any effect on Louisiana?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. No; it would have no benefits to us particularly, except that it would be certain that sugar beets would be available for planting for 3 months. However, this has no real meaning so far as the cane-producing States are concerned.

Mr. BENNETT. One of the hopes which the House conferees stated, and it is one which the Senator from Utah shares, is that when the Senate gets a chance to work on the proposed sugar legislation, we may be able to develop a program to provide some acreage for some of the new areas which should come in, and for States like New Mexico, which the Senator from New Mexico has talked about so eloquently.

If we fix the date as April 1, and we are able to work out some such program, the people who get new allotments can plant their allotment a year earlier than if we let them go to June or September.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. There is a legislative reason for the April 1 date. The House takes the attitude that it wishes to make a 1-year extension, and wishes to rewrite the entire Sugar Act next year.

Mr. CLARK. I understand that. I asked whether any crop year is involved. The Senator has answered that question.

I wish to ask one more question: Is it correct that under the conference report approved by the House, it is mandatory upon the President, if he reduces the Cuban sugar quota—in other words, if he takes sugar away from Castro—to give a substantial amount of that decrease in the Cuban quota to Trujillo?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Well, the Dominican Republic is one of the nations listed here.

Mr. CLARK. I hold no brief for Castro, of course. But if, under the conference report, any of the Cuban quota is taken from Castro, some additional quota would have to be given to Trujillo, would it not?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Yes.

There is this to be said for that result: It does establish uniformity, without opening up the quotas.

The distinguished Senator from Florida has been saying for some time that we should go into the entire sugar quota issue, and should reopen the quotas, and should permit countries such as Brazil, which never has had a quota, to be assigned quotas. I assume that the Finance Committee, as well as the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, would propose to go into that matter next year.

But the problem is that when we go into it, it is an almost endless process, because very many nations want to have a larger quota. Those that do not now have quotas wish to have quotas assigned to them; and no nation which now has a quota wants to give up any of the quota it has, in order that some other nation may have its quota increased or in order that a nation which does not now have a quota may be assigned a quota.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to point out to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the House conferees have suggested that there is a possibility that there will be a change of government there during the period of the life of this measure, and they felt that the State Department should be under obligation to treat the new government in the same way the old one had been treated.

Mr. CLARK. Rather than to have some flexibility?

Mr. BENNETT. That was the attitude of the House conferees.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana that I recognize that undoubtedly the conference was a difficult one in which to reach any agreement.

But with respect to the assurance that the House would pass a bill in August, so that it could come to the Senate during that month—which would be a difficult assurance to carry out—let me say that once this measure is agreed to and once this bill is enacted into law, with the inclusion of a provision for extension of the life of the statute to April 1 of next year, no bill of this sort will be passed by the House of Representatives until the next session, for in that situation there would be no compulsion on the House to pass such a bill in August of this year. Once the expiration date is extended until April of next year, neither the House nor the Senate will pass an extension of the law on this subject in August of this year. I think we must be realistic and must recognize that situation and that fact.

Even if the House were to pass such a bill in August and were to send it to the Senate during that month, there would be no more assurance that the Senate would be able to act on it during August than there is assurance that the Senate will act on this measure today.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota formerly was a Member of the House of Representatives, and he knows more about its operations than I do.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Why is it that the House Committee on Agriculture has taken the lead in connection with this matter in the House?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. For only one reason, and that is that on the House Committee on Agriculture there are few members who are very interested in domestic sugar production.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Historically the House Committee on Agriculture has been the branch which has done the basic work in connection with sugar legislation, but that has been because the matter has been dealt with primarily as an economic matter.

But today it is primarily a matter of foreign policy. If the House is going to turn over to its Committee on Agriculture a matter which today is primarily a foreign-policy matter, we had better know what we are doing.

I say this issue is today primarily a foreign-policy question. I say that because of the statement, which has been made, that if we do not act on this matter, the President will eall us back on the coming Tuesday. Why? Because he believes this matter relates primarily, at this time, to foreign policy.

If Senators wish to permit the House to control the Senate in connection with a matter which primarily involves foreign relations, let us face that fact.

We are not being pressed to take action on this matter because of the economic situation of sugar today. We are being urged to take action on it because of the fact that if we do not, $100 million will be given to Castro, and Castro is confiscating American property. If those are not matters of foreign policy, I do not know what they are.

Furthermore, if this matter does involve foreign policy, then I do not believe the Senate should be proceeding to deal with it at 7 o'clock on Sunday morning, after being worn and harassed by several late night sessions.

On the other hand, if this is a foreign-policy question, and if action on it is needed, we should now adjourn, and should get some sleep, and should reconvene on Tuesday, and should then proceed to deal with the matter, at a time when we shall be able to think clearly, carefully investigate the subject, and arrive at a sound decision. If foreign policy is involved, this matter deserves more consideration than we can give to it at this hour on Sunday morning.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, what foreign-policy matter is involved? It is this: The President wants to have the power to reduce Cuba's sugar quota. That is the major consideration; and both Houses are willing to give him all the power he is requesting in that respect. When that happens, we shall have to buy some more sugar, somewhere; and that will result in a very good "deal" for the nations which are able to sell more sugar to us. All the nations from which we shall buy more sugar are friendly to us.

Historically, the Congress has always been interested in determining legislatively the nations from which the United States would purchase sugar. But so far as the executive branch of our Government is concerned, that is now a secondary issue.

As regards the issue which the executive branch considers the major issue involved in this case, we are giving the executive branch what it wants. The executive branch is not sure what nations and how much it would recommend as the one from which the sugar be purchased. The House says it wishes to make legislatively certain where the extra sugar will be purchased, after the Cuban quota is reduced.

So we are not giving in on what the executive branch regards as the primary problem.

So far as the secondary problem or secondary consideration is concerned, I point out that the House Members know something about this act, for they have been holding hearings on it for more than a year, and they have an opinion on it. Perhaps they do not have the same opinion that I have. But of course we know that most legislators would like to tell the Executive to do his job the way legislators think he should do it, but the legislators do not want anyone to tell them how to run their jobs. So this is a matter of determining who will tell the Executive how he shall proceed.

If I were a member of the Finance Committee when the question of changing the quotas was being studied, I would have been among the strongest in favor of having the legislative branch give the Executive the direction. But the House delayed taking action on this measure, and it did not reach us in time to permit us to hold hearings.

We are proposing to give the Executive what he has said is most urgent—namely, the power to reduce the quota insofar as Cuba is concerned. So, Mr. President, if the Executive does not like the way the details are spelled out, I hope that the executive branch will cooperate with the excellent congressional leadership we have had—and we have had every assurance from the Speaker of the House and from the majority leader of the Senate that they will cooperate in every way they possibly can—in proceeding to correct anything that needs to be corrected in connection with what we do here, tonight.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Undoubtedly the Senator from Louisiana is aware of the reports which have been prevalent for months, namely, that some House Members are very insistent that the Sugar Act be renewed next year, in order that it may be incorporated in an omnibus farm bill.

Does not the Senator from Louisiana think we ought to keep our foreign policy, as indicated in the Sugar Act, separate from the domestic farm program?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I could not agree more with the Senator.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I hold in my hand a copy of the conference report from the Parliamentarian's desk. In amendment No. 1 it states that, in lieu of section 1, which was stricken by the Senate amendment, the following is inserted, and this is to become a part of the law and the Senate is to agree to it:

> That section 412 of the Sugar Act of 1948 (relating to termination of the powers of the Secretary under the act) is amended (1) by striking out "December 31, 1960" and inserting in lieu thereof "March 31, 1961", (2) by inserting ", until March 31, 1961," after "power", and (3) by striking out "the crop year 1960 and previous crop years" and inserting in lieu thereof "any crop year beginning prior to March 31, 1961".

The conference report states that is the measure the Senate is expected to accept.

Mr. President, it does not take a Member of Congress or a lawyer to know what is meant by "any crop year beginning prior to March 31, 1961." Every sharecropper in east Texas and every farmer knows that "any crop year beginning prior to March 31, 1961" is the year 1961; and the Senate has given up completely. It has extended the crop year through 1961, with a mandatory provision that the President may set quotas in other countries and in our own. We have our own Guatemalas inside the United States. If this amendment is put into the law, it would be without the corrective provisions that were in the section before.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. In connection with that feature, I believe the Senator from Utah [Mr. BENNETT] understands that particular language better than I do, and I am glad to yield to him.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, when we had finished our work on the conference, a proposal was made that we add a new section which spelled out that the quota available for the 3 months would be calculated by taking the quota for a year and dividing it by four, to make sure only one-quarter of a year's quota would be covered by this 3-month period.

We were told it could not be done in the bill because that matter was not in conference and was not contained in either bill. But in the statement of the managers of the House the information is clearly set forth that it is the intention of the legislation that the quota provided by the extra 3-month coverage for 1961 will represent one-quarter of a year's quota. Because of the limitations of the language before us, that was the only way we could protect ourselves against the matter that is worrying the Senator from Texas.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Actually, that is a technical matter, and it does not extend the act through the next year beyond April 1. While it is somewhat technical to explain, and I did not draft it, I assure the Senator that the House Members gave us their assurance, and the assurance of the House—and I am confident they are telling the truth—that they pledge to give us a sugar bill in the month of March, as early as they can in that month, in order that we may have adequate time to conduct hearings, study the matter, act on it, and pass a bill to renew this act before it expires on April 1.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. Was the assurance that it would be a sugar bill itself, or a part of an omnibus farm bill?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I discussed the matter, and in the context in which the discussions occurred, and I would say the context in which the chairman of the Agriculture Committee of the House explained the matter to the House, I think it was very clear that it referred to a sugar bill, rather than a chapter of a general omnibus agricultural act. There was no meeting of the minds if it meant anything else.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. DWORSHAK. The Senator has said the House has given assurance that some action will be taken early in the next session so the Senate can complete its part of the legislative action prior to April 1. I think the record will show that there is no reason why we should accept such assurances.

So far as I am concerned, I want the RECORD to show that every Member of the House, particularly the chairman of the Agriculture Committee, has known the Sugar Act was to expire on December 31, 1960. The sugar industry and the beet growers in my State and other Western States have been unable to know what to expect so far as sugar legislation is concerned.

There has been a regrettable lack of cooperation on the part of the House, and I hope I am not violating the rules of this body when I refer thus to the other House. But the record is clear that there has been indecision, delay, and disregard for our domestic sugar beet producers. And on that basis I say we can expect little consideration between now and next spring, and this body will be facing great difficulty in trying to complete action in a manner that will give to our domestic beet growers the same consideration that we give to foreign producers of sugar.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. First let me say that I do not care to differ with the Senator from Idaho. I for one express the wish that the domestic producers were represented on the House committee as they are on the Senate Committee on Finance.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. The Senator from Idaho, having served in the House, has no desire to violate the rules, and I said I hoped that no such construction would be placed on what I said. But we have nothing to show but the record in this session, and the record shows we have been marking time, waiting month after month for action in the other body. If there is no action, we have a right to make our interpretation of why there has been a complete lack of cooperation.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield to my colleague, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I am wondering what is going to happen to the sugar program if we agree to what the House desires. I am sure there is no intention on the part of the Senate to go into the 1961 crop, yet as I understand the action taken by the conferees I am satisfied the House of Representatives will not agree to a bill in August, nor will the House agree to a bill at the end of December. The House is going to hold us at bay, as it is doing now.

Under the present Sugar Act, quotas are fixed under title II. As I understand, that part of the present Sugar Act is not to be changed at all with respect to the time in which the quotas are to be fixed for all producers in the United States, as well as for those foreign countries which furnish sugar under the act.

Section 201 of the act, which is not to be changed as I understand the pending bill, reads as follows:

SEC. 201. The Secretary shall determine for each calendar year—

Not for a quarter of a year, but for each calendar year—

beginning with the calendar year 1948, the amount of sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers in the continental United States; such determinations shall be made during the month of December in each year for the succeeding calendar year (in the case of the calendar year 1948, during the first ten days thereof) and at such other times during such calendar year as the Secretary may deem necessary to meet such requirements. In making such determinations the Secretary shall use as a basis the quantity of direct-consumption sugar distributed for consumption, as indicated by official statistics of the Department of Agriculture, during the twelve-month period ending October 31 next preceding the calendar year for which the determination is being made, and shall make allowances for a deficiency or surplus in inventories of sugar, and for changes in consumption because of changes in population and demand conditions, as computed from statistics published by agencies of the Federal Government; and, in order that such determinations shall be made so as to protect the welfare of consumers and of those engaged in the domestic sugar industry by providing such supply of sugar as will be consumed at prices which will not be excessive to consumers and which will fairly and equitably maintain and protect the welfare of the domestic sugar industry, the Secretary, in making any such determination, in addition to the consumption, inventory, population, and demand factors above specified and the level and trend of consumer purchasing power, shall take into consideration the relationship between the prices at wholesale for refined sugar that would result from such determination and the general cost of living in the United States as compared with the relationship between prices at wholesale for refined sugar and the general cost of living in the United States obtaining during 1947–49 as indicated by the Consumers' Price Index as published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor.

After that is done, Mr. President, and after the quota is decided, what happens?

PRORATION OF QUOTAS

SEC. 202. Whenever a determination is made, pursuant to section 201, of the amount of sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers, the Secretary shall establish quotas, or revise existing quotas—

How does he do that?

(a) (1) For domestic sugar-producing areas by apportioning among such areas four million four hundred and forty-four thousand short tons, raw value, as follows:

The act goes on:

	Short tons raw value
Domestic beet sugar	1,800,000
Mainland cane sugar	500,000
Hawaii	1,052,000
Puerto Rico	1,080,000
Virgin Islands	12,000

(2) To the above total of four million four hundred forty-four thousand short tons, raw value, there shall be added an amount equal to 55 per centum of the amount by which the Secretary's determination of requirements of consumers in the continental United States for the calendar year exceeds eight million three hundred and fifty thousand short tons, raw value. Such additional amount shall be apportioned among and added to the quotas established under paragraph (1) of this subsection for such domestic sugar-producing areas, respectively, as follows: (A) The first one hundred sixty-five thousand short tons, raw value, or any part thereof, by which quotas for the domestic areas are so increased shall be apportioned 51.5 per centum to the domestic beet sugar area and 48.5 per centum to the mainland cane sugar area; (B) the next twenty thousand short tons, raw value, or any part thereof, by which such quotas are so increased shall be apportioned to Puerto Rico; (C) the next three thousand short tons, raw value, or any part thereof, by which such quotas are so increased shall be apportioned to the Virgin Islands; (D) any additional amount shall be apportioned on the basis of the quotas established in paragraph (1) of this subsection as adjusted by subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of this paragraph (2). (7 U.S.C. 1112(a))

(b) For the Republic of the Philippines, in the amount of nine hundred and fifty-two thousand short tons of sugar as specified in section 211 of the Philippine Trade Act of 1946. (7 U.S.C. 1112(b))

(c) (1) For the calendar year 1956, for foreign countries other than the Republic of the Philippines, by prorating among such countries an amount of sugar, raw value, equal to the amount determined pursuant to section 201 less the sum of the quotas established pursuant to subsections (a) and (b) of this section, on the following basis:

Country	Per centum
Cuba	96
Foreign countries other than Cuba and the Republic of the Philippines	4

Ninety-five per centum of the quota for foreign countries other than Cuba and the Republic of the Philippines shall be prorated among such countries on the basis of the average amount imported from each such country within the quotas established for the years 1948, 1949, and 1950, except that a separate proration need not be established for any country which entered less than two per centum of the average importations within the quotas for such years. The amount of the quota not so prorated may be filled by countries not receiving separate prorations, but no such country shall enter an amount pursuant to this subsection in excess of one per centum of the quota for foreign countries other than Cuba and the Republic of the Philippines.

(2) For the calendar year 1957 and for each subsequent calendar year, for foreign countries other than the Republic of the Philippines, (A) by prorating to Cuba 96 per centum and to other foreign countries 4 per centum of the amount of sugar, raw value, by which eight million three hundred and fifty thousand short tons, raw value, or such lesser amount as determined pursuant to section 201 exceeds the sum of four million four hundred and forty-four thousand short tons, raw value, and the quota established pursuant to subsection (b) of this section; and (B) by prorating 45 per centum of the amount of sugar, raw value, by which the amount determined pursuant to section 201 exceeds the sum of eight million three hundred and fifty thousand short tons, raw value, as follows:

Cuba	29.59
Peru	4.33
Dominican Republic	4.95
Mexico	5.10
Other countries	1.03

The above proration of 1.03 per centum to foreign countries other than Cuba, the Republic of the Philippines, Peru, the Dominican Republic, and Mexico shall be apportioned to such other countries whose average entries within the quotas during 1953 and 1954 exceeded one thousand short tons, raw value, on the basis of the average entries within the quotas from each such country for the years 1951, 1952, 1953, and 1954.

(3) For the calendar year 1957 and for each subsequent calendar year, the proration of 4 per centum under paragraph (2) (A) of this subsection for foreign countries other than Cuba and the Republic of the Philippines shall be apportioned first, by assigning to each such foreign country whose average entries within the quotas during the years 1953 and 1954 were less than one thousand short tons, raw value, a proration equal to its average entries within the quotas during 1953 and 1954; second, by assigning to each such foreign country whose average entries within the quotas during 1953 and 1954 were, not less than one thousand nor more than two thousand short tons, raw value, a proration of three thousand short tons, raw value; third, by assigning to each foreign country whose average entries within the quotas during 1953 and 1954 were more than two thousand and less than three thousand short tons, raw value, a proration equal to the average entries from each such country within the quotas during 1953 and 1954, plus two thousand short tons, raw value; fourth, by assigning to each foreign country whose average entries within the quotas during 1953 and 1954 were not less than three thousand nor more than ten thousand short tons, raw value, a proration equal to the average entries from each such country within the quotas during 1953 and 1954; and, fifth, by prorating the balance of such proration to such foreign countries whose average entries within the quotas during 1953 and 1954 exceeded ten thousand short tons, raw value, on the basis of the average entries within the quotas from each such country for the years 1951, 1952, 1953, and 1954. (7 U.S.C. 1112(c))

(d) Notwithstanding the other provisions of this title II, the minimum quota established for Cuba, including increases resulting from deficits determined pursuant to section 204(a), shall not be less than the following:

(1) 28.6 per centum of the amount of sugar determined under section 201 when such amount is seven million four hundred thousand short tons or less; and

(2) two million one hundred and sixteen thousand short tons, when the amount of sugar determined under section 201 is more than seven million four hundred thousand short tons.

The quotas for domestic sugar-producing areas, established pursuant to the other provisions of this title II, shall be reduced pro rata by such amounts as may be required to establish such minimum quota for Cuba. (7 U.S.C. 1112(d))

(e) Whenever in any year any foreign country with a quota or proration thereof of more than ten thousand short tons fails to fill such quota or proration by more than 10 per centum and at any time during such year the world price of sugar exceeds the domestic price, the quota or proration thereof for such country for subsequent years shall be reduced by an amount equal to the amount by which such country failed to fill its quota or proration thereof, unless the Secretary finds that such failure was due to crop disaster or force majeure or finds that such reduction would be contrary to the objectives of this Act. Any reduction hereunder shall be prorated in the same manner as deficits are prorated under section 204. (7 U.S.C. 1112(e))

This must be done, as I have said, in December. In my judgment, should the pending measure be approved, and unless other legislation is approved after the Congress returns in August, we will, as a practical matter, be extending the act for 1 year in the wee hours of the morning, under duress, without a fair opportunity to study the bill in detail.

What is the rush, Mr. President? Why must we adopt this conference report tonight, in toto, without change, practically as dictated by the House Committee on Agriculture? This is no way to legislate.

For my own part, I intend to vote against the conference report. As I have already indicated, the practical effect of this legislation will be to extend the act, under terms and conditions dictated by the House of Representatives, for another year. In the process, circumstances will arise which are bound to return to haunt us.

First, should a portion of Cuba's quota be parceled out among other foreign countries—and quite a few are in line for just that kind of treatment should this legislation become law—we will never be able to reduce those increased quotas. The countries receiving rights to export larger quantities of sugar to the United States are going to regard those temporary privileges as permanent. They will resist demands to remove them, if and when a friendly government returns to power in Cuba. Thus, Mr. President, I fear we may be paving the way for an orgy of Latin American irritation against the United States. Instead of being in hot water only with regard to Cuba, this legislation practically assures us of getting involved in foreign policy disputes with each and every sugar exporting country in the Caribbean area. I might also remark that when a friendly government returns to Cuba—and I am convinced that the bearded demagogue Castro will not forever remain in power—Cuba will stand in dire need of funds. She can obtain these funds in two ways—either by selling goods, principally sugar, to the United States, or by Uncle Sam adding Cuba to the dole list under the foreign-aid program.

We have not made any friends with foreign aid, Mr. President, and there is no reason to believe that a Castro-less Cuba would prove any exception. On the other hand, should the quota presently assigned to Cuba be reduced, and the reduction parceled out among other countries, we will never be able to regain those increases—we will never be able to permit Cuba to regain her former status as a supplier of sugar to the United States. At least, we will not be able to do so by cutting back on other countries. The only possible way that Cuba's once-reduced quota might be returned, under these circumstances, would be to cut the quotas assigned to our own domestic producers.

Is this what Senators want to do? I do not believe so. At least, the senior Senator from Louisiana is not going to participate in such an effort. I caution Senators, do not act with such haste, under emotional pressure, in the wee hours of the morning, that in our efforts to castigate Castro we actually wind up paving the way for further foreign policy difficulties abroad, plus the possibility, if not probability, of injury to our own sugar producers in the process.

Second, Mr. President, we must not forget that sugar legislation has been pending in the Congress since early 1959. The House Committee on Agriculture did not report a bill until just recently. If this legislation now before us is enacted, I am willing to wager that the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will do again in 1961 just exactly what he has done in 1960—namely, refuse to act until the last moment, in order to be sure that he gets his own way. Oh, it is said that the Senate will be in a position to act after we return in August by attaching sugar legislation to some agricultural bill which has already been approved by the House of Representatives. I wish I could believe this, Mr. President, but the fact is that I fear some elements in the House are more desirous of playing personal and partisan politics than in assisting in the enactment of legislation which would assist our domestic sugar producers, and protect consumers against the ravages of international sugar price warfare.

The resolution approved by the Senate earlier today would have done the job that needs to be done. It provided power to deal with Castro and his cohorts. Yet, the House of Representatives raised a constitutional issue and shouted it down. The net result is that the only vehicle which might reasonably and realistically be available for use later this year as the basis for long-range sugar legislation is now being converted into a 1-year extension of the act, under the guise of a 3-month extension, with the terms thereof dictated by the House.

Mr. President, I am going to vote against this conference report. I am as anxious to chastise Castro as any man in this Chamber, but I am not going to yield to my impulses in the wee small hours of the morning, particularly when to do so offers every assurance that we are once again placing the necks of our sugar producers upon the House chopping block—when to do so means that we are participating in the creation of a law which will foster and foment further dislike for the United States and unrest in the Caribbean areas.

If we make the mistake of agreeing to the conference report, we will not get sugar legislation this year. I hope Senators will believe me when I say that. If I am incorrect in that statement, I should like to have my good friends from Louisiana and from Utah, who were on the conference committee, tell me so.

As I have said, we do not change title II in respect to the fixing of quotas. Those quota determinations are made in December of each year, for the next calendar year. It may be that there will be an allocation of only one-fourth of what the estimated consumption may be, but the point is that we cannot allocate to any offshore producer of cane sugar a quota for only 3 months. That has to be done on the basis of a year.

Sugar cannot be produced in 3 months. If I am mistaken on that I should like to know about it.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, may the Senator from Utah respond?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I voted for the Anderson amendment. That is what we had under consideration in the Congress. I believe that my distinguished colleague did not vote for the amendment. His judgment probably is better than mine. However, that is what we took to the conference. Based on what we had in the conference, we did pretty well.

As one of the conferees, I did the best I could to get everything I could which was in the Senate version of the bill. If the Senate should decide to reject the report, I would cheerfully welcome the decision of the Senate to send some Senator with the great ability of my colleague, who is very conversant with sugar, to the conference to renew the battle. That will be all right with me.

I say, as one conferee, that this is the best we could obtain. If some other Senator can do better, I should be willing to see him try.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. BENNETT. When we picked up the bill which the House sent to us, H.R. 12311, amended it, and sent it to conference, we made it impossible, practically, to get a sugar bill this year, because the House will have to give us a new bill before we could act.

The House conferees made it perfectly clear to us that from their point of view it was impossible to get a sugar bill even if we returned in August because the chairman of the House conferees said, "I have been elected, but my colleagues have not been, and I am sure I cannot get a quorum of my committee together in August."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, when we have had situations such as this, which involve matters of national policy, occur in election years, in the war years Members of Congress did not plead that they had to return to their districts to be elected. Members of Congress recognized that the best place for them was on the floor of either the House or the Senate. They did not plead that they had to go to their home districts to be elected.

This is a question which involves national policy. The Congress should be in session in August to settle it. This is where the Members ought to be, if they wish to be reelected.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah argued in the conference for the right of the Committee on Finance to consider sugar legislation in August.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Perhaps the Senator remembers that a short time ago we had before us an amendment to require congressional approval of expenditures running into $4 billion a year for foreign aid, public works projects, to learn where the money was going, and one of our colleagues said, "If we are going to look into where all this money is going, we had better get somebody else to look into it, because Senators will not have time to hold hearings to see what is happening to the money."

In this instance Members of the House are saying that they have acted on this measure and that they must return to their home districts to campaign for election. There will be a great difficulty in obtaining a quorum of the House committee.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President——

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. By unanimous consent I should like to propound, if I may, a question to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, because if I understood correctly his analysis of the proposed legislation, it would be a fair and accurate statement to say that if we here and now approve this conference report, we would be delaying for 1 year any opportunity to expand the domestic production of sugar in this country. Is that the interpretation of the senior Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not think there is any doubt about it because, as I said, under the law as it now stands—and that part of it is not affected—the determination is made in December for a whole calendar year, and then the quotas are fixed and allotted to the countries and to the domestic producers as described in the act.

After the distribution is made, we certainly cannot take the quotas away. Particularly would it be hard on those who produce sugarcane, because sugarcane is a crop that grows from stubble. In many countries, one planting yields as many as four, five, or six crops. If this bill is passed, we shall only get deeper and deeper into foreign relations problems, as pointed out by my good friend from Vermont. We will simply make bad matters worse. That is what will happen.

Mr. MUNDT. Even if it were possible to do it legally, I think the Senator would agree that it would be bad foreign policy to try to take it away after they have been allocated a certain production for a year.

Mr. ELLENDER. I frankly have not had an opportunity to study in detail the hearings that the House held, but I believe it is clear that the House bill would give more and more of our sugar market to the countries to the south of us, particularly Mexico, Costa Rica, and Peru, by increasing their quotas. Lively lobbyists attempt to increase the quotas to those various countries.

We do not propose to change the time at which the quotas will be allocated. It is December; the determination will be made then. The quota as determined at that time will be distributed among the various countries. If the President decides to exclude Cuba, the quota of Cuba will be parceled out among other countries.

Under the compromise, such action would mean that the quotas of Mexico and certain other countries to the south of us would be increased.

I wish to make this point also. As I said last night, let us not forget that Castro may fade out, if somebody takes a shot at him, or he is deposed. We must not forget also that 42 percent of the sugar that is now produced in Cuba is American controlled and American owned.

Mr. BENNETT. The Senator from Utah recognizes that.

Mr. ELLENDER. I know that efforts would be made to restore the full quota to Cuba if and when Castro were removed from the picture, and the moment we do so, we shall have not only one country to the south of us irate, but we may have as many as a dozen, which would make conditions worse.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I should like to make the point that one of the victories, if we can call it that, for the Senate, and one of the points on which the House receded, was that the House struck the word "allocated" from the bill and put in its place the word "purchase." Within the limits of the bill the conference thought that was the best thing it could do, to make clear to those from whom the President secured sugar under the bill that they were not getting an allocation. The President was making a one-time purchase. I realize that one may say, "They will expect it anyway." But so far as the language of the law is concerned, the word "allocate" is not in it.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. I think what the Senator says is exactly correct. But the point being made by the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, as I understand, is not related to the point to which the Senator from Utah refers, but to the fact that by extending the determination date until April 1, and virtually extending the determination date for another crop year in sugar, it is denying any opportunity for domestic sugar producers to get increased allocations for an extra year.

Mr. BENNETT. Let us assume the Senator is right. What choice did the conference have?

Mr. MUNDT. The conferees could stick with the Senate date.

Mr. BENNETT. The House conferees made it perfectly plain to us that if we had done so, they were not in a position to act in August. If the Senate would like to send the bill back to the House, and the House can be persuaded that it must act in August, no one would be more pleased than the Senator from Utah.

Mr. MUNDT. The Senator from South Dakota would have voted for that.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, there is only one contribution I can make. I happened to be on the floor of the House when the report of the conference reached the House. I heard the statement of the managers on the part of the House read. I heard the argument and the report of the able chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, Mr. COOLEY. I heard very clear reference, more than once, to the fact that only one-fourth year was involved in this proposal. There is no doubt about it.

I tried to find the statement of the managers on the part of the House, and I discovered it was not sent over here. I sent for it. I do not know whether we can get it or not. I do not know whether they are still operating. But I am completely sure, because I listened to the report, that the Senator from Louisiana is stating the situation exactly as it was reported and exactly as it was acted upon and approved, and will be found not once, but several times, in the report of the managers.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. It seems to me that if the Senate wishes to be fair with its conferees, it should keep in mind that we were in conference on the Anderson amendments. I am one of those who voted for the Anderson amendments, but some of those who did not want the Anderson amendments and voted against them are some of those who criticized us most vehemently because we did not get something that was not in the Anderson amendments.

The Morse amendment would have done the bare minimum the Senate sought to do by unanimous vote. I voted for the Morse amendment. It would not have assigned any additional quota to anyone. It would reduce the quota, and we would simply run short of sugar until we decided what we wanted to do. That was the Morse proposal. That was the previous Bennett proposal. It was proposed that we reduce our sugar stocks in this country until we decide what we shall do about it.

We would not run out in the next 30 days, but be that as it may, that proposal was defeated. We were not in conference on that amendment. We were in conference on the Anderson amendments. We got most of what was in the Anderson amendments. It is true that I was one who made a speech here on the floor to the effect that I would like to see this entire procedure discretionary. We remained in conference for 2 hours fighting with the House members.

I should like to have seen the whole procedure left to the discretion of the President. However, when the point is made that when some foreign nations which sell sugar to the United States will become irritated if we buy less from them, the point is just as valid should the President make the decision to give it to them, as it is that the House Agriculture Committee should make that decision.

Of course, once we start buying from one of these countries and then stop, the country will not like it. Neither will Castro like it if the President decides to reduce his quota.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield to the Senator from Florida, who, I believe, has received the papers he has been waiting for.

Mr. HOLLAND. I have just received the original statement of the managers on the part of the House. I will not take the time to read it all, but I will read the part to which I referred in substance a moment ago:

> It is the intention of the conferees that in establishing quotas for the period January 1, 1961, through March 31, 1961, the Secretary of Agriculture will establish a quota for each area or country of one-fourth of the quota which each country or area would have received had the act been extended in its present form for 1 calendar year.

That bears out the statement of the able chairman of the conferees on the part of the House and the able ranking majority member of the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. At this late hour I do not wish to say very much, but I do wish to point out that the domestic interests in this entire proceeding have been woefully neglected.

The bill that came to us from the House arrived here at 6 minutes after 12 on July 1, with the House of Representatives taking the position that we should accept it.

The question is not whether the House has disregarded the rights of the Senate. The House has disregarded the rights of a great segment of the American people, of localities which have sugar beet acreage, and of many other localities which are concerned in this matter. Those producers are coming to their courthouses, to see their agricultural officials, and are asking for beet acreage, but are not getting it. Congress has failed them in that regard.

I realize that our conferees had a most difficult time. I am not censuring them at all. Perhaps the conference report should be adopted. I do not know. I do believe that we should let all the world—including every country which hopes to get anything extra out of this measure—know that we reserve the right to terminate it, to change it, or to take away its benefits in any way Congress chooses.

Individual Senators are not to blame. After having been treated by the House the way we were, the leadership of the Senate should have sent the bill to committee, and on next Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday the Senate could have considered the proposed legislation, and could have worked its will on it next week.

I merely wish the RECORD to show that in my opinion the domestic interests, the people who pay the taxes, the people who have a claim on the sugar consumers of this country, have been totally neglected in this proceeding because of the manner in which the bill was sent to the Senate and because of the mad rush to get out of here last night.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I propose to speak very briefly in summarizing my position with regard to the issue before us tonight, and to state why I shall oppose the conference report. Before I start my brief speech, I should like to ask for the yeas and nays on the conference report.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] have pointed out the most important issue in this whole complex problem which confronts us tonight when they indicated that we have before us an issue of foreign policy.

The subject matter before us tonight on the floor of the Senate involves a matter of foreign policy primarily. We would not have this issue before us on this emergency basis tonight if it were not that a Communist tyrant—and Castro is a Communist, whether he belongs to the party he follows or not—in Cuba. He is a Communist tyrant in Cuba who is both confiscating American property in Cuba and depreciating the value of that which he is not confiscating in many instances by the imposition of an intervenor in charge of that property over and above the administrative rights of its true owner.

He has created a very serious foreign-policy situation in the Caribbean. It is a matter of concern to the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, and has been for some months. We have been briefed on it again and again by the State Department. Therefore, I find it of great interest to be told tonight what the State Department's position is with respect to the conference report before us. Frankly, the best statement we can get is that somebody in the State Department said they can "live with it."

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] settled that point very clearly when he said they will always tell us that they can live with it when they see the inevitable coming.

What has been needed is to get this matter before the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate and the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House in order to discuss its implications from the standpoint of foreign policy, instead of making a decision on foreign policy on the basis of the Sugar Act, an act which has come to us from the House and on which there has not been 1 hour of hearings, certainly not with reference to the factors of American foreign policy. I am completely at a loss to understand how we can run these risks.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK] put his finger on another very important facet of this problem when he brought out the fact that the mandatory provisions of the House impose upon us, by the conference report, the transfer of certain quotas of sugar from Cuba to Trujillo, of the Dominican Republic, a country headed by another tyrant, who in this case is a Fascist tyrant, and is one of the worst tyrants in all of Latin America. Giving this support to that tyrant is not going to help foreign relations with our friends in Latin America.

It has been said, "Oh, we have reason to believe that perhaps Trujillo will go out of power, and some other administration will come into power in the Dominican Republic." Mr. President, we are not going to speed the going out of power of this tyrant by strengthening his economic position. We are not going to speed Trujillo's going out of power by giving him the kind of weapon that we propose to give to him by the adoption of the conference report. He would be stronger than before the Sugar Act extension was passed.

Earlier this evening—many of the Senators who are here were not present at that time, although I see the Senator from Vermont is here, and he will bear out what I said before and what I now summarize—I informed the Senator that the Subcommittee on Latin America of the Committee on Foreign Relations has been conducting a study for the Senate. Incidentally, the Senate appropriated over $100,000 for the study which took more than a year and a half covering Latin American countries. Some of us have traveled in many of the countries in Latin America, and have held confidential conferences with heads of states and with heads of departments with whom the heads of states asked us to confer.

I betray no confidence when I say that in my own study last fall in Latin America I talked at some length with the President of Brazil, the President of Venezuela, and the President of Colombia in regard to this matter, and listened to them protest against our sugar policies toward Brazil, Venezuela, and Colombia.

How do Senators think the people of these countries are going to feel about this type of an extension of the Sugar Act when our sugar policy is one of the causes of misunderstanding in Latin America toward the United States?

We proceed today with an act which continues to leave many of these countries out of the picture. We are doing nothing in this act which will have any effect in changing the attitude in Brazil, Venezuela, and Colombia; and we can add Ecuador, El Salvador, and Guatemala. Do not forget that Guatemala, as I said earlier in the evening, is one of the strongest anti-Castro countries in Latin America. We should do something to try to improve the situation in Guatemala. In my judgment, what we are doing here today can be taken as a slap at her face.

Mr. President, I am at a loss to understand why we should adopt these mandatory provisions in the Sugar Act, when we know that foreign relations problems confront us in such Latin American countries as Brazil, Colombia, Venezuela, Guatemala, Ecuador, and El Salvador.

I simply make the plea that we not make this mistake, because I am satisfied that the mandatory provisions can be misinterpreted all over Latin America.

We are proceeding to increase the allotment for Formosa. Do we really believe that action will make the people of Latin America happy? They will say, "We think you are already discriminating against us in regard to sugar." They will ask, "Why are you increasing the allotment of the Netherlands? We are at your front door. We are your neighbors. We want to help you. We want to strengthen the cause of freedom in Latin America. We need your help, and not this kind of treatment. We have been asking you to negotiate with us in our behalf in regard to sugar. But you are passing a Sugar Act which, in effect, provide"—as has been brought out in the debate already, but I think it needs to be restated—"that you will give Haiti, Panama, the Netherlands, and Nationalist China an increase in the amount of sugar."

This will be resented by the countries of Latin America which have been pleading with us to negotiate with them in regard to sugar.

We have said to Brazil, "You will have to diversify." We have pointed out to Brazil, in our discussions with her representatives, when they have needed to negotiate loans, that she is a one-product country—a coffee-producing country. Brazil has said, "We have some sugar. We would like to sell some of it to you."

In this measure we have an opportunity, in my judgment, to give the President what he needs—and I shall come to that point next—without, in effect, passing a Sugar Act on which hearings have not been held; without any hearings as to its foreign policy relations. What do we do? We say, in effect, to Brazil, "We will not negotiate with you on that question now, but we are increasing the sugar allotments to other countries." That will be the effect. We can call it a purchase, if we wish. The fact is that it is a mandatory purchase, so far as Brazil is concerned. Those countries will get consideration whether it is called a purchase or an allocation.

Let us not forget that where the Dominican Republic comes into the picture is in section (b), the mandatory provision about full duty nations having full duties under the act, except the five nations mentioned in section (b).

What I think we should do is to recognize that this issue was created by a foreign policy crisis in Cuba; that the President of the United States ought to have the power in order to settle the sugar issue in relation to Cuba, in our national interest; and that we ought to proceed as rapidly as we can to come to grips with the Sugar Act problem.

Probably we cannot pass a Sugar Act in August 1960. However, that does not mean that we are justified in extending the act, as it is being extended in this conference report today, until April 1, 1961. I quite agree with the Senator from Texas [Mr. YARBOROUGH] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] that the April 1 date can be included, if we wish; but the effect will be that it will cover the crop period for 1961.

I can hear the argument now: "Do not put us in a vacuum, gentlemen." Senators know the kind of argument they will hear next spring. We will have given these countries cause to believe, really, that they could go ahead and plant the 1961 crops, and they have done so. Now we shall cause much ill feeling if we say we are not going ahead with the program, at least through the year 1961.

I am satisfied, as a practical matter, that what we are doing today is debating a Sugar Act which will continue in effect at least through 1961.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HRUSKA], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ALLOTT], and perhaps other Senators, who have been giving attention to the domestic problem, have a point we cannot ignore. What do we believe the effect of the conference report will be on this very difficult issue? Many Members of the Senate are confronted with a domestic producer problem in this country, and the fact is that this act does not protect their interests. A sugar act ought to protect them. That is why hearings ought to be held on the Sugar Act.

I speak most respectfully to the House, but I also speak in self-defense. I do not like the feeling of a legislative blackjack on my head. I do not like to be beaten, parliamentarily, into submission, particularly when I know that the proposal, with which the other body may be very happy, is not in the best interests of my country. I am satisfied of that. I am satisfied that we ought to pay attention to the advice given to members of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is interesting to observe how many of them have been talking on this subject. It is interesting to note how many of them voted for the Morse amendment some hours ago. We have tried to live with this problem . We, in the Committee on Foreign Relations, have been briefed by the State Department.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a brief statement?

Mr. MORSE. I shall yield in just a moment.

I remember the last briefing was when Assistant Secretary of State Rubottom, in charge of Latin American Affairs, Ambassador Bonsal, and an economic adviser spent a whole afternoon with the committee discussing the problem of Cuba. The sugar problem played a very important part in the discussion. It was at that meeting that we first got the word from the administration that they believed if things worsened in Cuba they would ask for the very authority for the President which I had provided in my amendment earlier this evening. The defeat of the amendment was, I believe, a great mistake, because it meant that our conferees went to the House in a weakened bargaining position. All that really was left, all that really counted, was to bargin over "shall" or "may."

That was the position in which we put our conferees. I do not criticize them. We were not fair to our conferees. We did not give them a very broad bracket or framework in which to negotiate with the House. It became quite a major issue as to whether the language was to be permissive, as proposed, or mandatory, as the House insisted on. That was not being fair to our conferees. I think we weakened them when we sent them to the House with the Anderson amendment rather than the Morse amendment.

I think we are making a serious foreign policy blunder tonight. We ought to reject the conference report, send it back to the House, and try to have the House understand that our plea to them is not on the basis of sugar, but that sugar is only an instrumentality which we have to use in connection with a solution of the foreign policy crisis which has been created by Castro, in Cuba. We should try to persuade the House that statesmanship calls for us to place in the hands of the Chief Executive, who after all, in time of crisis, is the man who has to take ultimate control, the weapon which he needs most of all. It seems to me that the best weapon we can provide is to let him exercise his discretion and his judgment as to what is best for our international interests in regard to the handling of the Cuban situation.

The Senator from Utah has already pointed out that that does not mean we will fall short in any sugar supply. The Commodity Credit Corporation can buy sugar as it may be needed in order to meet a deficiency. I think that is the approach we should make to this problem. We ought to reject the conference report. I think it is our duty to reject it. I think we owe it to the President to reject it. I think we owe it to our country. I think we owe it to our domestic sugar producers, to be fair to them. Therefore, I shall vote against the conference report.

I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The Senator from Oregon stated that he was pleased to note the uniformity of the votes cast by the members of the Foreign Relations Committee in favor of the Morse amendment. I voted in favor of the Morse amendment because I believed that the Senator from Oregon described with substantial accuracy the impression made upon the members of the Foreign Relations Committee in regard to the course our Government should follow in connection with this subject. The recitation made by the Senator from Oregon in support of his plea that his amendment be adopted was corroborated by the testimony offered before our committee, as I can recall.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President——

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I am ready to yield the floor, and to permit the Senator from Iowa to take the floor in his own right.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MUSKIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I wish to commend the Senator from Oregon for his statement. In my judgment he was completely accurate when he pointed out that the urgency of this particular measure arises, not as a result of the economic situation, but as a result of our international relationships and foreign policy. That is basically and fundamentally the reason why we are now considering this matter, and why we engaged in debate on yesterday about this sugar situation, and why the issues are so acute. The urgency of this issue is generated primarily by an international situation which is primarily a foreign-policy matter. If it were primarily an economic matter, and if it involved, primarily, economics and trade, probably there would not be the necessity for our taking the proposed action.

So I commend the Senator from Oregon for pointing out so clearly that this is a matter of foreign policy, and almost foreign policy alone, although of course economic factors are involved in it.

The Senator from Oregon said something about the reports we have had here on the floor about hearings by the House committee. A moment ago I talked to a Member of the House who was then in this Chamber; and he told me that, although he is not a member of the House committee, he had word from two members of the House committee that no hearings at all were held on this bill in the House committee; that apparently the bill was prepared the night before it was voted to be reported to the House; and that the only meeting the committee held on the bill was one to mark up the bill.

Mr. MORSE. I do not know what happened in the House committee; but I know that the Senate committee has not held hearings on the bill.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa permit me to make a correction, following his statement?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I did not recite that as a fact; I merely repeated what a Member of the House told me was accurate information.

Mr. BENNETT. I can inform the Senator from Iowa that the only hearings which were held were for the purpose of hearing two members of the executive branch—the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Agriculture. Before the bill was written up, the committee heard those two gentlemen.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I think the House Member did say that the bill was written up one evening, and that the next day there was some consultation with the State Department, or something of that sort. But, in other words, there were no hearings—so far as my information goes—in the committee of the other body on this bill.

Mr. BENNETT. I am sure there is a record of a formal hearing with the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. At any rate, my understanding of the information I had was that there was consultation which might be called a hearing, but it was consultation with a representative of the State Department, and perhaps with a representative of the Department of Commerce, on the day when the bill was in the House committee and on the day when the bill was brought out of the committee and was reported to the House.

But we cannot overemphasize what the Senator from Oregon already has emphasized; namely, that this is a matter of foreign policy; and in these times of tension, I believe it to be highly essential that the Chief Executive be given discretionary power to handle this matter in accordance with the best interests of the foreign policy of the United States, and as a powerful weapon to be used in advancing the cause of freedom in this hemisphere, and as a means of combating the subversion which, at least in one area, is creeping into this hemisphere in an alarming degree.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator very much, indeed.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from Iowa about the clear-cut case the Senator from Oregon has made in regard to the foreign policy aspects of this matter. I believe they are most important. He did well to point out the surprising degree of unanimity of opinion among the members of the Foreign Relations Committee—as shown by the votes cast yesterday and today—in regard to this matter.

I say that the next aspect to be considered is the economic problem and the question of the effect on the American market. In this respect, we find that the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry—as did the members of the Foreign Relations Committee—voted in opposition to this measure. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and a number of the other members of that committee have been leaders in this debate, and have stressed the fact that we must take away from Castro this economic advantage, which he is receiving now.

We are asking that the President be allowed to use this means to obtain the maximum benefits for our country.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. BUSH. The Senator from Oregon has made a very persuasive argument. However, if the Senate rejects the conference report—as the Senator from Oregon recommends—where will that leave us?

Mr. MORSE. We cannot justify the adoption of a report if we believe it will do our country great injury. I am convinced it will do just that, as regards our Nation's relationships with Latin America; I am convinced of that, as a result of the conferences I have had about this matter during the last year.

If the Senator rejects the conference report, we shall have a chance to remain here and to battle out the problem.

I would have liked to have the Senate dispose of this problem before now, too. We had an opportunity to do so a week ago, but we did not do it.

I do not think we should walk out on our responsibilities in connection with the foreign policy of our country, merely because the political conventions are approaching. I believe this issue is causing a great crisis in the Caribbean.

So I believe we should stay here until we settle this matter.

Mr. BUSH. Right now? This week?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, right now.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, about 2 o'clock this morning I tried to state as precisely as I could my position on this issue.

I rise now only to explain the vote I shall cast on the question of agreeing to the conference report.

I believe there is a slight tendency—and I, for one, pointed out months ago that this would happen—to permit international considerations—in this instance, in relationship to the Sugar Act—to outweigh the domestic considerations. Certainly at this time I cannot overlook the domestic considerations.

I say to my good friends the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Utah, I do not detract from what they did. I do not think any Member of the Senate who would have been sent there to do the job they had to do tonight could have come out with better results than they did. But I cannot help coming to the conclusion that, from an international standpoint, and also from the standpoint of our own sugar beet people in this country, I must vote against the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON], the Senators from Nevada [Mr. BIBLE and Mr. CANNON], the Senators from Virginia [Mr. BYRD and Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from Alaska [Mr. GRUENING], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senators from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR and Mr. MONRONEY], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE] are absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Sentors from Wyoming [Mr. MCGEE and Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SYMINGTON] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] is absent because of illness.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senators from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senators from Nevada [Mr. BIBLE and Mr. CANNON], the Senators from Virginia [Mr. BYRD and Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senators from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR and Mr. MONRONEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE], the Senators from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS and Mr. SYMINGTON], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] would each vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Washington would vote "yea," and the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "nay."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BEALL], the Senators from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES and Mr. COTTON], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BUTLER], the Senators from North Dakota [Mr. BRUNSDALE and Mr. YOUNG], the Senators from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON and Mr. SCHOEPPEL], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER], the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] are necessarily absent.

If present and voting the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER] would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 24, as follows:

[No. 279]

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE TWO HOUSES ON JULY 3, TO AUGUST 8, AND AUGUST 15, 1960

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask the Presiding Officer to lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate Concurrent Resolution 112.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 112) providing for an adjournment of the two Houses from July 2, 1960, to August 8, 1960, which were, to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That when the two Houses shall adjourn on Sunday, July 3, 1960, the Senate shall stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Monday, August 8, 1960, and the House of Representatives shall stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Monday, August 15, 1960.

Amend the title to read: "Concurrent resolution providing for the adjournment of the Senate from July 3, 1960, to August 8, 1960, and the adjournment of the House from July 3, 1960, to August 15, 1960."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

AUTHORIZATION TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I call up House concurrent resolution 712, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (H. Con. Res. 712), as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That notwithstanding the adjournment of the two Houses until August the 8th and 15th, 1960, the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate be, and they are hereby, authorized to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and found truly enrolled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

STATUS QUO OF NOMINATIONS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I submit a resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That notwithstanding the adjournment of the Senate under Senate Concurrent Resolution 112, as amended, and the provisions of rule XXXVIII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the status quo of nominations now pending and not finally acted upon at the time of taking such adjournment shall be preserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 351) was agreed to.

AUTHORITY TO MAKE APPOINTMENTS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 352) as follows:

Resolved, That notwithstanding the adjournment of the two Houses pursuant to Senate Concurrent Resolution 112, the President of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to make appointments to commissions or committees authorized by law, by concurrent action of the two Houses, or by order of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

AUTHORITY TO RECEIVE MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I present an order, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That, notwithstanding the adjournment of the two Houses under Senate Concurrent Resolution 112, the Secretary be, and he is hereby, authorized to receive messages from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the order?

There being no objection, the order was agreed to.

AUTHORIZATION FOR INSERTIONS IN RECORD FOLLOWING ADJOURNMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators may be permitted to make insertions in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD following adjournment of Congres until the last edition authorized by the Joint Committee on Printing is published; but this order shall not apply to any subject matter which may have occurred or any speech delivered subsequent to the adjournment of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJUSTMENT OF RATES OF BASIC COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—INDEFINITE POSTPONEMENT OF BILL

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 3672) to adjust the rates of basic compensation of certain officers and employees of the Federal Government, and for other purposes, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL SPONSORS OF AMENDMENT TO H.R. 12580

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the names of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. HART], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCCARTHY], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. MUSKIE] be added as cosponsors to my amendment No. 6–24–60—N to H.R. 12580 when it is next printed.

LOCK AND DAM NO. 10, KENTUCKY RIVER, MADISON COUNTY, KY.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1894, Senate bill 3324.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Army to convey part of lock and dam No. 10, Kentucky River, Madison County, Ky., to the Pioneer National Monument Association for use as a part of a historic site.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

NATO SCIENCE PROGRAM: INVESTMENT IN LEADERSHIP

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point two documents concerning the NATO science program.

The Scientific and Technical Committee of the NATO Parliamentarians' Conference, of which I have the honor to be Chairman, last fall issued a series of recommendations in a report entitled "NATO Science Program—Investment in Leadership." Unanimously approved last November by the 15 member NATO Parliamentarians' Conference, and forwarded to member governments and the NATO Council for study and action, these recommendations are of direct interest to the Congress.

Accompanying this report is the address entitled "Atlantic Community Space Program" which I made in presenting our committee recommendations to the NATO parliamentarians.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATO SCIENCE PROGRAM: INVESTMENT IN LEADERSHIP

(Report of the Scientific and Technical Committee, chairman, Senator HENRY M. JACKSON)

INTRODUCTION

The second Parliamentarians' Conference held in November 1956 established a special committee on scientific and technical personnel to examine the problems of training and using effectively the scientific talents of the NATO Community. Since that time, the members of the Scientific and Technical Committee have given close attention to these problems, focusing particularly on progress being made in implementing recommendations of the third and fourth Parliamentarians' Conferences.

The committee members have been greatly assisted by talks and correspondence with officials of NATO, OEEC, and SHAPE. They have also received most helpful counsel from the executive agencies of their own countries and private citizens. They have read with interest the documentation of the Subcommittee on Scientific and Technical Cooperation of the Atlantic Congress (London, June 5–10, 1959).

Members of the Parliamentarians Scientific and Technical Committee for 1958–59 are:

Belgium: Baron Pierre Nothomb.
Canada: Dr. J. W. Kucherepa.
Denmark: Mr. A. G. Normann.
France: Senator G. Portmann.
Germany: Dr. G. Kliesing.
Greece: Mr. Panos Yokas.
Iceland: Mr. B. Grondal.
Italy: Senator G. Messeri.
Luxembourg.
The Netherlands: Mr. C. L. Patijn.
Norway: Mr. O. Watnebryn.
Portugal: Mr. Celheiros Lopes.
Turkey: Mr. A. Tokus.
United Kingdom: the Lord Ogmore.
United States: Congressman R. J. CORBETT.

The chairman wishes to express his special thanks to his committee colleagues for their advice and support in the preparation of this draft report, and to acknowledge the able assistance of the executive secretary and staff of the conference.

THE BROADENING EFFORT IN SCIENCE

Ten years ago—under the pressures of an unprecedented threat—the nations of the Atlantic Community joined together in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. In 1949, the challenge which produced NATO was first and foremost military in character. And NATO, as a military alliance, has clearly proved its worth in the decade that followed.

Today, the threat which spurred the creation of NATO has by no means diminished. But the nature of the challenge has changed and deepened to encompass political, scientific, social, and economic factors.

Fortunately, NATO has changed with the challenge. At the end of its first decade, NATO is still a major deterrent to war. But it stands also as a symbol of international cooperation in many other fields.

This cooperation—in political, economic, and scientific areas—does more than produce guns, planes, and missiles. Over the years these joint endeavors have steadily strengthened the foundations of the Atlantic Community through increased understanding, economic growth, and political progress.

Cooperative scientific effort is the most recent addition to the NATO program.

Over the past 3 years, solid progress has been made in improving the state of Western science. We have made a good start, but we must recognize that it is only a start.

Member states of NATO have broadened the scope and accelerated the pace of scientific activity. With few exceptions, one country after another has advanced. In many countries, commissions of inquiry have been studying the educational systems and the organizations for research. On the basis of their reports, new and imaginative policies have been inaugurated.

Of course, the energy with which national corrective programs are being pursued varies considerably from country to country. Hopefully, the examples of the more vigorous countries will be increasingly contagious. In many cases international activities are stimulating useful action at national and regional levels.

Also, in these last 3 years, solid progress has been made toward a NATO science program. A science adviser and a representative science advisory committee of 15 members now assist the NATO Council in developing the program.

In this effort the NATO Council has respected two key principles set forth in the 1957 Parliamentarians' Conference report:

NATO activities should be catalytic in nature. That is, they should aim at initiating chain reactions which extend over the broadest scientific and technological front.

The resources available to NATO should primarily be used to support and broaden the work of existing schools, research centers, and agencies in this field, rather than to create wholly new institutions.

1. The NATO science fellowship program

Based on the recommendation of the 1957 NATO Parliamentarians' Conference and drawing its principal inspiration from that recommendation, the NATO science fellowship program is now in operation for its first year.

Its aim is to stimulate the international exchange of postgraduate and postdoctoral students of the pure and applied sciences between member countries and thereby to increase the scientific strength of the NATO alliance.

The program cost $1 million for the first year; $1.75 million for the second. Funds are distributed to member countries on the basis of population, with no nation receiving more than 15 percent of the total fellowship funds, and with the understanding that recipients of fellowships are, in general, to study abroad.

More than 150 fellows have been selected and most of them have started their studies for the academic year 1959–60.

The most popular subjects to be studied have been biology, chemistry, engineering, and mathematics.

There has been a great demand for the fellowships. In most countries qualified applicants far outnumbered the available grants. For example, in the United States, there were 91 applicants for 21 fellowships. All those offered the fellowships accepted—a truly exceptional record.

A glance at national experience in administering the program shows diversity in the pattern of application, reflecting current differences in national needs.

For example, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Netherlands, Norway, and the United States prefer to give their NATO Science Fellowships to postdoctorates. Consequently, these countries tend to allow higher and more individually adapted grants, with family allowances and a certain freedom in many cases to choose rather short periods of study. On the other hand, the United Kingdom and Turkey lay the main emphasis on predoctorates and like the students to go abroad for more than 1 year. Some countries offer both predoctorate and postdoctorate grants.

Fellowship programs are managed in one of three general ways: By government offices (France, Greece, Italy); by well-established organizations for the distribution of fellowships (United States, United Kingdom, Canada, the Netherlands); by ad hoc committees of scientists (Belgium, Denmark, Norway).

Meetings of national representatives convened by the NATO Science Adviser provide for interchange of information on fellowship policies and for development of certain common standards throughout the NATO area.

2. The NATO advanced study institute program

Again, drawing its inspiration from the recommendations of the 1957 NATO Parliamentarians' Conference, the NATO program for support of scientific study institutes for advance or special topics, is now in operation for its first year. Already, it has tripled the number of such institutes from the original two at Les Houches and Varenna to six held this last summer.

The program is financed to the extent of $300,000 for the first 2 years. About $100,000 has been committed for the first year; the program can be expanded to twice this level in the second year.

During the first year, grants have been made to advanced study institutes at the University of Naples, Italy (field theory); Varenna Summer School in Italy (physical sciences); Summer Institute at Les Houches, France (theoretical physics); advanced summer program at Kjeller, Norway (heat transfer problems); and finally the Corfu Institute in Greece (solid state physics).

The program is receiving widespread recognition, as evidenced by the number of additional requests for next year's grants.

3. Program of research grants for cooperative research activities

In 1957 the Parliamentarians' Conference recommended that NATO support important scientific training and research projects which particularly lend themselves to international action. This June, the NATO Council approved a program of research grants for cooperative scientific research activities.

The program is expected to go into effect about January 1, 1960; $1 million will be available for research grants to be awarded at the rate at which appropriate requests are filed. A five-man review committee will pass judgment on all projects, and the NATO Council itself will review the program when one-half the available sum has been committed.

4. Cooperative research programs under NATO sponsorship

In 1958 the NATO Parliamentarians recommended that the NATO Council give special attention to the desirability of supporting cooperative programs in one or more of three urgent fields which would particularly benefit from the joint action of NATO members—oceanography, materials, and upper atmosphere and space.

This year, NATO has made progress toward a cooperative program in two of these fields: oceanography and materials. In the third field, upper atmosphere and space, emphasis has been given to bilateral rather than to NATO-wide projects.

(a) Oceanographic Research

The NATO Council has approved NATO support for cooperation in oceanographic research, particularly in the North Atlantic and the Mediterranean, and it authorized the formation of a subcommittee of the Science Committee of the NATO Council in the Field of Oceanographic Research. The subcommittee held its first meeting in New York in September. Plans for the work of the subcommittee are still in a formative stage.

Also, this year the NATO Council established the SACLANT Antisubmarine Research Center at La Spezia. The laboratory is now being staffed and equipped and it is expected that it will cooperate to the fullest with the general oceanographic research program. The center itself will devote from one-third to one-half of its energies to basic oceanographic research.

(b) Materials Research

The Office of the NATO Science Adviser has agreed with the Advisory Group for Aeronautical Research and Development (AGARD) to sponsor an international symposium on the status of materials research during the summer of 1960. The survey will cover both pure and applied aspects of the field.

In late 1958, the NATO Defense Research Directors advocated that materials research be given a high priority for support by NATO nations. In September 1959, a check by the Directors indicated substantial progress toward this goal.

(c) Upper Atmosphere and Space

The United States has offered to send up instruments for any NATO country desiring to launch a space research program. Meanwhile, NATO governments and scientists have been urged by the NATO Council to cooperate with each other, and particularly with the United States, in upper atmosphere and space research. Several such bilateral cooperative programs are in the process of being arranged.

5. Training center for experimental aerodynamics, Brussels

The Parliamentarians' Conference has continually been impressed with the outstanding success of the training center at Brussels. This year, the NATO nations have strengthened the center by agreeing to a method for its joint financing and cooperative use. It will be financed for the next 2 years on a studentship basis; each nation will pay a sum in proportion to the number of students sent to the center. Belgium, as the host country, will finance half the cost of the laboratory.

6. NATO Defense Missile Training Center

The Parliamentarians' Conference in 1957 recommended the establishment of a NATO Missile Center with the primary function of training NATO's defensive missile units. Since then, it has become increasingly clear that such a center would also be useful for the education of civilian and scientific personnel.

Following the 1957 recommendation, SHAPE solicited suggestions from the various NATO nations as to the possibility of utilizing national land areas as a base for a NATO Defense Missile Training Center and range facility. Four nations offered national land areas for consideration in the feasibility studies—Portugal, Italy, Greece, and Turkey. SHAPE and AGARD have completed detailed engineering surveys of these potential training areas, and SHAPE is now evaluating the relative merits of the four areas.

Once a decision is reached, recommendations as to the best location must go before the NATO standing group.

7. Annual review of scientific and technical education and manpower

In 1957 the Parliamentarians' Conference proposed annual reports from member countries, to provide a stocktaking on the adequacy of science education facilities. Now, with the full concurrence of the NATO Council, the OEEC conducts annual reviews of country policies in the training of scientific and technical personnel. All the OEEC and associated countries will have been examined by February 1960.

The review is carried on in collaboration with the appropriate educational authorities in member countries. No uniform set of questions is used, each country being asked questions relevant to its special condition and need. By tactfully making nations aware of shortcomings in their programs, and by helping countries benefit from the experience of others, the review procedure is proving its worth.

At the same time, OEEC is carrying on a series of cooperative projects to stimulate improvement in the teaching and study of science, particularly in secondary schools.

8. Special science mission to OEEC countries

The NATO Parliamentarians' Conference has continually emphasized that international science activity should assist and stimulate stronger national science programs.

In this connection, OEEC this year initiated a special mission to OEEC countries by Dr. Wilgress (until recently Canadian Ambassador to OEEC and NATO). The purpose of the visits is to encourage an increase in scientific resources and the consciousness of scientific needs throughout the Atlantic Community.

In each country, Dr. Wilgress has talked to the heads of scientific organizations about their difficulties and accomplishments, as well as to senior ministers with regard to political support for science.

Briefly stated, Dr. Wilgress has asked these questions:

(a) Is there a recognition in your country of the importance of science with regard to future well being and security of the people?

(b) If so, have you a science policy which is integrated with national policy generally?

(c) Are your scientific resources sufficient for future scientific needs in case of increasing economic competition from the East?

Dr. Wilgress' visits and his thoughtful reports are already resulting in many constructive changes and reforms.

9. Study on means for increasing the effectiveness of Western science

In 1958 the NATO Parliamentarians' Conference recommended that the Science Committee formulate an integrated and long-range policy for scientific research and development in the NATO area. As the NATO Council gets further into the tasks of scientific cooperation, the need increases for such a basic policy; lacking it, there is danger that efforts will be dissipated on too many projects and on less critical ones.

This year the NATO Council has authorized a special study of ways to improve the effectiveness of Western science. Dr. Louis Armand, formerly Director of Euratom, is chairman of the study group. The program will extend into the winter, and will involve from 5 to 10 of the oustanding scientists in the Atlantic Community, backed by consultants and staff from all fields.

The Armand group should be of great assistance to the Science Committee in formulating a long-range NATO policy to guide the NATO scientific effort.

THE CONTINUING TASK

Each member of the NATO Parliamentarians' Conference can feel proud that so many of our recommendations have been favorably acted upon by the NATO Council and by member governments.

Of course, no international agency can assume the primary responsibility for intensifying scientific activity in the Atlantic Community; that must be accepted by national governments.

At this stage, each country should have a national science policy, establishing goals and defining priorities.

Such national policies will not only strengthen the defense and speed the progress of the countries involved, they will also help indicate how the NATO science program can best complement national scientific efforts.

On the NATO front, our central purpose now is to speed up and strengthen programs already started. New opportunities for productive action will certainly develop from time to time. Meanwhile, NATO projects now under way afford a solid foundation on which to build.

In particular, we make the following specific recommendations for strengthening present programs.

1. NATO science fellowship program

Pleased though it is that the NATO Council has followed the recommendations of the 1957 Parliamentarians' Conference in setting up a science fellowship program, the Parliamentarians' Conference believes that this program should be increased.

Fellowships are an investment in scientific ability—a gamble to discover exceptional minds and to find pathbreaking scientific ideas. Wisely planned, and coming at a critical juncture in a student's career, fellowships open the way to notable achievement. Over and over again, it is the fellows who study under the revered masters in one period, who themselves become the masters in the next generation.

Considering the scope of the challenge, we think present plans for the fellowship program are overly modest. With only minimum notice to potential applicants this year, demand far outdistanced supply. Many hundreds of gifted students with proven capacity for productive scholarship who could have profited by the best training abroad in their special discipline, did not have a chance to go abroad.

If NATO is really interested in backing brains, then we should do it on a scale offering hope of a decisive impact.

Therefore, we repeat our 1958 recommendation that the NATO Council look forward to a steady increase in the science fellowship program—with the goal of an $8 million program when it is in full operation.

2. NATO program for oceanographic research

It is gratifying that a NATO program in ocean research has been launched in line with the proposal of the 1957 Parliamentarians' Conference. In terms of political geography, NATO is a maritime confederation—the seas are highways for our commerce, strategic approaches to our shores, potential sources of food and minerals, and weathermakers. Yet we know very little about the ocean. Today, this ignorance is a danger to our community's survival and an impediment to its economic progress.

The research demands in oceanography now far exceed the skills available in the NATO community. It is necessary to attract more good men and women to marine science. At the same time, we must capitalize on the most expert talent now available.

Many NATO countries have excellent potential in marine science, but the high costs of research laboratories, ships and other modern techniques have deprived them of the opportunity for up-to-date experience.

More use of the NATO science fellowships for marine science would help facilitate exchanges of personnel between various laboratories.

In addition, NATO might well initiate a series of NATO expeditions using one or more of the most advanced oceanographic ships now available in the NATO community. All NATO countries could be invited, if they so desire, to designate a marine scientist to join the expeditions. In this way new ideas would be developed and vital research advanced. At the same time scientists from many NATO countries would gain the experience they need to help develop national and cooperative efforts in this vital field.

We note that NATO's Oceanography Subcommittee has suggested (a) that an expedition now being planned for the summer of 1960 could be designated the first NATO oceanographic expedition, and (b) that the one good possibility is the 1960 expedition to the Norwegian Sea now being organized by the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution to take acoustical, geophysical and oceanographic measurements.

We recommend that the NATO Council give attention to the desirability of approving NATO oceanographic expeditions.

3. Cooperative program in upper atmosphere and outer space research, development and exploration

Although we are happy that bilateral cooperation is proceeding, we think this must be broadened in line with the recommendation we made last year for NATO-wide cooperation in upper atmosphere and space.

The scientific problems involved in space technology are very difficult and very costly. Only a few NATO countries have been able to afford the expense and talent needed to develop and construct launching vehicles for satellites.

Yet this is but one aspect of the total space research problem. The total problem involves every scientific discipline—theoretical and applied mathematics, physics, meteorology, chemistry, geology, geophysics, biology, and medicine.

Every one of our countries has scientists with the skills urgently required in space research. Some of the smaller members of our Community are in fact preeminent in specialized research areas of critical importance.

As stated in the report of the Subcommittee on Scientific and Technical Cooperation of the Atlantic Congress (1959): "Scientists of many nations can design and make the instruments to be carried in the payload of these space vehicles, assist in tracking them, receive and interpret the data, and attempt to apply these findings in astronomy, physics, biology, meteorology, communications and navigation."

Theodore von Karman's AGARD now promotes cooperative programs in aeronautics. It has taken preliminary steps toward cooperation in astronautics and laid the groundwork for a productive NATO space program.

Many experiments not planned in present national or bilateral programs are of urgent concern. Initial work by AGARD has established that an important program of research can be devised that would be of interest to NATO countries, and in which worthwhile contributions could be made at different levels of complexity. Participation might vary from informal correspondence to organized equipment programs.

Three general types of satellite experiments which could be conducted by NATO nations have already been suggested as of great scientific value.

The United States would be expected to provide a launching vehicle, but experiments could be carried out by single countries or combinations of countries, and several experiments could be carried out simultaneously.

We recommend that the NATO Council give consideration to speeding satellite and space probe experiments as part of a NATO-wide cooperative effort in peaceful outer space research.

4. Atlantic Institute for Defense Studies (AIDS)

The 1957 Parliamentarians' Conference recommended the establishment of an Atlantic Institute for Defense Studies to bring the techniques of modern science to bear on defense planning on a NATO-wide basis.

This recommendation was made against the background of increasing awareness by political and military leaders that effective defense planning cannot be improvised. Today, almost any defense mission can in theory be performed by a variety of different weapons systems. Those who must determine which system is most effective for the job can use the assistance of comprehensive programs of operational research, involving mathematicians, physicists, economists, and representatives of other fields of science.

We believe the need for a NATO center for defense studies has grown progressively greater since our 1957 recommendation. Weapons systems and defense problems have become more and more complex. While the Air Defense Technical Center at The Hague has an effective research program, critical areas of defense planning fall outside its jurisdiction.

NATO needs to evaluate the role of nonnuclear firepower, of nonlethal biochemical agents, and of conventional explosives, propellants, and guidance systems. We must bring the latest scientific ideas to bear on the full range of problems involved in the defense of our community.

Fortunately, the potential benefits of operational research have become increasingly understood since our 1957 session. Many NATO member states now rely heavily on their own defense study centers. AGARD and SHAPE have conducted a number of successful conferences and institutes on operational research, history, and methods.

Based on experience to date, we believe a NATO-wide defense study center would perform an indispensable role in NATO defense planning.

Therefore, we recommend an early decision by SHAPE to set up a broad and permanent Atlantic Institute for Defense Studies.

5. NATO program for the exchange of technical information

One of the major problems of basic and applied scientific research is securing quick and ready access to the results of past research and scientific studies now under way. All too frequently, today, researchers in one nation may embark upon some project, only to discover at a later date that years before another research group in some other center or country has performed the same experiment. Similarly, important research programs are often held up for lack of some critical item of information which lies buried in scientific literature and unknown to the researchers.

The cost of such difficulties, measured in terms of wasted research, is high.

Last year this Conference went on record as identifying this problem as one appropriate for NATO corrective action. It stated that a system to facilitate the exchange of technical documentation is essential to an expeditious and economically sound NATO research and development effort, and it urged that an appropriate mechanism be established by NATO to promote the exchange of technical information studies and the like between the member nations.

We now wish to express again our concern with this problem.

It is not envisioned that copies of all books, pamphlets and papers be made available in one place, although certainly the largest possible number of titles in one place is desirable. It is most important, however, that we create a facility for informing scientists and technicians where a specific title can be located, and to expedite access to such titles for proper use.

Such a facility or depository will go far to eliminate duplication and to speed up pure research and the utilization of information.

We recommend that the NATO Council appoint a commission to study the ways and means to bring into existence a depository of all scientific and technical knowledge now available in the NATO countries.

PERSPECTIVE

Today the Atlantic nations are joined in the common cause of improving the study and pursuit of science throughout the NATO countries. To a certain extent, this activity was spurred on by Communist scientific success. More important, however, for the long-term progress of the NATO science program, is a growing awareness throughout the Atlantic Community of the implications of the scientific revolution.

Peoples of the Atlantic countries have come to realize that progress in science can do far more than bolster military strength. It will also usher in a more prosperous life for all our people. Our future hopes for economic well-being rest in our successes or setbacks in our laboratories.

Better science will not only promote the security and welfare of the Atlantic world; it will also assure a greater reservoir of brains and know-how for technical cooperation in Asia and Africa. More and better skills are needed if the Atlantic nations are to continue to be the main exporters of science and technology to critical underdeveloped areas.

Can we rally a scientific effort equal to the challenge? Can we enlist the abilities, the ideas and the energies of our entire Community, and sustain the effort indefinitely?

We believe we can.

But the commitment to this goal is demanding. Our preeminence in science was not won by laggards, and laggards will not preserve it.

ATLANTIC COMMUNITY SPACE PROGRAM

(By Senator HENRY M. JACKSON)

As we meet here today, more than 150 young men and women are away from their homes studying and working in laboratories under the greatest scientists of our Atlantic world. These students are the intellectual flower of our community. Among them may be a Fermi or a Bohr or a Cockroft or a Heisenberg of the next generation.

These are the NATO science fellows. They are beneficiaries of an unprecedented opportunity to develop their brilliant talents still further.

They have been given this opportunity because of actions by our Conference. The NATO science fellowship program stands as a symbol of the practical steps taken by this Conference to strengthen the scientific effort of our community.

Three years ago, long before Sputnik, this Conference warned that science in our Atlantic world is moving forward too slowly to keep pace with the challenge of our times. But the Conference did more than warn. It acted. The NATO science program, launched by this Conference, is now well under way.

This last year has been one of solid accomplishment. The report before you gives the details of what has been done concerning previous recommendations of our Parliamentarians' Conference.

We have made a good start, and we are on the right track. But, as the adage goes, "Even if you are on the right track, you will get run over if you just sit there." The task now is to take advantage of the momentum already gained—to speed up and broaden corrective programs.

The main responsibility for remedial action lies, of course, with national governments. We believe that the time is overdue when all Atlantic nations should have affirmative programs for the expansion and use of science. In brief, each country should have a national science policy appropriate to its special situation.

Today our Scientific and Technical Committee puts before you our recommendations for further NATO action. These recommendations reflect discussion and correspondence with officials of NATO, SHAPE, and OEEC. They reflect the helpful counsel of the executive agencies of our countries and of able private citizens, including many of the most distinguished scientists in the world.

Let me summarize our recommendations:

1. We recommend that the NATO Council look forward to a steady increase in the NATO science fellowship program. We are pleased that the science fellowships are highly prized. Considering the need and demand for them, however, we believe the program should be larger.

Fellowships are the most important single device by which NATO itself can stimulate the training of competent personnel for scientific leadership.

We should have a program on a scale that offers hope of a decisive impact. We believe that a reasonable and practicable goal is an $8 million program when it is in full operation.

2. We recommend an early decision by SHAPE to set up a broad and permanent Atlantic Institute for Defense Studies (AIDS).

As weapons systems and defense problems become increasingly complex, the need grows for systematic and comprehensive programs of operational research.

We must bring to bear on the problem of the defense of our community, the very latest scientific ideas. NATO needs to evaluate the role of all types of weapons systems.

We believe a NATO-wide defense study center would perform an essential role in NATO defense planning.

3. We recommend that the NATO Council give attention to the desirability of approving NATO oceanographic expeditions.

We are gratified that a promising program has been started in ocean research. Many NATO countries have excellent potential in marine science, but they have been deprived of opportunity for up-to-date experience, because of the high costs of research laboratories, ships, and other modern techniques.

Therefore, we suggest a series of NATO oceanographic expeditions, using one or more of the most advanced oceanographic ships available in our community. In this way, scientists from many countries would gain the experience they need while vital research projects were being advanced.

4. We recommend a NATO-wide cooperative effort in peaceful outer space research. The case for such cooperation seems to me irrefutable. We are already cooperating in aeronautics; a logical next step is to cooperate in astronautics.

Last year we recommended that the NATO Council explore the desirability of such an effort. Since then, the NATO Council has urged NATO governments and scientists to cooperate with each other in upper atmosphere and space research. My country has offered to send up instruments for any NATO country desiring to launch a space research program.

A few bilateral cooperative programs are now being arranged. The Advisory Group for Aeronautical Research and Development, under the guidance of Prof. Theodore von Karman, has held useful discussions identifying important areas where cooperative space research would be fruitful.

In my opinion, however, the progress made in the past year falls far short of satisfying the expectations of our Fourth Parliamentarians' Conference. We have moved forward a yard, while we might have progressed a mile.

We have made a beginning at encouraging limited forms of national collaboration in space research. But we have not even started the job of defining and putting into effect a NATO-wide space effort, comparable to the common programs now under way in the broader area of science and technology.

Permit me to list, Mr. President, certain steps we are not now taking, which we should be taking:

First. We need, and do not now have, an inventory of the human and institutional resources available in our community to support space research and exploration.

Every one of our countries has scientists with the skills urgently required in such research. Some of the smaller members of our community are in fact preeminent in specialized areas of critical importance. Much of this talent is now going unused.

Second. We need, and do not now have, far greater interchange and far closer cooperation in both basic and applied space research. Today's uncoordinated and independent national programs too often result in overlapping and duplication of effort.

Third. We need, and do not now have, some common NATO center for space studies. This need not, and should not, be a huge enterprise. Such a center could be established at any one of a number of existing universities, laboratories, or research institutes, either in Europe or North America. It could serve as a common meeting place and focul point for space scientists from throughout our community.

Fourth. We need, and do not now have, NATO-wide cooperation on a comprehensive project which has as its goal the actual design, construction, launching and tracking of an outer space vehicle. In space research and technology there is no substitute for results—for hardware successfully hurtling through space. An advanced earth satellite for peaceful research clearly lies within the competence of such a common effort. Indeed, had our community embarked on an earth satellite program when it was first proposed 12 months ago, such a vehicle would have been circling the globe next year. It may be, in fact, that the march of events has now overtaken such a project, and that the first NATO-wide venture into space would do well to focus on a bolder and more ambitious enterprise.

The obvious need now is to take the practical first step toward getting a cooperative, peaceful space-research program started. I respectfully suggest that the way to get this effort launched may be through convening an international conference of space scientists from every member of our community.

Such a conference could be held early next year. It could build upon and extend the already competent work done by the Advanced Group for Aeronautical Research and Development (AGARD). This conference could be asked to identify those areas in which cooperative space programs would be desirable, and to draft a series of recommendations for prospective action.

I have discussed the problems and desirability of a real NATO space program with literally scores of distinguished scientists from both the Old World and the New. To a man, they have said such a program is thoroughly practical and urgently needed.

I must confess that I grow slightly impatient with the members of the "Yes, but" school. By this, I mean those who favor the principle of free nation cooperation in space research, but who always seem to take exception to practical programs for getting on with the job—programs such as we have it in our power to recommend in this conference.

One group, for example, favors collaborative international arrangements—but only on a bilateral basis. They argue that a NATO-wide effort would be too big and too unwieldly to be efficient. I hasten to say that there is nothing wrong with bilateral arrangements—provided we do not stop there. But what if in 1949 we had entered into a series of bilateral military arrangements, rather than trying to unite in a common cause against a common danger for a common end? The self-same arguments now being used against NATO cooperation in space were used 10 years ago against the idea of our military cooperation.

Another school takes the opposite approach. It argues that NATO, rather than being too large a unit for effective cooperation, is too small. This school proposes some universal international attack on the space problem, through the United Nations, or otherwise. I naturally favor any and all practical steps to foster such broad cooperation. But the problems involved in such an effort are immense. Years of talk and negotiation would be needed to make even a beginning at solving them. If we are concerned with tangible progress next year, or the year after, rather than 10 years from now, we should build our plans on the practical base provided by NATO.

Yet another variant of the "Yes, but," argument takes a form which puzzles and concerns me deeply. Some hold that NATO is a purely military alliance—and is therefore unsuited by its very nature to undertake the joint peaceful exploration and taming of outer space.

Surely, article 2 of our treaty, and the record of the past 10 years, make it plain that military defense is but one of the purposes of our organization. This organization was formed and now exists to promote cooperation in every field where the 15 members of our community can do together what they cannot do apart. What better way to reaffirm this cardinal principle of our community than by now applying it to the problem of space.

Five centuries ago, the great voyagers of the Old World discovered the New World of the Americas.

But the greatest voyages of discovery are yet to come. They lie in the upper atmosphere and outer space.

The Old World and the New World should now join forces for this greatest adventure of all. We should now explore the world of space together.

ASIAN AND AFRICAN LANGUAGES: ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a report and address concerning the problem of establishing a NATO program to encourage research and study of Asian and African languages.

The Scientific and Technical Committee of the NATO Parliamentarians' Conference, of which I have the honor to be chairman, last fall made a series of proposals in a report entitled "Asian and African Languages: Road to Understanding." Unanimously approved last November by the 15-member NATO Parliamentarians' Conference here in Washington, D.C., and forwarded to member governments and the NATO Council for study and action, these proposals are of direct concern to the Congress.

Accompanying this report is the address entitled "Lifting the Language Curtain" which I made in presenting our committee proposals to the NATO Parliamentarians.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ASIAN AND AFRICAN LANGUAGES: ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING

(Report of the Scientific and Technical Committee, chairman, Senator HENRY M. JACKSON)

BACKGROUND

Language—the words and phrases of everyday intercourse—has today assumed immense symbolic significance in Asia and Africa. Pride in one's own language has become an integral part of emerging nationalism.

It is ironic that the Atlantic Community has tried to build a community of interest with the younger nations of Afro-Asia while attemping to communicate with them mainly in the tongues of the former governing nations. The anomaly of this situation is accentuated by the ambitious language efforts of the Communists—particularly in the Asian and African field.

Our linguistic deficiencies have been obvious for some time. Our present shortage of Asian and African linguists is acute. But even more serious is the fact that there are today some 70 important languages of Asia and Africa for which our teaching tools are sketchy or nonexistent.

The simple fact is we cannot hope to bridge the gap between the Atlantic Community and the newly emerging nations without the vital, binding force which only language skills can provide.

Knowledge of an indigenous tongue is a primary tool of understanding. Properly undertaken, language study is an avenue of insight into the culture, the hopes and thought patterns of a people. As much as we need the ability to communicate in others' tongues, we also need to learn about and respect the cultures of others. Only in this way can we expect them to join with us in the common task of building a decent and peaceful world, founded on mutual respect.

With these facts in mind, the 1958 Parliamentarians' Conference invited the chairman of the Cultural Affairs and Information Committee and the chairman of the Scientific and Technical Committee:

"1. To explore with appropriate authorities and agencies the possibility of sponsoring, prior to the 1959 NATO Parliamentarians' Conference, an advanced study group on ways and means of improving the study of Asian and African languages; and

"2. To make any findings and recommendations they see fit concerning this problem to the Fifth Annual NATO Parliamentarians' Conference."

LONDON STUDY GROUP ON ASIAN AND AFRICAN LANGUAGES

With this mandate from the conference, the two chairmen (Dr. Franz van Cauwelaert and Senator HENRY M. JACKSON) took steps to secure the counsel of leading experts in the NATO countries. With the generous help of the Ford Foundation, a study group of 26 of the top language experts in the Western Community met in May 1959 in London. They prepared and unanimously adopted the report which is attached to this statement.

We believe this report deserves the widest possible study by all the member governments of NATO, the press, and the public.

The report more than confirms the conviction of the 1958 Parliamentarians' Conference that inadequate emphasis is now given to Asian and African languages in Europe and North America, and that international action is required to spur on the improvement of language study.

ROLE OF NATO

The chief distinction of NATO lies in its ability to have a catalytic effect in stimulating national progress, through international cooperation, not only in defense but other fields as well.

Asian and African languages and cultures offer a fertile field for such catalytic action.

Of course, no international agency can assume primary responsibility for expanding the study of Asian and African languages in the Atlantic Community; that is the task of national programs.

Fortunately, the last year has seen the emergence of a number of national programs which emphasize the importance of Asian and African studies. Most of the NATO countries, however, do not have vigorous programs in this area. The time is long overdue for NATO to assume the "push and prod" function in this field.

Furthermore, there are many things to be done and some of them are best done by cooperative international action.

We believe the emphasis in a NATO program should be placed on the fundamental and basic research on Asian and African languages which underlies the production of teaching materials; the description of the language in scientific, linguistic terms, and the accumulation of the structural and lexical information necessary for the provision of grammars and dictionaries. A concerted, cooperative program in this area can mean much more rapid progress.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Using the London group findings as a starting point, we make the following specific recommendations.

In the preparation of these recommendations we had the valued guidance of many people. In particular, we wish to acknowledge our special debt to Prof. C. H. Philips, director of the London Study Group, and to the American Council of Learned Societies.

1. NATO language-area adviser

The prerequisite for a NATO language program is a language-area adviser at NATO headquarters in Paris. This officer would administer the expenditure of NATO funds available for language development. He would serve as the central coordinating point for specialist advisers and such expert panels and advisory committees as prove necessary. He would prepare appropriate agendas for meetings and, within the NATO countries, he would gather essential information and give assistance where required.

In this connection, we believe that the London study group should be continued in order to assist in the further development of the NATO program, and that support of the study group should be assured from NATO funds.

We recommend the early appointment of a NATO language-area adviser.

2. Guide to teaching materials for Asian and African languages and inventory of human and institutional resources

As the London report points out, there is no complete set of adequate teaching materials for any one of the 70 or more essential Asian and African languages, nor, in most cases, has the fundamental research on which their production depends yet been started.

In this basic work, the efforts of specialists in Asian and African languages remain inadequately coordinated.

As a first remedial step, the London report suggests that a guide to teaching materials for Asian and African languages should be prepared and published, and consideration be given to the desirability of making this an annual survey.

We believe such a guide is an appropriate first task, under a NATO language program. The guide would repeal the "key" languages not covered by present national programs, and the neglected areas of fundamental research which could most benefit from international support.

In addition, it would be useful to have an inventory of the human and institutional resources available in the NATO area to support the development of Afro-Asian language and area studies. In this way, an order of priorities can be established and added impetus be given to the programs at their very outset.

We recommend that the NATO Council support the immediate preparation and publication of a guide to teaching materials for Asian and African languages, and an inventory of human and institutional resources for language and area studies in this field.

3. NATO language fellowship program

As the London report indicates, there is a grave shortage of teachers, research workers, and students in Asian and African studies.

While recruitment into this field is primarily a national responsibility, we believe NATO should help provide incentives mainly in two high priority areas:

1. Research fellowships, to carry out fundamental and basic research on Asian and African languages; and

2. Grants to enable experts to travel and exchange information with colleagues in NATO countries.

The emphasis would thus be on international exchange. NATO fellowships would be given chiefly to the nationals of member states for research or study to be carried on abroad, thus encouraging cross-fertilization in the development of both personnel and materials.

NATO fellowships for study or research at educational institutions should cover the recipients' expenses, including tuition, and grants to the institutions for support of their programs.

Simply adding two or three fellowships to the present NATO cultural program is not enough. The language program should be large enough to have a noticeable and decisive impact on the improvement of language study in the Atlantic area.

We recommend that the NATO Council inaugurate a language fellowship program. We believe a reasonable budget for the first year would be $250,000.

4. Advanced study institute and research seminar program

The London report suggests that study institutes and summer schools would be a practical and helpful technique in training teachers and research workers, and in making widespread a knowledge of Asian and African studies.

Study institutes for advanced or special topics are an important postwar development in North America and in Europe. The highly successful London Study Group is itself one example of such activity in the language field.

Unlike more ambitious undertakings, institutes or seminars are relatively easy to establish. They focus on one problem area; their membership is limited; they are administered by existing organizations.

We believe NATO could perform a highly useful service by supporting study institutes and seminars for advanced or special topics in Asian and African studies.

Funds should be used for direct grants to the institute or seminar, partially to cover faculty and administrative costs, and for living and travel expenses of participants. Grants should be made in such a form as to influence neither the policy of the host institution nor its selection of staff.

We recommend that the NATO Council establish a program for the support of study institutes and seminars for advanced or special topics in Asian and African studies. We believe a sound budget for the first year would be $200,000.

5. Association with Asian and African countries in language study

The London report emphasizes that the peoples of the West cannot and should not attempt to sustain the complete study of Asia and Africa without collaboration of Asians and Africans.

Indeed, the success of the proposals we have made will rest in large part on the extent to which Asian and African scholars, organizations, and countries are involved in helping fulfill them. It is most desirable that nationals of countries in Asia and Africa be attracted to the language field and that they study in the NATO countries.

However, in this case a formal NATO approach does not appear to be the most desirable means of achieving the objective. Preferably, the responsibility for developing collaboration with Asians and Africans should rest with individual institutions and scholars in member countries, with the help of such funds as are supplied to them by NATO, by private foundations and from national sources.

CONCLUSION

The vital interests of the Western Allies now demand that NATO launch a program to invigorate the study of Asian and African languages and cultures throughout the NATO area. We believe that in the first full year of operation $500,000 could be usefully spent on this program.

We are belated in taking this step. We must make up for lost time.

Without the tools that such a program can provide, we cannot hope to convince the younger nations of our sister continents that their cause and ours are one—the cause of dignity, freedom, and justice for all men everywhere.

At the present day, a better understanding of mutual interests between the Western World and the peoples of Asia and Africa is increasingly vital. There is a growing awareness among discerning sections of our society that the Western World, in order to comprehend what is going on in those parts of the world outside its traditional awareness, and in order to participate in fruitful partnership with them, must attain a considerably greater understanding of the peoples and cultures concerned than its traditional educational system has provided. It is further recognized that the very enterprise on which Western countries are already embarked of cooperating in Asian and African scientific and technological advances carries in itself an accelerated process of cultural change and interdependence, both of which require a fuller and more urgent understanding.

Fortunately, an important preparatory base for this understanding has been carefully laid in certain limited circles in our society, but in order to render it anything like adequate for the new situation which is rapidly arising, an immediate and in due course massive development is imperative.

Appreciation is now growing that our educational need is particularly in the matter of Asian and African languages, the first component in understanding Asian and African peoples. These languages have not come within the experience of the generation which has already passed through our formal educational processes. It is therefore understandable that no general demand for their extension has hitherto come from that stratum of our societies.[1] The formulation of this demand, and of the measures necessary to fulfill it, must come from two sources:

(a) Those whose search for solution to political or other problems is impeded by the lack of a body of westerners competent in these languages, and

(b) those few professionals equipped with scientific knowledge of Asia and Africa.

Doubtless the pressure of time will sooner or later impel our education toward a wider view of the world, but the pace of events prevents us from awaiting this development. Meanwhile, we must not only seize upon every opportunity for improvement which presents itself, we must strive to exert planned pressures at the few points in our educational systems—mainly at the higher levels—where we believe they will be most immediately effective.

Our considered view is that constructive measures should be taken (a) within the general population, which has not had the chance of studying Asia and Africa in its education; (b) within the formal school, college, and university establishment of our several European and North American countries; and we would hope that steps would be taken to encourage cooperation with and development in the Asian and African countries themselves. The best opportunity for immediate amelioration unquestionably lies in category (b), especially at the university level, in part because advance at other levels of education depends upon prior improvement there, in part because this is the one sphere in which some provision of personnel and other facilities is—however inadequate—at least in existence. The assignment which may feasibly be given to the universities will be large and will take many years to accomplish.

A list of approximately 70 Asian and African languages essential for our purpose has been drawn up (app. I). For most of them there is a grave shortage of both teachers and students. We must at once take steps on the one hand to recruit and train teachers and research workers in Asian and African studies and on the other hand to prepare teaching materials for each of the languages listed. We are of the opinion that each country should help to establish a national program to facilitate the study of Asian and African languages and cultures. The study group is nevertheless convinced that international action will be required to promote these national efforts.

On an international level we propose two main methods of recruiting and training teachers and research workers:

1. The establishment of a fellowship and studentship program with the joint purpose of making the most efficient use of the existing cadre of university teachers and ultimately of increasing the knowledge of these civilizations within our countries together with the necessary linguistic skills. Fellowships and studentships are required for—

(a) The training at the graduate and postdoctoral stage of specialists in Asian and African studies, including librarians,

(b) essential field study and research, and

(c) the purpose of research cooperation.

The use or study of language should be a condition of the award of a grant.

Such a program would give—

(a) Grants to students and more advanced specialists.

(b) Financial assistance to universities or institutions in which the fellows are enrolled in order to improve teaching and research facilities.

(c) Grants to full-time students of Asian or African languages to enable them to spend some time in the country concerned at the end of the normal course.

2. The establishment of a program for the support of study institutes, summer schools, or seminars for advanced or special topics in Asian and African studies. This program will be required both for the training of specialists and for the general purpose of making widespread a knowledge of Asian and African studies. Study institutes, schools, or seminars will be needed, for example, for—

(a) Courses in linguistics with reference to Asian and African languages, for specialist teachers and research workers.

(b) The study of the languages and civilizations of Asia and Africa by specialist teachers and research workers, and also, for example, by teachers of modern languages in high schools and colleges.

The funds should be used for direct grants to the institute, school, or seminar, partially to cover teaching and administrative costs and for living and travel expenses of participants. Grants should be made in such a form as to influence neither the policy of the institute nor its selection of students or staff.

We propose that for the languages listed the following categories of essential teaching materials should be provided for, as far as they are relevant in each case:

1. An elementary text and exercise book based on the spoken language and designed on modern principles for use in conjunction with a competent speaker of the language or with recorded speech.

2. An introduction to the writing system and simultaneously to the written language.

3. A substantial quantity of graded readings up to newspaper difficulty.

4. A bilingual dictionary of the modern spoken and newspaper language.

5. A reference grammar.

6. Graded recordings up to the level of radio broadcast difficulty.

A preliminary analysis reveals that for every language we lack a complete set of adequate teaching materials in these categories.

In addition to the fellowship program it will be necessary to provide funds for the preparation, dissemination, and publication of materials essential for the teaching of the listed languages. Unfortunately not only do these materials not exist for most of the 70 or so languages in question but the fundamental research on which their production depends is yet to be undertaken. We need hardly stress that research equipment and the use of language informants and assistants will be essential if these tasks are to be satisfactorily pursued.

At present the work of specialists in Asian and African studies remains inadequately coordinated. As a first remedial step we are proposing that a guide to teaching materials for Asian and African languages should be prepared and published, and that, looking to the future consideration to be given to the desirability of producing an annual survey of such materials.

These studies like all other advanced studies depend on good library facilities. In centers where Asian and African studies have not yet been established or where they have not yet taken strong root it is important that adequate libraries and specialist librarians should be provided for and that facilities for the buying of foreign books be improved.

The proposals made above should facilitate the provision of instruction on the languages and cultures of Asia and Africa for government, industry, and commerce. In these no less than in academic courses, quality is assured by the application of scientific linguistic principles. The notion that it is possible to pick up a language in the field is an utterly wasteful one; intensive orientation courses, designed in consultation with representatives of government, industry and commerce, are the proper means of providing students of these categories with the necessary foundation of prefield experience on which to build later in the field itself a useful and increasingly sure command of the language concerned.

We estimate that the proposed development program in full operation will demand a high scale of expenditure, possibly of the order of several millions of dollars annually. It will be necessary to collect information and to examine the financial needs more closely before making a more precise formulation. We propose within the next few months to undertake this task. We begin so far back that it will take several years to reach the anticipated high level of activity and expenditure. These funds should be distributed with the guidance of a panel of advisers representative of various aspects of Asian and African studies rather than national representatives.

In conclusion, two further subjects of importance should be mentioned. Firstly, the Western countries must study the most effective means of insuring a higher degree of public awareness on the subject of Asia and Africa. Secondly, the peoples of the West cannot and should not attempt to sustain the complete study of Asia and Africa without the collaboration of Asians and Africans.

APPENDIX I

LIST OF LANGUAGES

Provision should be made for the following languages. The main purpose of the list is to show how great is the need, and grounds for the inclusion of other languages, e.g., from the Altaic group, could readily be substantiated.

The division into (a) and (b) rests on factors which are both geographical and linguistic. Those languages which are relevant to both Asia and Africa (Afro-Asian languages) are marked with an asterisk. Oceanic languages have been considered Asian. It may be noted that Turkish, considered as a Euro-Asian language, is a special case.

(a) Asian languages:

Arabic: Classical, modern literary, cultivated regional forms (e.g., Egyptian, Moroccan, Iraqi)[1]; Bahasa Indonesia and Malay; Bengali; Burmese; Cambodian; Chinese: Classical, Mandarin, Cantonese; Gujarati; Hindi; Japanese; Javanese; Kanarese-Kannada; Korean; Laotian; Malagasy; Malayalam; Marathi Mongolian; Nepli; Oriy; Pali; Panjabi; Pashto; Persian; Sanskrit; Sinhalese; Tagalog; Tamil; Telugu; Thai; Tibetan; Turkish; Urdu; and Vietnamese.

(b) African languages:

Amharic, Bambara, Bemba, Berber, Ewondo, Bulu, or Fang; Fula (Peul), Ganda, Hausa, Igbo, Kimbundu, Kongo, Kpelle, Krio (Creole of Sierra Leone), Lingala, Luba, Mandinka (Malinké), Mende, Mongo, Mossi (Moré), Nyanja, Ronga, Ruanda or Rundi, Sara, Senufu (Senufo), Somali, Susu (Sousou), Swahili, Tigrinya, Timne, Twi, Wolof, Yoruba.

NOTE.—The remaining facilities (based mainly on replies to a questionnaire) for Asian and African language study in Belgium, Canada, France, West Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Portugal, Scandinavia, Spain, Switzerland, United Kingdom and the United States may be obtained on request from: NATO Parliamentarians' Conference, 73 Great Peter Street, London S.W. 1, England.

LIFTING THE LANGUAGE CURTAIN

(By Senator HENRY M. JACKSON)

Mr. President, it is my honor to present to this Conference a proposal for peaceful NATO cooperation in high priority problem areas. This Conference now has an opportunity to help lift the language curtain that separates Asia and Africa from our Atlantic Community of Nations.

In Africa and Asia, the drive for a better life is in full swing; it is of supreme importance that the Atlantic Community should lend a hand.

The challenge was well stated to the Atlantic Congress last June:

"If the West is to succeed, and survive, it must be more than a patron of this world revolution, it must be a partner."

This is no easy task. We must take positive steps on many fronts at once. One front, long overdue for intense action, is the study of Asian and African languages.

Language is the fundamental tool of communication. Moreover, pride in one's own language has become an integral part of emerging nationalism. We may regret that this development erects a barrier to world-wide communication. But such is the world of today and tomorrow. Doors have to be opened, from and to Ghana and Ceylon and Kenya and Laos and Hokkaido.

Yet today the West cannot even provide an interpreter to talk to the man in the street in many areas. Our community is acutely short of persons skilled in Asian and African studies. What is more, we do not have a complete set of tools for the study of any one of the 70 key Asian and African languages. For most of those languages, we have not even started the fundamental research on which the production of teaching materials depends.

Our community faces a three-fold problem. There is the problem of training—how to increase our total of persons skilled in African and Asian studies. There is the problem of materials—how to conduct the basic research and develop essential teaching materials. There is the problem of facilities—how to strengthen the institutional resources available to support the expanded study of Asian and African languages.

Of course, NATO cannot assume the main responsibility for official corrective programs; that must necessarily fall upon member states.

Fortunately, the last year has seen an upswing in the study of foreign languages, both among educators and in Government action to support foreign language instruction. Yet most of the NATO countries still do not have a vigorous program for the study of Asian and African languages and cultures.

Furthermore, we are not getting the full advantage of inter-NATO cooperation. During the past quarter century, contact between the linguists in North America and in Europe has been minimal. This is unfortunate—our linguists need your materials and know-how, just as you need our know-how and materials.

Surely, the experts of the Atlantic Community can make a formidable attack on the language barrier, if they work together.

With the urgent need in mind, the 1958 Parliamentarian's Conference unanimously endorsed the idea of holding a NATO-wide study group on ways and means of improving the study of Asian and African languages, and asked my distinguished colleague, Dr. Franz van Cauwelaert, of Belgium, and myself to make such findings and recommendations as we saw fit concerning this problem to this Conference.

With this mandate, Dr. van Cauwelaert and I took steps to obtain the advice of leading experts in the NATO countries. Thanks to the generous support of the Ford Foundation, a study group of 26 of the top language experts in the Western Community were able to convene in May, this year, in London.

I have the highest respect for the way this study group was conducted by Prof. C. H. Philips, director of the University of London School of Oriental and African Studies. Their report was unanimously adopted and is now before you. It is practical and realistic. It deserves the most serious consideration by this Conference and by member governments and the public.

The report more than upholds the conclusion of the 1958 Parliamentarians' Conference that the present effort in Asian and African languages in North America and Europe is now gravely deficient, and that international action is required to achieve a bold improvement.

Fortunately, the London study group is continuing to assist in the preparations for a NATO program, and we are urging that its support should be assured from NATO funds.

You have before you findings and recommendations which have their genesis in the London report. It has been our good fortune to have had the able assistance of many experts, and Government officials in the preparation of this statement.

The philosophy of these recommendations is simple. We recognize that the resources available to NATO for action in this area are limited. We seek the maximum benefit of these resources.

We believe NATO activities in this area should be catalytic. Therefore, we propose that the main emphasis be put on the fundamental research on Asian and African languages which underlies the production of teaching materials.

We make four specific recommendations which are as follows:

First, that a NATO language-area adviser be appointed to serve as the central coordinating point for such specialist advisers and expert panels as prove necessary.

Second, that the NATO Council support the immediate preparation and publication of a guide to teaching materials for Asian and African languages, and an inventory of human and institutional resources available in the NATO area for language and area studies in this field.

Three, that the NATO Council inaugurate a fellowship program, to provide incentives mainly in two areas: research fellowships, to carry out basic research on Asian and African languages, and grants to enable experts to travel and exchange information with colleagues in NATO countries.

Four, that the NATO Council establish a program for the support of study institutes and seminars for advanced or special topics in Asian and African studies.

We estimate that in the first full year of operation $500,000 could be usefully spent on this program. It is our sincere opinion that this investment would pay for itself many times over in terms of improving our communication with the peoples of our neighboring continents.

Mr. President, I cannot conclude without emphasizing one point.

In the past, the Atlantic Community has been preoccupied with the defense of its existence. We know that the world owes much of its stability and freedom to the military strength of NATO. This strength must be maintained and nourished—for the sake of freedom everywhere.

But in the years ahead, our community must also look outward, working to build bridges of understanding and collaboration with other countries, particularly the newly emerging peoples.

The indispensable tool of this effort is language—the most direct contact one can have with the minds and feelings of others.

Let us now develop this tool—and use it.

TRANSACTION OF ADDITIONAL ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following additional routine business was transacted:

ADDITIONAL BILL INTRODUCED

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (S. 3816) for the relief of the heirs of J. M. Fidler, which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED OR PLACED ON CALENDAR

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred or placed on the calendar, as indicated:

H.R. 900. An act to validate certain overpayments inadvertently made by the United States to several of the States and to relieve certifying and disbursing officers from liability therefrom; referred to the Committee on Public Works.

H.R. 8665. An act to amend the Act entitled "An Act to establish a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt in the National Capital" to provide for the construction of such memorial by the Secretary of the Interior; placed on the calendar.

LAW OF THE SEA CONVENTIONS—RESERVATIONS

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, last month the Law of the Sea Conventions came before the Senate for ratification. The Senate, on a vote to reconsider, withheld its approval of the protocol to certain of the conventions. Unless that protocol is passed by a two-thirds vote, then the provisions dealing with the conciliation and arbitration of disputes that we have already advised and consented upon will be lost. The protocol, Executive N, gives effect to these other provisions.

The Senate reconsidered giving its approval to Executive N because it felt that, by giving its approval, the United States might be throwing itself completely at the mercy of the International Court of Justice, without the Connally reservation.

Mr. President, I now send to the desk a reservation to the resolution of ratification of the Optional Protocol of Signature Concerning the Compulsory Settlement of Disputes and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

This reservation that I have ordered is similar to the Connally reservation in that it reserves to the United States the authority to decide what matters are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States and thus not to be referred to the International Court of Justice.

Mr. President, I also send to the desk a reservation to the resolution of ratification of the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

This is the same type of reservation. It would attach to another Law of the Sea Convention, Executive C, which has not been finally passed on by the Senate.

If and when Executive N and Executive C are again considered, I hope the Senate, before ratifying them, will include these reservations I have offered today. These reservations are of vital importance to this Nation's strength and well-being.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, at this point in my remarks, to have printed an article by Raymond Moley which appeared in the Los Angeles Times and other papers throughout the country on June 24, 1960. This article clearly shows the perils of ratifying Executive C and N without reservations of the kind I have submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reservations will be received, printed, and lie on the table; and, without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The article presented by Mr. LONG of Louisiana is as follows:

EXECUTIVE BYPASS OF THE CONNALLY AMENDMENT PERILS U.S. INTERESTS

(By Raymond Moley)

Having failed to get the Humphrey repeal of the Connally amendment off the ground this year, the State Department is now attempting to bypass it through executive agreements.

Such an executive agreement, which would supersede the Constitution and the laws, would place a large part of our rights on the seas under the compulsory jurisdiction of the World Court.

As was pointed out when the attempt was made to repeal the Connally amendment, we have only one judge on that Court while the Communists have two and the Soviet has never subscribed to the World Court at all.

In the executive agreement in question there are four conventions and a protocol. The conventions cover a wide range of subjects in which controversy may arise between the United States and practically any seagoing nation.

Some of the subjects distinctly belong within our sovereignty. Very important are the control of resources in territorial waters, fishing rights, and labor conditions.

Fishing rights have traditionally been determined by specific treaties between us and specific nations and the control of labor conditions on the seas would practically place under bodies in the United Nations and the World Court issues which might, if decided against us, greatly cripple our merchant marine and those nations such as Panama and Liberia which register so many American-owned ships.

There has been trouble enough in that field already with certain maritime nations in Europe cooperating with American maritime unions to get such ships, flying the so-called flags of necessity, to register under the flags of Britain or the Scandinavian countries. That would deny us the use of them in case of war.

One of the most serious aspects of such an agreement concerns territorial waters. Consider the closeness of the United States to Cuba, which seems at the moment destined to be a Soviet satellite. We have a great naval base there. There are also considerable properties still owned by Americans.

On the slightest pretext, Cuba, which has already joined in this protocol, could, under the influence of the Soviet, drag us into the World Court. Under such an agreement we would be powerless to sustain our legitimate rights to the south.

There has been something very covert and tricky about the way this executive agreement has been managed in the Senate, where, in order to be valid, there must be a two-thirds majority for it.

All of the conventions and the protocol were suddenly brought together for a vote. The package deal was accepted. But there were demands for a reconsideration of the protocol and the vote was 49 in favor, 30 against, and 21 not voting. Since such a matter requires two-thirds of the Members present and voting, it was lost.

Other Senators were alerted to the fact that the right of the United States to determine what matters were of purely domestic concern in international disputes should remain where it is, under the Connally amendment, in the United States alone.

The present danger is that in the rush to adjourn, this vital question may be slipped through with insufficient warning and consideration. As the end of the session approaches, haste, confusion, and politics will muddy the waters. And those who would surrender our sovereign rights love to operate in such waters.

SENATE BILLS DISAPPROVED AFTER ADJOURNMENT

The President of the United States, subsequent to adjournment of the Senate, notified the Secretary of the Senate that on the following dates, he had disapproved the following bills of the Senate, together with his reasons for such action:

On July 6, 1960:

ECONOMIC REGULATION OF ALASKA RAILROAD UNDER INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

S. 1508. I am withholding my approval from S. 1508, a bill to provide for economic regulation of the Alaska Railroad under the Interstate Commerce Act, and for other purposes.

I cannot approve the bill because it would (1) subordinate certain of the President's statutory powers to those of a regulatory commission, (2) allow a State to regulate a Federal agency, and (3) apply to the Alaska Railroad laws, rules, and procedures which are intended solely for application to privately owned and operated railroads and which are completely inappropriate for a Government agency established to carry out a public purpose.

The power to construct and operate the Alaska Railroad and to set the rates charged by it are vested in the President. To subject the President's exercise of these powers to the review and perhaps disapproval of the Interstate Commerce Commission would be repugnant to our constitutional system.

By allowing the State of Alaska to regulate the Railroad, which is a Federal agency, the bill violates the principle that the Federal Government's authority shall be supreme. Under S. 1508, the State could thwart public purposes declared by the President and the Congress, but it would have no responsibility for the success or for the financing of the Railroad.

The laws, rules, standards, and procedures concerning tariffs, rates, accounts, services, and employees of private railroads are not suited to a Government agency. Accounting standards established by the Interstate Commerce Commission for private railroads cannot, for example, assure the President and the Congress of adequate control over the use of Federal funds by a Federal agency. In requiring the Commission to consider the needs of Government financial agencies, and in other exceptions it makes, the bill itself recognizes that standards applied to private industry cannot be applied to the Alaska Railroad.

By extending the Employers' Liability Act to cover the Alaska Railroad's liability to its employees, who are already covered by the Federal Employees' Compensation Act, the bill may give this group of Federal employees either dual compensation from the Federal Government for a single injury or the right to choose between two methods of obtaining compensation. Either result would be inconsistent with the Federal workmen's compensation policy that all employees be treated equally.

The President and the Congress have ample authority to insure that the Railroad operates in the public interest. In due course, it will be determined that the Railroad's Federal purposes have been achieved. At that time the Congress should authorize disposition of the Railroad to a non-Federal agency, and it would then automatically become subject to Interstate Commerce Commission regulation.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 6, 1960.

On July 12, 1960:

METHOD FOR REGULATING AND FIXING WAGE RATES FOR EMPLOYEES OF PORTSMOUTH, N.H., NAVAL SHIPYARD

S. 19. I am withholding my approval from S. 19, to provide a method for regulating and fixing wage rates for employees of Portsmouth, N.H., Naval Shipyard.

My reasons for disapproving an identical enactment of the 85th Congress still apply. This bill, like its predecessor, strikes at the heart of the statutory principle that rates of pay for 673,000 Federal wage board employees shall conform, as nearly as is consistent with the public interest, with private rates of pay in the immediate vicinity of the particular Federal activity.

This principle is sound. It insures Federal employees a fair wage. It insures against the payment of unwarranted hourly rates by the Government. And it insures that Federal rates of pay will not upset the economy of the community in which the Federal establishment is located.

S. 19 would disregard this principle by providing that hourly rates for Portsmouth Naval Shipyard employees should be based on those which obtain, not in Portsmouth, but rather in the Boston industrial complex, 60 miles distant. Private industrial rates are substantially higher in Boston than in Portsmouth—and therein lies the explanation of the bill.

But why should the Government pay a much higher hourly wage rate than do fair-minded private employers in the Portsmouth area? If the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard were a private establishment, there would be no question of a differential. The going rate for the area would be paid. But because the Government is the employer, and just because it is, there is apparently an expectation that the Government should pay more than these hourly employees in fairness and equity have a right to expect. Further, it is seemingly of little or no concern that in so doing the Government would be departing from sound principle and business practice and would be unsettling the economy of the Portsmouth community.

This kind of legislation—this expectation of something-for-nothing from the Government just because it is the Government—weakens our national fabric and with each occurrence leaves it more seriously impaired. The spread of this expectation, and its reflection in an increase of such legislation, are profoundly disturbing for the future of America.

In this one instance, for example, S. 19 as a law would provide a ready precedent for the eventual dissolution of the wage board principle and system. The Portsmouth Naval Shipyard in no way presents an unusual situation. Several Federal establishments, less distant from Boston than Portsmouth, have lower pay scales than those of the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard.

By no rationale can this bill be justified. Wage disparities exist throughout the United States but under the wage board principle the Government pays the fair and equitable hourly rates of the particular area in which it finds itself—and so it should.

For these reasons I am unable to approve the bill.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1960

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Malachi 4: 2: But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in His wings.

O Thou Eternal God, as we bow in the quiet of this moment of prayer wilt Thou kindle within our hearts the spirit of adoration, of gratitude, of confession, and supplication.

Gird us with the armor of righteousness that we may overcome the forces of evil in the world and hold fast the blessings of freedom for ourselves and all future generations.

May our beloved country be a Nation of God-fearing and law-abiding citizens for Thou hast placed us in a moral and spiritual universe where no man and no nation can with impunity defy Thy laws.

Grant that with ever deepening insight and understanding we may find those ways and means which will bring concord among the people of the earth.

Hear us in the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8229) entitled "An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide an exemption from income tax for supplemental unemployment benefit trusts."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11748) entitled "An act to continue until the close of June 30, 1961, the suspension of duties on metal scrap, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H.R. 9883) entitled "An act to adjust the rates of basic compensation of certain officers and employees of the Federal Government, and for other purposes," returned by the President of the United States with his objection, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, and passed by the House of Representatives on reconsideration of the same, it was

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. ROY ARTHUR TAYLOR, be permitted to take the oath of office today. The certificate of election has not arrived, but there is no contest, and no question has been raised with regard to his election.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Member-elect will present himself at the bar of the House to take the oath of office.

Mr. TAYLOR appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

ENABLING THE UNITED STATES TO PARTICIPATE IN THE RESETTLEMENT OF CERTAIN REFUGEES

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk House Joint Resolution 397 to enable the United States to participate in the resettlement of certain refugees, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman take a little time to explain this bill?

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, the joint resolution that the House adopted some time ago was designed to enable us to participate in the World Refugee Year. The Senate added an amendment, totally unrelated to the purpose of this legislation, providing for the admission of about 4,500 Chinese from Hong Kong. There are over 1 million Chinese from Communist China in Hong Kong at the present time. These are people who cannot be screened; nobody knows anything about them. No international agency such as the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is allowed to pass on their status. Nobody knows how many of them have been sent down to Hong Kong by the Chinese Communists for infiltration purposes. Our security agencies know nothing about them. There is no way to find out anything about them because we do not maintain diplomatic or consular posts in Communist China. In admitting these people into the United States the Attorney General will have to act blindfolded. The Judiciary Committee has felt unanimously that this is a separate, grave, and most difficult problem. We should not agree to the Senate proposal.

Mr. GROSS. I think the gentleman is exactly correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. WALTER, FEIGHAN, and MOORE.

U.S. ATTORNEYS

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 12747) to increase the salaries of assistant U.S. attorneys and certain other attorneys appointed by the Attorney General.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the rate of compensation of each assistant United States attorney appointed under section 502 of title 28 of the United States Code, and of each attorney appointed by the Attorney General under section 503 of title 28 of the United States Code, is hereby increased by an amount equal to the increase provided in section 112 of the Federal Employees Salary Increase Act of 1960 for an officer or employee of the Federal Government subject to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, whose rate of compensation immediately before the increase provided in such section 112 most nearly corresponded to the rate of compensation of such attorney. No increase in compensation under this Act shall cause the total compensation of any attorney to exceed the limitation otherwise provided with respect to his compensation by section 508 of title 28 of the United States Code.

SEC. 2. The first section of this Act shall take effect on the first day of the first pay period beginning on or after July 1, 1960.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HEBRON, OHIO

Mr. LEVERING. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 594) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives hereby extends its greetings and felicitations to the village of Hebron, Ohio, on the occasion of the celebration to be held on July 4, 1960, in honor of its one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary, and extends its best wishes for the continued progress and prosperity of such village and its residents in the future.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Mr. FRIEDEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 595) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 589, Eighty-sixth Congress, incurred by the Special Committee To Investigate Campaign Expenditures, 1960, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $35,000, including expenditures for employment of experts, special counsel, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by said committee, signed by the chairman of the committee, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

SEC. 2. The official stenographers to committees may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia if not otherwise engaged.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL POSTAGE RATES FOR EDUCATIONAL, CULTURAL, AND LIBRARY MATERIALS

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H.R. 4595) to clarify and make uniform certain provisions of law relating to special postage rates for educational, cultural, and library materials, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 3, strike out "and".

Page 2, line 6 strike out "recordings"." and insert "recordings'; and

"(4) by striking out the word 'and' immediately before '(6)' and by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following: 'and (7) printed educational reference charts, permanently processed for preservation.'"

Page 2, strike out all after line 6 over to and including line 3 on page 3 and insert:

"(b) Section 204(e)(1) of such Act, as amended (72 Stat. 140, 141; 39 U.S.C. 292a(e)(1)), is amended—

"(1) by inserting '(including cooperative processing by libraries)' immediately following 'loaned or exchanged'; and

"(2) by striking out '(i) books consisting wholly of reading matter or scholarly bibliography or reading matter with incidental blank spaces for students' notations and containing no advertising matter other than incidental announcements of books; (ii) printed music, whether in bound form or in sheet form; (iii) bound volumes of academic theses in type written or other duplicated form and bound volumes of periodicals; (iv) phonograph recordings; and (v) other library materials in printed, duplicated, or photographic form or in the form of unpublished manuscripts." and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "(i) books consisting wholly of reading matter or scholarly bibliography or reading matter with incidental blank spaces for notations and containing no advertising matter other than incidental announcement of books; (ii) printed music, whether in bound form or in sheet form; (iii) bound volumes of academic theses in typewritten or other duplicated form; (iv) periodicals, whether bound or unbound; (v) sound recordings; and (vi) other library materials in printed, duplicated, or photographic form or in the form of unpublished manuscripts.'."

Page 3, strike out lines 4 to 8, inclusive, and insert:

"(c) Section 204(e)(2) of such Act, as amended (72 Stat. 141; 39 U.S.C. 292a(e)(2)), is amended—

"(1) by inserting 'scientific or mathematical kits, instruments, or other devices' immediately following 'sound recordings,'; and

"(2) by striking out 'and catalogs of such materials' and inserting in lieu thereof 'catalogs of such materials, and guides or scripts prepared solely for use with such materials'."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, as passed by the House, H.R. 4595 would clarify and make uniform certain provisions of the Postal Rate Increase Act, 1958, relating to the special postage rates on books, library books, and related materials. Also, the House-passed bill clarified and revised the descriptions of related materials as contained in existing law.

The House action was based on an executive communication submitted by the Deputy Postmaster General on February 2, 1959. Subsequently, the Department offered no objection to an amendment by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee pertaining to the mailing of periodicals, bound or unbound, and the inclusion of guides and scripts with mailings of films or filmstrips.

The Senate has added seven amendments to the House-passed bill. Four of the amendments are technical and of a conforming nature to give effect to the other three substantive amendments. The amendments of a substantive nature have the following effect:

First. Add printed educational charts of a permanent nature to the materials that can be mailed at the book rate.

Second. Make a technical correction in existing law so that library materials mailed to and from cooperative processing centers can be mailed at the library book rate.

Third. Add scientific or mathematical kits, instruments, or other devices to the materials than can be mailed at the library book rate.

These amendments, as was the case of the House-passed bill, are all designed to clarify and make uniform the special book rate or the special library book rate for educational, cultural, and library materials. The enactment of this legislation will have little effect on the postal revenue.

The Postmaster General has submitted a report interposing no objection to enactment of the bill as amended by the Senate.

DETENTION OF MAIL FOR CERTAIN PERIODS

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H.R. 7379) to amend the act of July 27, 1956, with respect to the detention of mail for temporary periods in the public interest, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, strike out all after line 5 over to and including line 16 on page 5 and insert:

"'(a) In preparation for or during the pendency of proceedings under section 3929 of the Revised Statutes (17 Stat. 322; 39 U.S.C. 259), as amended and extended by the Act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. 964; 39 U.S.C. 259), section 4041 of the Revised Statutes (17 Stat. 323; 39 U.S.C. 732), as amended, and the Act of August 16, 1950 (64 Stat. 451; 39 U.S.C. 259a), the United States district court in the district in which the defendant receives his mail shall, upon application therefor by the Postmaster General and upon a showing of probable cause to believe the statute is being violated, enter a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction pursuant to rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure directing the detention of the defendant's incoming mail by the postmaster pending the conclusion of the statutory proceedings and any appeal therefrom. Any such order, in the discretion of the district court, may provide that the detained mail be open to examination by the defendant and such mail delivered as is clearly not connected with the alleged unlawful activity. Any action taken by a court hereunder shall not be deemed to affect or determine any fact at issue in the statutory proceedings."

Page 5, line 17, strike out "subsections (a) and (b)" and insert "subsection (a)".

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, as this bill passed the House, it provided authority for the Postmaster General to impound mail in cases involving the sending of obscene material through the mail to 45 days. Presently the limitation is 20 days.

As amended by the Senate, the authority to impound is vested in the courts with an unlimited number of days. The use of the impounding authority is limited to the illegal material and may not be used against publications having second-class permits.

The Post Office Department concurs in the amendment and, when the legislation was before our committee, testified that with respect to obscene material, authority to detain the mail is used only in cases of hard-core pornography.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN REAL PROPERTY TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REDEVELOPMENT LAND AGENCY

Mr. DOWDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3648) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia on behalf of the United States to transfer from the United States to the District of Columbia Redevelopment Land Agency title to certain real property in said District.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subject to the provisions of this Act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized on behalf of the United States to transfer to the District of Columbia Redevelopment Land Agency established by section 4 of the Act approved August 4, 1946 (60 Stat. 793), as amended (sec. 5–703, D.C. Code, 1951 edition), hereinafter referred to as "Agency", all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to part or all of certain property in the said District, as follows: The area bounded by the east line of Fourteenth Street south, the existing southerly (or westerly) building line of Maine Avenue Southwest, the northerly line of Fort Lesley J. McNair at P Street Southwest, and the bulkhead line established pursuant to the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1899 (30 Stat. 1151), as amended, together with any land area extending channelward from said bulkhead line.

SEC. 2. The said Commissioners shall, prior to transferring to the Agency title to any of the said property described in the preceding section, determine whether such property is necessary to the redevelopment of the Southwest section of the District of Columbia in accordance with an urban renewal plan approved by them, and, if they so find, they shall, acting on behalf of the United States, transfer and donate to the Agency all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to so much of said property as they determine is necessary to carry out such urban renewal plan.

SEC. 3. Subject to the provisions of section 5 of this Act, the Commissioners shall, at the time of transferring to the Agency title to any of the property described in the first section hereof, also transfer to the Agency their jurisdiction as provided by the first section of the Act approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. 1377, ch. 458; 9–101, D.C. Code, 1951 edition), over so much of the said property as may be so transferred.

SEC. 4. The Agency is hereby authorized, in accordance with the District of Columbia Redevelopment Act of 1945, to lease to a redevelopment company or other lessee such real property as may be transferred to it under the authority of this Act, but may not otherwise dispose of such property except to the United States or any department or agency thereof, or to the District of Columbia. In the event that real property acquired by the Agency from the United States pursuant to this Act is transferred to the District of Columbia or to any department or agency of the United States pursuant to this section, such transfer shall be without reimbursement or transfer of funds.

SEC. 5. Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this Act, if any of the real property transferred to the Agency under the authority of this Act is not leased by the Agency in accordance with an urban renewal plan approved by the Commissioners, or otherwise disposed of, on or before the date the Housing and Home Finance Administrator makes the final Federal capital grant payment to the Agency for the project pursuant to title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, then the title to so much of the said real property as is not so leased or otherwise disposed of by such date shall revert to the United States, subject to the exclusive control and jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and subject to the provisions of the Act approved May 20, 1932 (47 Stat. 161; secs. 8–115 and 8–116, D.C. Code, 1951 edition).

SEC. 6. Nothing herein contained shall be construed as requiring the said Commissioners to transfer title to so much of the property described in the first section of this Act as the Commissioners may determine, in their discretion, is required for municipal purposes or is to continue to be owned by the United States under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners, for the benefit of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 7. No transfer or donation of any interest in real property under the authority of this Act shall constitute a local grant-in-aid in connection with any urban renewal project being undertaken with Federal assistance under title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended.

Mr. DOWDY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOWDY: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That subject to the provisions of this Act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized on behalf of the United States to transfer to the District of Columbia Redevelopment Land Agency established by section 4 of the Act approved August 4, 1946 (60 Stat. 793), as amended (sec. 5–703, D.C. Code, 1951 edition), all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to part or all of certain property in the said District as follows: The area bounded by the east line of Fourteenth Street Southwest, the existing southerly (or westerly) building line of Maine Avenue Southwest, the northerly line of Fort Lesley J. McNair at P Street Southwest, and the bulkhead line established pursuant to the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1899 (30 Stat. 1151), as amended, together with any land area extending channelward from said bulkhead line.

"SEC. 2. The said Commissioners shall, prior to transferring to the Agency right, title, and interest in and to any of the said property described in the preceding section, determine whether such property is necessary to the redevelopment of the southwest section of the District of Columbia in accordance with an urban renewal plan approved by them, and, if they so find, they shall, acting on behalf of the United States, transfer and donate to the Agency all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to so much of said property as they determine is necessary to carry out such urban renewal plan.

"SEC. 3. Subject to the provisions of section 5 of this Act, the Commissioners shall, at the time of transferring to the Agency right, title, and interest in and to any of the property described in the first section hereof, also transfer to the Agency their jurisdiction as provided by the first section of the Act approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. 1377, chapter 458; sec. 9–101, D.C. Code, 1951 edition), over so much of the said property as may be so transferred.

"SEC. 4. (a) The Agency is hereby authorized, in accordance with the District of Columbia Redevelopment Act of 1945, to lease to a redevelopment company or other lessee such real property as may be transferred to the Agency under the authority of this Act but may not otherwise dispose of such property except to the United States or any department or agency thereof, or to the District of Columbia, in accordance with section 5 of this Act. In the event that real property acquired by the Agency from the United States pursuant to this Act is transferred to the District of Columbia or to any department or agency of the United States pursuant to this section, such transfer shall be without reimbursement or transfer of funds.

"(b) In connection with the leasing of the real property transferred to the Agency under the authority of this Act, together with the leasing of any real property lying between such real property so transferred and the southerly or westerly line of Maine Avenue as the same may be relocated in connection with carrying out an urban renewal plan, the Agency is authorized and directed to provide to the owner or owners of any business concern displaced by reason of the enactment of the joint resolution approved August 28, 1958 (72 Stat. 983; Public Law 85–821), from the area described in the first section of this Act, a priority of opportunity to lease, either individually or as a redevelopment company solely owned by the owner or owners of one or more such business concerns, so much of such real property lying channelward of the southerly or westerly line of Maine Avenue as so relocated, at a rental based on the use-value of the real property so leased determined in accordance with the provisions of section 10 of the District of Columbia Redevelopment Act of 1945, as amended (D.C. Code, sec. 5–709), and section 110(c)(4) of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended (70 Stat. 1098; 42 U.S.C. 1460(c)(4)), as may be required for the construction of commercial facilities at least substantially equal to the facilities from which such business concern was so displaced. When the real property affected by the provisions of this subsection becomes available for leasing by the Agency, the Agency shall notify, in writing, the owners of the business concerns displaced by reason of the operation of such joint resolution approved August 28, 1958, as to the availability of such real property for leasing to such owners in accordance with the provisions of this subsection. The Agency shall give such owners so notified a period of one hundred and eighty days to notify the Agency, in writing, of their intention to proceed in accordance with the general development plan of the Agency for the area lying channelward of Maine Avenue, as so relocated, and to demonstrate to the Agency their ability to carry out so much of such plan as may be embraced within the area which they desire to lease. If, at the end of such period of one hundred and eighty days, such owners have failed to make a demonstration to that effect which is satisfactory to the Agency, the priority of opportunity provided by this subsection shall no longer continue to be available to such owners.

"SEC. 5. Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this Act, if any of the real property transferred to the Agency under the authority of this Act is not leased by the Agency in accordance with an urban renewal plan approved by the Commissioners, or otherwise disposed of, on or before the date the Housing and Home Finance Administrator makes the final Federal capital grant payment to the Agency for the project pursuant to title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, then the right, title, and interest in and to so much of the said real property as is not so leased or otherwise disposed of by such date shall revert to the United States, subject to the exclusive control and jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and subject to the provisions of the Act approved May 20, 1932 (47 Stat. 161; secs. 8–115 and 8–116, D.C. Code, 1951 ed.).

"SEC. 6. Nothing herein contained shall be construed as requiring the said Commissioners to transfer the right, title, and interest in and to so much of the property described in the first section of this Act as the Commissioners may determine, in their discretion, is required for municipal purposes or is to continue to be owned by the United States under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners, for the benefit of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 7. No transfer or donation of any interest in real property under the authority of this Act shall constitute a local grant-in-aid in connection with any urban renewal project being undertaken with Federal assistance under title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended.

"SEC. 8. As used in this Act, the terms 'Agency', 'lessee', 'real property', 'redevelopment', and 'redevelopment company' shall have the respective meanings provided for such terms by section 3 of the District of Columbia Redevelopment Act of 1945, as amended (D.C. Code, sec. 5–702)."

Mr. DOWDY (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is proposed to be done here?

Mr. DOWDY. I am about to explain the amendment.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWDY. Mr. Speaker, there is some waterfront property down here between Maine Avenue and the river that the District of Columbia has been controlling. Title apparently is in the Federal Government. This is actually a quitclaim to the District of Columbia so that this property can be developed by the Redevelopment Land Agency. The purpose of our committee amendment is to take care of some people who were displaced, who were promised when they were displaced that they would be taken care of. That is all it is.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETERANS OF WORLD WAR I OF THE U.S.A. MEMORIAL FOUNDATION

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, we are approaching the 42d anniversary of the end of World War I.

In all that time no suitable memorial has been built to honor all the men and women who served in that conflict.

That new and enterprising organization, the Veterans of World War I of the U.S.A., Inc., which serves a real need by speaking exclusively for the veterans of 1917–18, has decided to fill that gap, and in so doing, perform a patriotic service for the Nation.

A corporation has been formed in Washington, D.C., titled the "Veterans of World War I of the U.S.A. Memorial Foundation."

Its purpose is to perpetuate the significance of World War I, and the ideals that inspired America's participation in it.

The corporation has entered into a contract with the Virginia International Center, Inc., of Arlington, Va. The center is to deed a central section of their tract of land on U.S. 66, at Virginia Route 234.

This adjoins another historic spot which commemorates the courage of those who fought in the Civil War; Manassas Battlefield Park.

The new memorial will be a tribute to all veterans of World War I.

It will consist of a planetarium and a museum building. The planetarium will be among the largest of its kind in the world, and the museum will have on display the thousands of trophies and mementos relating to World War I.

This will be the beginning of a larger project that is to become an educational, historical, and cultural center for the benefit of all Americans.

The world-renowned architect, Victor Gruen, has been selected to design and supervise the construction of this shrine which will symbolize the valor, the sacrifices, and the hopes of a generation that fought to make the world safe for freedom.

It is noteworthy that this memorial will not only honor the brave men and women of the First World War, but through the medium of the planetarium which will be a model of the universe showing the planets in all their aspects, point to our faith in the future.

According to present plans, there will be a solemn blessing and dedication of the grounds in the near future, to be followed at a later date by the historic ground-breaking ceremony.

All of us look forward to the completion of this beautiful and impressive memorial.

I believe that we should commend the Veterans of World War I of the U.S.A. for their contribution to the American heritage, and to the American dream, and help them in every possible way to bring this project to fruition as soon as possible.

For this will be treasured by all of our people.

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Government Operations may have until midnight tonight to file a report on a bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

FEDERAL HIGHWAY ACT OF 1960

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 10495) to authorize appropriations for the fiscal years 1962 and 1963 for the construction of certain highways in accordance with title 23 of the United States Code, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2080)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 10495) to authorize appropriations for the fiscal years 1962 and 1963 for the construction of certain highways in accordance with title 23 of the United States Code, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 3 and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That section 120(a) of title 23, United States Code, is hereby amended by striking out 'unappropriated and unreserved public lands and nontaxable Indian lands, individual and tribal,' and inserting in lieu thereof 'nontaxable Indian lands, individual and tribal, and public domain lands (both reserved and unreserved) exclusive of national forests and national parks and monuments,'."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: On page 6 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 4, strike out "SEC. 6." and insert in lieu thereof "SEC. 4."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: On page 7 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 11, strike out "SEC. 7." and insert in lieu thereof "SEC. 5."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

On page 8 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 9, strike out "SEC. 8." and insert in lieu thereof "SEC. 6."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

On page 9 of the Senate engrossed amendments, on the next to the last line, strike out ": 9" and insert in lieu thereof ": 7"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: On page 9 of the Senate engrossed amendments, on the last line, strike out ": 10" and insert in lieu thereof ": 8"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: On page 10 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 2, strike out "Subsection" and insert in lieu thereof "Paragraph"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R 10495) to authorize appropriations for the fiscal years 1962 and 1963 for the construction of certain highways in accordance with title 23 of the United States Code, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment No. 1: This amendment would increase the authorization for public land highways for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1962, by an additional $500,000 bringing the total authorization for that fiscal year to a total of $3,500,000.

Amendment No. 3: This is a technical amendment and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 4: This Senate amendment provides that nontaxable Indian lands, individual and tribal, and both reserved and unreserved land in the public domain, exclusive of national forests, national parks, and national monuments, shall be used in computing the Federal share payable for Federal-aid highway projects in public lands States financed with Federal-aid primary, secondary, or urban funds. Existing laws permits the use of unappropriated and unreserved public lands and nontaxable Indian lands in computing the sliding scale ratio of Federal-aid participation in public lands States.

The House recedes with an amendment which is a technical amendment.

Amendment No. 6: This Senate amendment provides that upon execution of a project agreement with a State for construction of a road relocation necessitated by the construction of a project by a Federal agency, the Bureau of Public Roads could pay immediately to the State the estimated Federal share of the cost of the project. When the project is completed and accepted by the Bureau, an adjustment based on the final cost of the project would be made, and any excess over the Federal pro rata share of the cost would be recovered by the Bureau and credited to the same class of funds from which the Federal payment was received.

The House recedes with an amendment which is a technical amendment only.

Amendment No. 7: This Senate amendment provides for participation of Federal-aid highway funds in the construction of approach roads to ferry facilities toll or free, on the Federal-aid systems, excluding the Interstate System. Such ferries could be publicly or privately owned, the operating authority of the ferries and the amount of fares charged must be under the control of a State agency or official, and the fares derived from publicly owned ferries would have to be applied to payment of the cost of construction or acquisition thereof including debt service, and the necessary cost of operation, maintenance, repair, and replacement.

The House recedes with an amendment which is a technical amendment only.

Amendment No. 8: This Senate amendment would permit the States of Delaware and Maryland to repay to the Federal Government the Federal-aid highway funds paid on the segment of Interstate Route 95 from the vicinity of Farnhurst, Del., to the vicinity of the Whitemarsh Interchange in Baltimore County, Md., proposed as the location of a toll express highway. After repayment of Federal-aid highway funds and withdrawal of all project agreements, that section of the Interstate System would be free of any and all restrictions with respect to the imposition and collection of tolls or other charges, and could be constructed, operated, and maintained as a toll highway.

The House recedes with an amendment which is a technical amendment only.

Amendment No. 9: This Senate amendment is a technical numbering amendment.

The House recedes with a further technical renumbering amendment.

Amendment No. 10: This Senate amendment is a technical numbering amendment.

The House recedes with a further technical renumbering amendment.

Amendment No. 11: This Senate amendment repeals the present requirement in law that in making estimates of cost for completing the Interstate System, the cost of completing any mileage designated from the 1,000 additional miles authorized by section 108(1) of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956 shall be excluded.

The House recedes with an amendment which is a technical amendment only.

GEORGE H. FALLON,
CLIFFORD DAVIS,
JOHN A. BLATNIK,
GORDON H. SCHERER,
WILLIAM C. CRAMER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. FALLON (interrupting the reading of the statement). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the statement be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I assume there will be ample time taken to explain what the conference report consists of?

Mr. FALLON. Yes.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the statement.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, there is very little difference between the bill that is before us today than the bill that passed the House. The House receded in most cases where there were technical language changes. The largest amendment from which the House receded was an additional $500,000 that would be authorized for the fiscal year 1962 for "Forest roads."

The other amendment allowed Alaska more flexibility with their highway funds so that they could build access roads to ferries. A good deal of the transportation to many points in Alaska is by ferries. This amendment adds no additional cost to the Government; it merely gives them more flexibility in building their highway system.

Another amendment from which the House receded takes in additional Indian lands, reservation lands, that had not been used in the apportionment of money. This addition will be used for the allocation of money to States that have these particular Indian reservations. Outside of that there is very little difference from the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FALLON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, the two really controversial amendments which were in the Senate bill, the Senate receded from. These were the two amendments to which the managers on the part of the House seriously objected. One amendment would have extended the Interstate System from 41,000 miles to 41,300.

The second amendment to which the managers on the part of the House seriously objected was an addition to the A–B–C System for the next 2 years, amounting to $200 million. This $200 million would have been taken from the Interstate System since the A–B–C System has the first call on the trust fund. This would be grossly unfair since the Interstate System has already been cut back between 20 and 25 percent from 1956 construction levels.

Mr. FALLON. The gentleman is correct; I thank him for his statement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1961

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 12740) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and consider the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the report that was messaged over just a few minutes ago?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, it is.

Mr. GROSS. And is it now proposed to dispose of this in the House, or does the gentleman propose to ask for the appointment of conferees?

Mr. THOMAS. We are asking unanimous consent now to consider the Senate amendments in the House. We can take as much time as we need on this matter.

Mr. GROSS. Yesterday when the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] secured the passage of the continuing resolution, it was his statement at that time, to be found in the RECORD, that it was not necessary to pass additional appropriation bills or conference reports dealing with appropriations before Congress returns from its recess. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 12740) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TEMPORARILY AUTHORIZING CERTAIN SUPPLEMENTAL AIR TRANSPORTATION

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 7593) to provide that the Civil Aeronautics Board may temporarily authorize certain air carriers to engage in supplemental air transportation, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7593) to provide that the Civil Aeronautics Board may temporarily authorize certain air carriers to engage in supplemental air transportation, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendments Nos. 1 and 2: The House bill authorized the Civil Aeronautics Board to permit certain air carriers to engage in supplemental air transportation for a period of twelve months from the date of enactment of the bill.

Senate amendments Nos. 1 and 2 proposed to extend this temporary authority of the Civil Aeronautics Board from twelve months to twenty-four months.

The committee of conference agreed to limit this temporary authority of the Board to a period of twenty months from the date of enactment of the bill.

Amendments Nos. 3 and 4: The House bill provided that there would be eligible for interim operating authority under the bill only those air carriers which both (1) had operated in interstate air transportation as a supplemental air carrier under Board Order E–9744 of November 15, 1955, and (2) had an application for a certificate as a supplemental air carrier pending before the Civil Aeronautics Board on the date of enactment of the bill.

Senate amendments Nos. 3 and 4 in effect made eligible for such interim operating authority (in addition to the air carriers eligible for such authority under the House provisions) any person who either (1) had operated in interstate air transportation as a supplemental air carrier under Board Order E–9744 of November 15, 1955, or (2) had an application for a certificate as a supplemental air carrier pending before the Board on the date of enactment of the bill.

All air carriers eligible for interim operating authority under the House provisions also were made eligible for such authority by Senate amendments Nos. 3 and 4. In addition to those air carriers eligible for interim operating authority under the House bill, the Senate amendments made eligible for such authority (1) persons who had operated under Board Order E–9744, but did not have an application for a certificate pending before the Board on the date of enactment of the bill, and (2) persons who had never operated under such Board Order, but had an application for a certificate pending before the Board on such date of enactment.

The House recedes.

JOHN BELL WILLIAMS,
MORGAN M. MOULDER,
JOHN JARMAN,
WILLIAM L. SPRINGER,
HAROLD R. COLLIER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, this is the conference report on the stopgap legislation passed by the House, June 24, to permit certain supplemental air carriers to continue in operation temporarily despite a recent decision of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. This stopgap legislation is to give the Congress an opportunity to give further consideration to the request of the Civil Aeronautics Board for permanent legislation to authorize the issuance of limited certificates to this class of air carriers.

The Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce favorably reported a bill to grant permanent authority to the Board to grant limited certificates but that bill was laid aside and the House bill accepted with certain slight modifications which were considered in conference.

The House bill limited the authority of the Board to issue these temporary certificates to 12 months. The principal Senate amendments extended this to 24 months.

The conference agreement is for 20 months. It was agreed that every effort would be made on both sides to expedite consideration of the Board's request for permanent legislation. A number of important policy questions are involved but it is hoped that the Board's proposal can be considered and decided early in the next session. However, if some unexpected delay should be encountered, the amendment agreed to in conference will give us an opportunity to reach an agreement early in the 2d session of the next Congress.

The other amendments did not make any great change in the House bill. One makes eligible any persons whose application for a supplemental certificate is pending on the date of the enactment of this legislation. We were advised by the Board that there are at this time two such applications, one by Vance Roberts, doing business as North West Air Services, and the other by Purdue Aeronautics Corp.

Of course, others could file application. But this is considered unlikely in view of the 20-month limitation on the certificates authorized. Furthermore, such applications would be subject to Board action. Issuance of any certificate authorized by this legislation is discretionary with the Board.

It is not believed that the Senate amendments would make any difference in the case of Great Lakes Airlines and Currey Air Transport. The interim operating authority of these carriers was terminated by the Board, January 28, 1959. The petition for judicial review filed by these carriers are pending before the court of appeals, which has stayed the effect of the Board's order.

Under the Senate amendments, as under the House bill, these carriers still would have their day in court.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXEMPTION FROM INCOME TAX FOR SUPPLEMENTAL UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFIT TRUSTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 8229) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide an exemption from income tax for supplemental unemployment benefit trusts, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2073)

[To accompany H.R. 8229]

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8229) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide an exemption from income tax for supplemental unemployment benefit trusts, having met after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 10.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, and agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8229) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide an exemption from income tax for supplemental unemployment benefit trusts, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment No. 1: Under the bill as passed by the House, the term "supplemental unemployment compensation benefits" includes benefits which are paid to an employee because of his involuntary unemployment (whether or not temporary) resulting directly from a reduction in force, the discontinuance of a plant or operation, or other similar conditions. Under Senate amendment numbered 1, the term includes benefits which are paid to an employee because of his involuntary separation from the employment of the employer (whether or not such separation is temporary). This amendment makes it clear that supplemental unemployment compensation benefits include benefits paid to an employee who has been temporarily separated from the service of his employer even though the employee may have obtained other employment during the period of his temporary separation.

The House recedes.

Amendment No. 2: This is a clerical amendment. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 3: This is a clarifying amendment and provides in effect that exemption from income tax shall not be denied under section 501(a) of the 1954 code to any organization entitled to such exemption as a voluntary employees' beneficiary association under section 501(c)(9) of the 1954 code merely because such organization provides for the payment of supplemental unemployment benefits (as defined in the new section 501(c)(17)(D)(i) added by the bill).

The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, and 9: These amendments change from September 4, 1959, to December 31, 1959, the dates on which the rules contained in the bill relating to prohibited transactions, the unrelated business income tax, and business bases are made applicable.

The House recedes.

Amendment No. 8: Under the House bill, the amendments made by the bill were, in general, to apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1958. Under Senate amendment No. 8, the amendments are to apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1959.

The House recedes.

Amendment No. 10: This amendment added a new section 7 to the bill which provided that for any taxable year beginning before July 1, 1961, exemption shall not be denied under section 501(a) of the 1954 code, as an organization described in section 501(c)(3) of such code, to any nurses organization or association described in the new section solely on the ground that such organization or association limits its membership to individuals affiliated with a professional society, is principally supported by registration fees, or is controlled or operated by its registrant members.

The Senate recedes.

W. D. MILLS,
AIME J. FORAND,
CECIL R. KING,
N. M. MASON,
JOHN W. BYRNES,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, the bill, H.R. 8229, introduced by our colleague, the Honorable VICTOR KNOX, of Michigan, provided an exemption from income tax for certain supplemental unemployment benefit trusts. The bill generally provided that to obtain exemption under the new provision a trust must meet certain requirements similar to the requirements imposed upon qualified pension trusts. The bill passed the House unanimously on September 3 of last year.

The Senate adopted a number of essentially technical amendments to the bill which were accepted by the House conferees. The purpose of one of these amendments is to make it clear that a supplemental unemployment benefit trust could make payments to an individual who was separated from the employment of his regular employer even though during his period of separation he might take some temporary employment until his regular job reopened. Your conferees considered this within the spirit of the House bill. It would be undesirable to discourage individuals from taking such temporary jobs until their regular jobs are again available.

The purpose of another Senate amendment is to make it clear that the new paragraph (17) is not the exclusive rule for obtaining tax exemption for a supplemental unemployment benefit trust. If a particular trust continues to meet the requirements of paragraph 9 of section 501(c) of present law, it can continue to be exempt under that paragraph. This amendment simply clarifies the intention of the House bill.

The Senate bill moved the effective date of the new provisions forward to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1959. This was necessary in view of the fact that a year has elapsed since the House acted on the bill.

On the floor of the Senate an amendment was adopted not related to the subject matter of the House bill. The floor amendment would have provided a limited exemption under section 501(c)(3) for certain nurses' registry organizations that limit their membership to individuals affiliated with a professional society, are supported by registration fees, and are controlled and operated by their registered members. The Senate conferees receded on this amendment.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, this legislation pertains to the income-tax exemption of certain supplemental unemployment benefit trusts.

Section 501(c)(9) of the Internal Revenue Code is construed to grant exemption from income tax to supplemental unemployment benefit trusts if no part of the trust's net earnings inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual and 85 percent or more of its income consists of contributions from members of the trust or their employers.

These supplemental unemployment benefit programs now have an important part in our free-enterprise system with respect to employee security and employee compensation. In general, these programs provide an employment related source of income to a worker during the time that he may be temporarily laid off or in the terminal phase of his employment. The creation of such plans has largely come about as a result of collective-bargaining negotiations and are financed by payments made by the employer to the trust.

As I have explained, the applicable code provision under which tax-exempt status arises limits to 15 percent the trust income in a year that can come from sources other than employer-employee contributions. Many of these trusts have now reached the point where investment income exceeds the 15-percent limitation. The purpose of H.R. 8229 is to continue tax-exempt status for trusts providing unemployment-compensation benefits even though investment and other noncontribution income may exceed the 15-percent limitation.

In acting on this legislation the Senate adopted amendments previously approved by the Senate Finance Committee to the House-passed bill which may generally be termed to be perfecting amendments still carrying out the basic purposes of the bill as originally introduced.

One of the Senate amendments makes it clear that a SUB trust may continue to qualify for income-tax exemption under section 501(c)(9) if the trust meets the requirements of that paragraph.

A second Senate amendment amends the definition of supplemental unemployment compensation benefits to make it clear that the term includes payments made under a plan although an employee accepts temporary employment during the period he is not on the employer's payroll.

A third Senate amendment changes the effective date because of the passage of time since the House action so that the bill would apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1960. The House-Senate conference agreement now being considered by the membership of the House approves these three Senate amendments.

A fourth Senate amendment which was adopted on the floor of the Senate would grant for any taxable year beginning before July 1, 1961, income-tax exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code to any nurses' registry organization or association. The time limitations imposed on the conferees as a consequence of the imminence of the forthcoming recess has resulted in the deletion of this Senate floor amendment. I would make it clear that this action was taken without prejudice to the merits of the amendment or any pending tax matters that may pertain to this question.

Mr. Speaker, I join with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in urging that the House approve this conference agreement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUSPENSION OF DUTIES ON METAL SCRAP—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 11748) to continue until the close of June 30, 1961, the suspension of duties on metal scrap, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11748) to continue until the close of June 30, 1961, the suspension of duties on metal scrap, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment No. 1: This is a technical amendment to conform section 2 of the bill to the action of the Senate in adding new sections to the bill. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 2: This amendment adds a new section 3 to the bill. Subsection (a) of the new section 3 provides (in a new paragraph 758(b) added to the Tariff Act of 1930) for a separate tariff classification and a tariff rate of 1½ cents per pound for coconut meat, fresh or frozen, and shredded or grated, or similarly prepared, unsweetened or sweetened with sugar not to exceed 10 per centum by weight. Subsection (b) of the new section 3 provides that the amendment made by the section is to apply in the case of articles entered for consumption, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, after the 30th day after the date of the enactment of the bill. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 3: This amendment adds a new section 4 to the bill. Subsection (a) of the new section 4 amends paragraph 1805 of the Tariff Act of 1930 to add tight barrelheads of softwood to the duty-free list. Subsection (b) of the new section 4 provides that the amendment is to apply in the case of articles entered for consumption, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, after the 30th day after the date of the enactment of the bill. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 4: Section 309(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides that certain articles of foreign or domestic origin may be withdrawn (under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe) free of duty and internal revenue tax for vessels or aircraft engaged in trade between the United States and any of its possessions. Before Alaska and Hawaii became States, they were regarded as possessions of the United States for purposes of this provision.

Senate amendment numbered 4 adds a new section 5 to the bill. Subsection (a) amends section 309(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide that the withdrawal provisions shall apply with respect to vessels or aircraft engaged in trade between Hawaii and any other part of the United States or between Alaska and any other part of the United States. The Senate amendment also added a new paragraph to section 309(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide that the provisions for free withdrawal made by section 309(a) (as amended by the Senate amendment) shall not apply to petroleum products for vessels or aircraft in voyages or flights exclusively between Hawaii or Alaska and any airport or Pacific Coast Seaport of the United States.

Under subsection (b) of the new section 5, the amendment is to apply only with respect to articles withdrawn on or after the date of the enactment of the bill.

The House recedes. It is the understanding of all the conferees both on the part of the House and of the Senate that the amendment made by the new section 5 added by Senate amendment numbered 4 is not intended to change the status existing under the mandatory oil import program immediately prior to the effective date of this amendment with respect to petroleum supplies for vessels or aircraft operated by the United States. The conferees were assured by the Department of Defense that the mandatory oil import program will not be affected by the amendment.

W. D. MILLS,
AIME J. FORAND,
CECIL R. KING,
N. M. MASON,
JOHN W. BYRNES,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 11748 provides for a continuance for 1 year, from the close of June 30, 1960, to the close of June 30, 1961, of the suspension of duties on metal scrap. The Senate amended H.R. 11748 by adding three provisions to it.

The first amendment covered the context of S. 3349 which was introduced by Senator TALMADGE. This amendment provides for a new subparagraph of paragraph 758 to cover fresh coconut meat which has not been desiccated and fixes a rate of duty of 1/10 cents per pound. Paragraph 758 at present covers "coconut meat desiccated and shredded, or similarly prepared" and provides for a rate of duty of 1¾ cents per pound. Nondesiccated coconut meat, which was not an article of commerce at the time the Tariff Act was written, has not had a separate classification in the tariff and consequently has been dutiable at a rate of 20 percent ad valorem under the provisions of paragraph 1558 of the Tariff Act of 1930. The 20-percent ad valorem duty which is presently applied results in a specific rate of duty that is greater than that applicable to desiccated coconut meat despite the fact that such coconut meat has not been subject to desiccation. The proposed rate of duty of 1/10 cents per pound would equalize that rate with the present rate on desiccated coconut, on a fresh basis.

The House receded on this amendment.

The second amendment of the Senate provided for the duty-free importation of tight barrelheads of soft wood. This amendment would limit the transfer of barrelheads to the free list to those made of soft wood and which are used in the manufacture of tight barrels, that is to say, barrels designed for use in holding liquids. The text of this amendment is the same as H.R. 7216 introduced by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. The committee received favorable reports on this bill from all the reporting agencies. No objection was found to this amendment.

The House receded on this amendment.

The third amendment of the Senate to H.R. 11748 has the same purpose as S. 3021 introduced by Senator ENGLE and H.R. 9685 introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. KING] and H.R. 9920, introduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES]. This amendment would provide that steamship and air carriers operating between Alaska and Hawaii and any other part of the United States may be able to obtain certain supplies for use on vessels or aircrafts free of customs duty and excise tax. Prior to the admission of Alaska and Hawaii as States, steamship companies and air carriers operating between those territories and the continental United States were able to withdraw from customs and internal revenue custody certain supplies for use on vessels or aircraft engaged in such trade, free of customs duty and excise tax. This was possible under the provisions of section 309 of the Tariff Act of 1930. The Senate amendment would restore this status and would permit carriers terminating their routes at Alaska or Hawaii to enjoy the same exemption from duties and excise taxes as is enjoyed by carriers operating to foreign destinations via either of these two States. The Senate, however, limited the free withdrawal privilege so that it shall not apply to petroleum products for vessels or aircraft in voyages or flights exclusively between Hawaii and Alaska and any airport or Pacific coast seaport of the United States. The purpose of this limitation is to safeguard the mandatory oil import program that has been proclaimed by the President. In order to make certain that this oil import program will not be affected by this amendment, the conferees agreed to language in the conference report specifically stating that this shall be the case.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. On the first amendment with reference to coconut meat, what does that come in competition with here?

Mr. MILLS. It is imported under the provision of the Tariff Act assessing a rate of duty of 20 percent ad valorem under paragraph 758(b) for application to subject matters not specifically covered in the Tariff Act otherwise. That is, it is a general catch-all provision.

What we are doing now is writing a specific rate of duty applicable to coconut meat that has not been dessicated. Therefore, from the gentleman's point of view this is not an inducement to greater imports; this is actually a clarification to establish a specific rate of duty with respect to a specific article.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. But the specific question I asked the gentleman was, What does coconut meat come in competition with here in this country?

Mr. MILLS. I am not certain that there is anything that coconut meat comes in competition with in the United States.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Then it is purely a revenue provision.

Mr. MILLS. It was introduced in the Tax Committee of the Senate.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, the House-passed version of this legislation has as its purpose the restoration for a period of 1 year through June 30, 1961, of the suspension of duties on metal scrap which expired on June 30, 1960.

This legislation passed the House on May 19, 1960. The Senate in acting on H.R. 11748 approved three substantive amendments to the bill.

The first of these amendments would provide a separate tariff classification and a tariff rate of 1/10 cents per pound for certain coconut meat. Favorable executive department reports on this amendment were received from the Departments of Agriculture, State, and Treasury. The House conferees accepted the Senate amendment.

The second Senate amendment would permit the duty-free importation of tight barrelheads of softwood. The Senate Committee on Finance in approving this amendment received favorable reports from the Departments of Commerce, Treasury, and State, an informative report from the U.S. Tariff Commission, and a noncommittal report from the Department of Labor. The House conferees accepted this Senate amendment.

The third Senate-approved amendment to H.R. 11748 would provide that vessels and air carriers operating between the States of Alaska and Hawaii and any other part of the United States may be able to obtain certain supplies for use on such vessels or aircraft free of customs duty and excise tax. My distinguished committee colleagues, the Honorable CECIL R. KING, and the Honorable JOHN W. BYRNES, joined in cosponsoring legislation having a similar purpose, H.R. 9685 and H.R. 9920 respectively. In addition to the substance of the provisions of these House bills the Senate in approving this third amendment also approved as a part of its third amendment a provision pertaining to the status of petroleum products under this amendment. Under this petroleum provision it is provided that the free withdrawal privilege shall not be available to petroleum products for voyages or flights exclusively between Hawaii or Alaska and any airport or Pacific Coast seaport of the United States.

This reference in the Senate amendment to petroleum products raised the question of whether or not the amendment of section 309 of the Tariff Act of 1930 would affect the oil import quota program proclaimed by the President under the national security provision of the trade agreements legislation. There was some thought that this amendment would have the effect of excluding from the oil import quota program oil used on vessels and aircraft of the United States Government. It was the conclusion of the House-Senate conferees that this matter could best be dealt with, if necessary, by modifying the proclamation dealing with the subject of oil import quotas. In addition, the conferees received assurance from spokesmen for the Defense Department that there was no intention on the part of that Department to circumvent the oil import program in connection with the operation of United States Government vessels and aircraft between the mainland of the United States and the States of Alaska and Hawaii.

Mr. Speaker, I join with the distinguished committee chairman in urging my House colleagues to approve this conference agreement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GALLAUDET COLLEGE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ELLIOTT] is recognized.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the bill (H.R. 12699) to cancel a deed of trust to the United States from the predecessor in name of Gallaudet College and any evidences of indebtedness related to the same transaction, to quiet the college's title to property belonging to it, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) as used in this Act, the term "Institution" means the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb (also known as Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and, later, as the Columbia Institution for the Deaf), which was continued as a body corporate under the name of Gallaudet College by the Act approved June 18, 1954 (68 Stat. 265, Public Law 420, 83d Cong. ch. 324).

(b) All property conveyed by the Institution to the United States, as trustee, pursuant to certain provisos under the heading "Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb" in the Act of June 10, 1872, Forty-second Congress, second session (17 Stat. L. 347, at 360), by deed dated June 20, 1872, and recorded in liber 752, folio 272, of the land records for the District of Columbia, and all property otherwise made subject to such deed of trust, is hereby given, granted, remised, released, and quitclaimed unto Gallaudet College, free and clear of any trust, lien, encumbrance, or indebtedness arising out of said deed or under the said Act of June 10, 1872, and the college is forever discharged from the obligation of repayment, to the United States, of the sum referred to in said Act and in said deed, or in any note or other evidence of indebtedness executed in connection therewith.

SEC. 2. The said deed, and any note or other evidence of indebtedness executed in connection therewith, and all original papers with respect thereto, shall be delivered by the Administrator of General Services (or any other officer of the United States having custody thereof) to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (or his designee) and shall by the Secretary (or his designee) be canceled and returned to Gallaudet College for its historical records.

SEC. 3. Section 9(a) of the said Act of June 18, 1954 (repealing various statutes), is amended by inserting, immediately after the second paragraph following the first colon, the following new paragraph:

"The first and second provisos at the end of the third paragraph under the heading 'Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb' in the Act approved June 10, 1872, chapter 415, volume 17, Statutes at Large, page 347, which appear at page 360 and read as follows: 'Provided, That before the expenditure of any part of this appropriation, by proper deeds of conveyance, to be approved by the Attorney General of the United States, all the real estate now owned by the said Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb shall be vested in the United States, as trustee, for the sole use and purpose provided in the Act entitled "An Act to incorporate the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf, Dumb, and Blind," approved February 16, 1857, and the several Acts amendatory thereof: Provided, That, whenever Congress shall so determine, any part of said estate may be sold, and so much of the proceeds thereof as shall be needful for the purpose shall be applied to reimburse the United States for the expenditure herein provided.' ".

SEC. 4. (a) Subsection (a) of section 3 of the said Act of June 18, 1954, is amended by inserting at the beginning of such subsection, immediately before "Gallaudet College", the following: "Subject to the provisions of subsection (b),".

(b) Subsection (b) of such section 3 of the Act of June 18, 1954, is amended by inserting "real" immediately before "property" and by striking out "the United States, as trustee, for the sole use of".

SEC. 5. All Acts in conflict with this Act are repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUPPORT FOR LAND-GRANT COLLEGE INSTRUCTION

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING].

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up the resolution (H. Res. 586) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 10876 to amend section 22 (relating to the endowment and support of colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts) of the Act of June 29, 1935, to increase the authorized appropriation for resident teaching grants to land-grant institutions. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, the reading of the resolution makes clear the purpose of the bill made in order by the resolution. It is an open rule. I know of no controversy on the rule.

I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time on the rule, and I know of no opposition to the rule.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 10876) to amend section 22—relating to the endowment and support of colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts—of the act of June 29, 1935, to increase the authorized appropriation for resident teaching grants to land-grant institutions.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 10876) with Mr. MILLS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOEVEN] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this bill comes before the Committee with the unanimous support of the House Committee on Agriculture, which committee considered this matter very carefully. It comes before the committee with the support of the land-grant colleges of America. The fact is, I do not know of anyone who is opposed to the bill, so I shall not trespass very long upon your patience; however, I would like to make a brief statement with reference to the bill before us.

HISTORY OF THE LAND-GRANT COLLEGES

The national system of land-grant colleges and universities was established by the passage of the first Morrill Act in 1862. Under this act each State was offered grants of Federal land proportionate to its membership in Congress, the land to be sold and the proceeds invested as a permanent endowment fund with the income going for the support of teaching in at least one college in each State. The use of this money for the construction, maintenance or repair of buildings was prohibited. This college was to emphasize "agriculture, the mechanic arts, and subjects related thereto" and to include military tactics in its course offerings. The act provided that "other scientific and classical subjects should not be excluded" and said that the great objective was the "liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions of life."

It was apparently the intention of the Congress at the time of the passage of the first Morrill Act that the income from the national endowment would fully support instruction in these colleges. The States were required to furnish the buildings and equipment, or see that they were furnished. Control over the methods of instruction, and so forth, was reserved entirely to the States.

As time passed it became clear that the income from the land endowment would not support the instructional program of the colleges if they were to meet the needs of the young people of their States and of the Nation. Thus State support for instruction, as well as for buildings and equipment, became an increasingly important factor.

In 1890 the Congress recognized that Federal instructional support from the land-endowment investment was far short of what had been contemplated, and passed the second Morrill Act, providing direct annual grants to the colleges for instruction in agriculture, the mechanic arts, and subjects related thereto. This act was passed unanimously in both Houses of Congress. In 1907 it was amended and increased, and constitutes a permanent appropriation act in the amount of $2,550,000, representing $50,000 to each State and Puerto Rico for use in supporting instruction in the land-grant institutions of those States.

In 1935, the Congress included in the Bankhead-Jones Act, as authored by this committee, a provision which granted an additional $20,000 to each State for teaching purposes in its land-grant institutions, and an additional amount which is distributed to each State on the basis of population. The total of funds authorized under this title of the Bankhead-Jones Act is now $2,501,500, of which $1 million is distributed on the basis of $20,000 to each of the 50 States; and the remainder on a population basis. Puerto Rico is not included in this act, but would be included as the act is amended by this bill.

The enrollment since 1935 has increased by 340 percent in the land-grant colleges; the increase in the graduate enrollment has been 500 percent. The institutions are now receiving only a small part of their annual budget from the Federal Government.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion this is meritorious legislation, it should be enacted. The Senate has already passed an identical bill, S. 3451. Upon adoption of the House bill I will move to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill so that we can send it on to the White House.

I conclude by saying that the money made available by this bill will be available only for the payment of the salaries of the members of the faculties of these colleges and in keeping with the intent and purpose of the acts of Congress which I have heretofore referred to.

I do not know of any opposition, but I do know that the bill is important, and should be enacted in the present session. If there are any questions, a member of the committee or I will be able to answer such questions as may be propounded.

Mr. AVERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. AVERY. In examining the report I cannot see that there is any mention as to how much this bill is going to cost. The report shows how much money was allocated in 1959.

Mr. COOLEY. I am glad the gentleman asked that question, and I can answer it. Unfortunately, we did not include that in the committee report, but it is in the transcript of the hearings, page 15.

Under the original Morrill Act as amended there are $2,550,000 made available; from the Bankhead-Jones Act, the present appropriation is $2,501,500.

The total increase would be $9,448,500, or a grand total of $14,500,000. That is on page 15 of the hearings.

Mr. CURTIS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CURTIS of Massachusetts. I notice on page 9 of the committee report a statement by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare saying that:

> Any Federal aid to higher education should be pinpointed toward high priority needs and should be made available to any qualified institution of higher education able and willing to do its part in meeting these needs. This basic principle underlies the National Defense Education Act and all legislative proposals which this administration has made or endorsed in aid of higher education, including its pending proposal for Federal assistance in the construction of housing and academic facilities (H.R. 4267 and H.R. 4415).
> For these reasons we are unable to recommend enactment of H.R. 10876.

Now, I would like to have the comments of the gentleman on that statement.

Mr. COOLEY. We are dealing not with all of the institutions of higher learning; we are dealing with land-grant colleges provided for in this country about 99 years ago. They have been of great value to all of the people of the Nation, and they are still rendering a magnificent service. They are serving some of the highest priority needs in education-science and engineering.

The 68 land-grant colleges and universities constitute fewer than 5 percent of all the institutions of higher education of all kinds in the United States, and they enroll more than 21 percent of all the students in 4-year colleges and universities. But their significance is out of all proportion to their enrollment. They train 100 percent of all those who receive doctor's degrees in agriculture and more than 80 percent of all those getting bachelor's degrees.

In the basic biological sciences, they grant 56 percent of all doctor's degrees—the level of training required for research, and over 50 percent at the master's degree level, required for secondary teaching in this important field. Ninety-five percent of all entomologists in this country, the men and women who deal with our insect pests, get their first degrees at land-grant institutions, as do 55 percent of all people who start out in bacteriology and its related fields so essential in both agriculture and in the health sciences. About 37 percent of all students who later go into medicine, veterinary medicine, and dentistry get their first degrees at land-grant institutions. At the doctor's degree level of professional training these institutions graduate 93 percent of all so trained in the United States.

Thirty percent of all those who get master's degrees in mathematics in the United States—the level required for secondary school teaching—get these degrees at land-grant institutions; while at the doctoral level required for high-level research and college teaching the figure is more than 39 percent. In the related field of statistics, the land-grant institutions grant 48 percent of all first degrees and nearly 60 percent of all doctoral degrees.

In engineering, 41 percent of all engineers receiving their first degrees in the United States come from land-grant institutions; while at the doctor's degree level the figure is nearly 53 percent. And 72 percent of all the forestry students in the country get their degrees in the land-grant group.

In the basic physical sciences: The land-grant institutions give 42 percent of all doctoral degrees in all fields, including 36 percent of all physicists, 40 percent of all chemists, and 73 percent of all geologists.

Merely because Mr. Flemming wants to go far beyond the scope of this bill is no reason for us to defeat this measure, pending the date when Congress will accept his recommendation.

Mr. CURTIS of Massachusetts. That provision for land-grant colleges was nearly 100 years ago. Do you not think it is fair in this day and age, right now, that the money should go to educational needs on the basis recommended by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare?

Mr. COOLEY. If we should divide this small Federal contribution among all the institutions of higher learning, it would be so negligible that it would not amount to anything at all. Now, I do not think we ought to permit Mr. Flemming to advance his ideas here and defeat the purpose of Congress established 99 years ago and again reestablished in 1909 and again in 1935.

Mr. CURTIS of Massachusetts. How many States have land-grant colleges?

Mr. COOLEY. I think every State in the Union now has a land-grant college, and if this bill is passed, we will make funds available to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

Mr. SANTANGELO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SANTANGELO. I am going to support this measure, but I would like to ask the gentleman a few questions. What is the total amount of the increase in the appropriation to the land-grant colleges throughout the United States?

Mr. COOLEY. $9,448,500. That is found on the bottom of page 15 of the transcript.

Mr. SANTANGELO. So that this is an additional $9 million for the payment of teachers' salaries in land-grant colleges or agricultural colleges; is that correct?

Mr. COOLEY. Yes.

Mr. SANTANGELO. I trust that when the bill for Federal aid to education comes up we can get some sympathetic consideration from the gentleman that we are going to give him on this bill.

Mr. COOLEY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation provides for an increased authorization for the amount of money which can be appropriated by the Congress each year for resident teaching grants for land-grant colleges. The bill does not appropriate any money itself. It simply raises from $5 million per year to $14½ million the amount that can be appropriated.

The gentleman from Utah [Mr. DIXON], ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Research and Extension, will give you the details.

This $9½ million increase in the authorization is justified, in view of the tremendous contribution that the land-grant colleges make to agriculture, national defense, and to higher learning in general. These fine institutions, like the great Iowa State University at Ames, Iowa, have helped make America the greatest breadbasket in the history of all mankind. They have provided thousands of junior officers for our armed services and they have educated millions of our citizens.

Nearly 100 years ago the Federal Government inaugurated the land-grant college program. The Morrill Act was signed by President Lincoln on July 2, 1862. It offered to endow at least one college in each State, in order to serve the interests of the people of that State. Through the years the basic act has been amended, but the basic purposes of agriculture and military science have been preserved. The last major amendment regarding Federal contribution to resident teaching grants was in 1935 under the Bankhead-Jones Act. This bill will bring up to date that formula put into effect some 25 years ago. The increased authorization is a reflection of both increased student populations and the decreased value of the dollar. It has the suport of farm organizations, educators, and our Committee on Agriculture. It is a sound and justifiable bill which should be enacted.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEVEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to associate myself with the remarks of my chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], and the ranking minority member of our committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOEVEN].

I do not know of any institutions in our country which have made greater constributions to the economic and social development of our Nation, as well as to the defense of the country through the ROTC programs, than the land-grant colleges. One of these fine institutions—Mississippi State University—is located in the district I am honored to represent.

Personally, I think this legislation is long overdue. I was very happy to join with my colleagues on the Committee on Agriculture in reporting the bill and I commend it to the favorable consideration of the House.

Mr. HOEVEN. I thank the gentleman for his very valuable contribution.

Mr. McINTIRE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEVEN. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. McINTIRE. Mr. Chairman, I, too, want to join the chairman of our committee and our ranking minority member, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOEVEN], and others, in full support of this legislation. Those of us who have had the privilege of attending land-grant institutions, particularly in the field of agriculture, can understand the importance that these institutions have had in the field of agriculture as well as in other fields.

I certainly feel that every State in the Union has had, through this system of land-grant colleges, one of the finest programs of higher education for the young people of all economic levels.

I certainly join in support of this legislation.

Mr. HOEVEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HECHLER].

Mr. HECHLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to commend the Committee on Agriculture on both sides of the aisle for reporting out this excellent piece of legislation which I think will strengthen the excellent program inaugurated close to a century ago under the Morrill Act.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that education is the foremost of our national priorities.

Here we have a program that is far from new. The century-old land grant aid program is firmly rooted in history and has been an unqualified success. The bill before us, H.R. 10876, does nothing to create new directions or to radically alter this program. It merely gives it a badly needed shoring up.

Because of inflation and the stabilization of funds for land-grant colleges, the Federal Government is not participating nearly so fully as it was a quarter century ago. There are few who would deny that this is not wise in a day when education is such a ciritical national and global problem. The bill before us does not even restore Federal participation to its level of 25 years ago on a percentage basis. It merely steps up participation to a figure closer to the 1935 level; this, while a small step, is indisputably one in the right direction.

To illustrate how dramatically Federal participation has fallen off in the past quarter century, I need only look at the figures for West Virginia.

In 1935, State tax funds appropriated to land-grant institutions totaled $1,262,000, while the Federal Government contributed $70,000. This represented 5.25 percent of the total.

In 1959–60, State funds for these same institutions amounted to $10,600,000. But the Federal contribution amounted to only $90,000—less than 1 percent of the total operating budget.

Thus, while State funds increased about 900 percent, Federal funds increased only about 28 percent. This is woefully inadequate.

Even under H.R. 10876, Federal participation still would not approach 5.25 percent in West Virginia. It would rise only about 2 percent. And this increase of about $250,000 would be more than matched by a State contribution already on schedule for 1960–61, appropriating $1,250,000 more in State funds.

As I say, this is only a small step forward—but it is one that the Congress certainly ought to take.

The president of West Virginia University, Elvis Stahr, made a special trip to testify in a dramatic and convincing way of the need for this legislation. President Stahr forcefully demonstrated the progress achieved under the meager authorization which has been held down to the same level since 1935. He conclusively indicated the great advantages which would accrue to our entire Nation through the expansion of this program.

Mr. Chairman, there are those who inquire whether the taxpayers will suffer from an increased financial burden. I say it is about time we ask: Can the country afford not to invest in a program which will help both the individual taxpayer and the security of the Nation?

I strongly support and urge the overwhelming adoption of H.R. 10876.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, this bill is a thoroughly good measure and a much-needed measure. I wish every Member of this fine body could have heard the pleas that were presented for it. If they had, there would be no hesitancy in passing it, as there was no hesitancy on the part of the great Committee on Agriculture which passed it with only two dissenting votes.

In answer to one question that was just raised I will say that there are 68 land-grant colleges and universities in the United States.

Every State has a land-grant college. Without this bill, too, for the information of the Members of the House, Puerto Rico would have no participation in the land-grant college program. We want Puerto Rico to have the same opportunity as all of our States have.

Our chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] has explained his bill. I introduced a bill that is identical with the chairman's bill.

The original Morrill Act passed in 1862 conceived the idea that proceeds from the land grants would take care of the salaries of the instructors in the land-grant colleges, but this has fallen far short. We know, because the act had to be amended in 1907 to give $50,000 more to each State to take care of the salaries. The last time it was amended was in 1935. Since that time we have had an inflation of 100 percent, and since that time, 1935, the population has increased 40 percent. The total enrollment in land-grant colleges has increased 340 percent, and the graduate enrollment, which is the most expensive division of the land-grant colleges, has increased 500 percent. The enrollment in the land-grant colleges will double by 1970, so you can get some idea of the basis of the need.

Further, in 1953 40.5 percent of the staffs of the colleges and universities in the United States had doctor's degrees. Of all the new teachers hired in 1953 and 1954, only 31.4 percent had doctor's degrees. The trend has been gradually down. In 1958 and 1959 only 23.8 percent of all new teachers in our colleges and universities had doctor's degrees. So you can see the rapid way in which the scholastic standards of the staffs of our colleges and universities are deteriorating.

All we have done in arriving at this figure of $9 million-plus increase is to take into consideration the 100 percent inflation factor and the 40 percent increase in population factor. This request is modest. Based upon increased enrollment, a $30 million increase would be justifiable.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIXON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. How much is this going to cost the taxpayers of our land?

Mr. DIXON. Does the gentleman mean the increase or the total appropriation?

Mr. JENSEN. The total appropriation.

Mr. DIXON. The total appropriation is $14,500,000. The increase requested is $9,440,000.

Mr. JENSEN. What is the gentleman's reason for being in favor of this bill? Why cannot Puerto Rico stand on their own feet? We have given them everything with a ring around it. Now we are helping in this respect with our tax dollars.

Mr. DIXON. I cannot conceive of the gentleman from Iowa, which has one of the finest land-grant colleges in the world and which has benefited humanity throughout the world, questioning why Puerto Rico should not have a little of the same enlightenment.

Mr. JENSEN. It would be all right if they paid for it. We are paying for the school in Iowa. Why does not Puerto Rico pay for their own colleges and schools? They are financially better able to take care of their educational problems than is the United States.

Mr. DIXON. Puerto Rico will probably have to pay the largest proportion, as the States are paying, for the program.

I would like to say for the gentleman's information that in 1935 to 1937 the Federal Government paid 22 percent of Alabama's cost of land-grant colleges.

Mr. JENSEN. Alabama is in the mainland of the United States.

Mr. DIXON. Yes, but Puerto Rico will have to carry most of the load. The Federal Government pays only 2.1 to 4 percent in most States. Arkansas did have 30 percent of her salaries from the Federal Government. Now it is only 1.45 percent. Colorado did have 23.37 percent paid by the Federal Government. Now it is only 2.55 percent. Even if this bill is passed, Arkansas would have only 4 percent of her salaries paid. You can go on down the list of States and see how the Federal Government has pushed nearly the entire burden of these salaries onto the States.

Mr. JENSEN. That is quite beside the point.

Mr. DIXON. No. I think it is right on the point.

Mr. JENSEN. Puerto Rico is well able to take care of their own educational problems.

Mr. DIXON. The biggest proportion of their expense will be paid by them. The Federal Government will give them only a very small fraction.

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIXON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. Puerto Rico has a magnificent university which it has developed. That is no excuse. Neither are two of our recent States on the mainland. Speaking of sending American dollars to Puerto Rico, the people of Puerto Rico are American citizens.

Mr. DIXON. The people are American citizens, and I think they should have the same right as every other American citizen. Also, Puerto Rico will stand practically all of these expenses in any event. Funds from this bill do not amount to a drop in the bucket. All the bill does is to place land-grant colleges on the same status as they were in 1935. All this increase does is to provide 100 percent for inflation and 40 percent for the increase in the population of the United States. It provides nothing for the 340 percent increased student population. It provides nothing for the 500 percent increase in graduate students which is so expensive.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIXON. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. FOGARTY. I am in favor of this bill, but what is the gentleman's reaction to the position of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare on the ground that it does not go far enough as far as teaching in higher education is concerned?

Mr. DIXON. I think basically the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare does not favor Federal aid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. DIXON] has expired.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes. That is one thing, the matter of policy.

The second thing about their position is the inference that this is a new Federal aid bill being passed. We had the second Morrill Act before the turn of the century, and the first Morrill Act was in 1862. So this statute has been on the books all the time. It is not a new Federal aid bill at all.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIXON. I yield.

Mr. FOGARTY. The sum of money recommended here is an annual appropriation. We could never cut it back.

Mr. DIXON. If the gentleman will recall, we are appropriating under these acts now.

Mr. FOGARTY. The additional amount in this bill is $9 million.

I want to associate myself with the gentleman on that. I am for this bill. I think it should be enacted. I have never been ashamed to say that it is a federally aided program. It is a Federal aid program for education.

Mr. DIXON. I appreciate what the gentleman has said, because I have been an administrator of a great agricultural college, the Utah State University, and I have seen our good people taken away time after time, people who were in key positions, taken away by industry to do research at double the salary we were able to pay them.

If ever there was need, that need is right here. Furthermore the enrollment of these colleges is going to be doubled within the next 10 years. We just do not conceive what is ahead of these institutions by way of problems.

Mr. KYL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIXON. I yield.

Mr. KYL. The language on page 9 to which the previous gentleman referred is subject to misinterpretation. In this act we are dealing with Government aided institutions, State universities, and so on.

Mr. DIXON. Yes, operating under laws that are already established.

Mr. KYL. And the other aid to which the Secretary refers, the National Defense Education Act, is largely a different subject, for under that act the aid instead of being given directly to the universities was given to the student to enable him to attend the university, and the university was then paid proportionately. There is a difference which should be brought out.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIXON. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. How much money is it going to take to support this legislation in fiscal 1961?

Mr. DIXON. In 1961 it will take $14,500,000. They are already spending $5,051,000. It will take $9,440,000 some-odd more than they are spending this year.

Mr. JENSEN. The Appropriations Committees of Congress will be asked to supply these millions. So the members of the Committee on Appropriations, of which I am one, will have an opportunity to reduce this amount, or to give them nothing in addition to the amount they now receive under present law. Is my assumption correct?

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIXON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HOEVEN. The fact is, in further reply to the gentleman from Iowa who is a member of the Appropriations Committee, that the committee would appropriate only such items as are definitely justified under the authorization legislation. There is nothing to be concerned about; it is simply an authorization, and the Appropriations Committee has to determine what sum of money will be appropriated under proper justification. Is not that correct?

Mr. DIXON. That is my understanding.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIXON. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Subject to the approval of the House of Representatives and the United States Senate.

Mr. DIXON. The purpose for which this money is spent has been questioned.

What are these funds used for? Russell I. Thackery, executive secretary of the American Association of Land Grant Colleges and State Universities, provided me with a complete breakdown which can be found in the form of a table on page 70 of the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture, May 16 and 24, 1960. Of course these funds are for salaries exclusively, and I quote from the Morrill Act, "for instruction in agriculture, the mechanic arts, the English language, and the various branches of mathematical, physical, natural, and economic sciences with special reference to their applications in the industries of life, and to the facilities for such instruction."

The land-grant colleges are very carefully audited to see that none of these funds are used for buildings, sites, land, administrative, clerical or nonteaching staff. Mr. Thackery says the funds may not be used for "salaries of instructors in philosophy, psychology, ethics, logic, history, civil government and ancient and modern languages."

The U.S. Office of Education limits them to:

First. Instruction in agriculture.

Second. Instruction in mechanic arts—various fields and subjects include the major branches of engineering.

Third. Instruction in English language.

Fourth. Instruction in natural and physical sciences.

Fifth. Instruction in economic sciences—including political economy and home economics.

Sixth. Special preparation of teachers—specific vocational courses are included, but general courses are excluded.

The table found in the hearings on page 70 shows a total of $5,051,622.73 spent in 1959, itemized as follows: Salaries, $4,919,805.82; facilities, $131,816.91; agriculture, $792,445.73; mechanic arts, $1,415,823.04; English language, $656,806.11; mathematical science, $446,076.24; natural and physical science, $1,342,139.65; economic science, $370,883.59; special preparation of teachers, $27,448.37.

How does the Federal support for salary purposes compare with the State support over the years?

In every case, even with the enactment of H.R. 10876, the percentage of Federal support will be substantially less than it was in 1937. I shall cite only a few cases:

State	1937–38	1957–58	Under H.R. 10876 and H.R. 10974 (using 1957–58 expenditures as the base)
Alabama	22.82	2.19	6.24
Arkansas	30.40	1.45	4.13
Colorado	23.37	2.55	7.27
Connecticut	23.98	1.69	4.82
Delaware	33.84	3.68	10.52
Idaho	17.16	3.22	9.19
Maine	16.65	3.16	9.03
Mississippi	31.08	3.22	9.17
Montana	40.02	3.10	8.85
Nevada	40.95	4.38	12.50
New Mexico	50.90	4.70	13.42
North Dakota	38.32	4.30	12.27
Rhode Island	39.21	3.87	11.00
South Carolina	27.99	3.48	9.93
South Dakota	28.18	3.38	9.65
Utah	22.58	2.97	8.50

The House Agriculture Committee passed this bill with only two dissenting votes and the Senate passed it without a dissenting vote. I therefore urge the full support of the House for this splendid measure.

The year 1962 will mark the 100th anniversary of the founding of the land-grant colleges. In the year after next—1962—we should have a great national centennial celebration. It was in the darkest days of the Civil War that our great President, Abraham Lincoln, signed the Morrill Act for the cultural and practical education of the common man. This initiated a revolutionary change in the philosophy of education and was in sharp contradiction to the concept of higher education only for the elite which had dominated world thinking up to Lincoln's time. The land-grant colleges go into all of the homes that do all of the work in every American community and help these people to do that work better and to live more happily.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PIRNIE].

Mr. PIRNIE. Mr. Chairman, consideration of this legislation by our committee provided an opportunity to review some of the accomplishments attributable to the Morrill Act through its development of the land-grant institutions. We have found these achievements to be outstanding and to have contributed a great deal to our national strength. Subsequently, I thought it might be helpful if I attempted to review what had occurred in the leading land-grant university in our area, Cornell University, in the State of New York, since 1935 when we last fixed the appropriations for this purpose.

We find that in 1935 the operating expenses of the university were $7 million, while today it is $52 million. Its faculty then consisted of 441 members, while now there are 1,100. In the College of Agriculture, one of the main objectives under the act, we find that the students have increased in enrollment from 1,494 in 1935 to 2,392. In the entire university it has approximately doubled, from 5,910 to 11,191.

It might be of interest to this body to know what impact the university has on foreign countries. There are at the present time 753 foreign students from 78 countries, many of them coming from the Far East. Latin America has 86, the Near East 54, and Africa 39 of these foreign students. Of these foreign students the College of Agriculture enrolls 36 percent, or 271.

I think it is very significant that we are able in this way to provide the kind of education which can lift the economic well-being of the underdeveloped countries.

There is another factor which I would like to mention to the House, and that is the impact of the military training which has been provided by our land-grant institutions. If you will refer to the committee report you will find a paragraph on that subject. It states that between World War I and World War II annually from 50 to 70 percent of all the young men receiving commissions did so through the Reserve Officers' Training Corps program in these same institutions. General Marshall paid tribute to this source of commissioned strength, and our President, Dwight D. Eisenhower, while Chief of Staff, made a similar observation.

We now find that approximately one-third of all of our commissioned strength is now supplied by the land-grant institutions, that is, exclusive of those coming from the service academies. It would seem that the original purpose of the Morrill Act, which was enacted, as has been stated, approximately 100 years ago, is being fulfilled by these institutions which are a credit to their States and to this Nation.

We find that the amount of increased aid will be distributed in direct proportion to the formula which we have heretofore approved. The total is clearly needed in the light of new conditions.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I hope that this House will continue its enthusiastic support of this fine program.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIRNIE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HOEVEN. The gentleman made reference to the increased enrollment of students in the land-grant colleges and the increased contributions being made by the States. Reference was heretofore made to the Iowa University at Ames, Iowa. I want to call the committee's attention to the fact that in 1935 the State of Iowa contributed to Iowa State College, which is now a State university, $2,175,000, at which time we had 4,412 students. This year the State of Iowa is contributing $11,500,000 for 9,252 students. In other words, our student population has doubled since 1935 at Iowa State and the State support has increased almost sixfold. I simply want to point out that even though the student population is increasing, the State of Iowa is certainly rising to its responsibility in providing the necessary appropriations.

Mr. PIRNIE. I thank the distinguished ranking minority member of our committee. The record of his State is highly commendable. I am glad to say it has its counterparts elsewhere.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to pay tribute to the chairman of our committee and to all the members of this committee who have attacked this problem so seriously, appreciating that education in the field of agriculture is a great source of economic strength to the Nation and that these land-grant colleges are effectively serving the very commendable purpose of this founding.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation. In my district is a great A. & M. school, now changed to a State university, at Fort Collins. This legislation is carrying forward one of the great historic acts of this Congress.

About 100 years ago the Congress passed the first Morrill Act. At that time four out of every five persons living in the United States were living in rural areas, on the farm, to maintain the fifth person in the city. Some years ago a great farm leader asked the question "Why are farmers elsewhere in the world usually peasants, while our farmers are successful businessmen?" And, he attributed the answer to the great contribution of our A. & M. schools which were built as a result of the first and second Morrill Acts, and subsequent State legislation. Now, in the 100 years since this act was passed, we have increased the U.S. population sixfold. Now we have one person living on the farm for eight persons in the cities; that is to say that the farm family is serving eight nonfarm families. As the result of this program, we have brought the industrial revolution to agriculture right along with the industrial revolution in the cities. The American people are prosperous; they enjoy this rich development because Congress has had the foresight and the wisdom to endow and to support colleges which would see to it that the techniques of science and technology would immediately be made available on the farm.

A successful American farmer these days, has $50,000 or $100,000 invested. I think everyone knows down in his heart that the American farmer, is a success, not just because of his intrinsic merit or because he is an American, but because the Federal Government and the several State governments have invested in colleges and universities and experiment stations to help in carrying forward the progress of agricultural science and the mechanic arts. These programs have served not only the American farmers, but, in the years that lie ahead, as we have just been told, will help to bring the same agricultural-industrial revolution to other parts of the world, so that men everywhere may not just walk behind the plow or carry the hoe, but may live in freedom, may live in something better than ignorance, and misery, and squalor. So I think it is entirely proper on this occasion that we should extend this act.

Mr. SANTANGELO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SANTANGELO. Can the gentleman, or perhaps some member of the committee advise me what is the basis for the distribution of these funds? As I read the report it says $20,000 for each State, and then distribution of funds is based upon population; is that correct, I will ask the chairman?

Mr. COOLEY. That is right.

Mr. SANTANGELO. There is no means test in this program?

Mr. COOLEY. It is based on population.

Mr. SANTANGELO. As I understand it then, the distribution of these funds is not on the basis of need, but is on the basis of the population of the State; is that the agricultural population or the total population?

Mr. COOLEY. The total population.

Mr. SANTANGELO. And the amount each State receives is $20,000 before distribution of the remaining funds?

Mr. COOLEY. That is right.

Mr. SANTANGELO. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. McGOVERN].

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of the legislation before us. I have always thought that the heart of good education is good teaching. I remember a conversation with the president of our South Dakota State College a couple of years ago in which he said that his most serious problem was his inability to retain the services of many of his best professors because of inadequate salaries.

This legislation will improve the salary level of some of the key faculty members of our State colleges. I hope that the measure will be approved.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 10876.

The bill, which has been adequately explained, has the support of the land-grant colleges and universities of the Nation, all of which offer courses for teaching in residence education.

In my congressional district is located the Pennsylvania State University—the land-grant university of the Keystone State—which is charged with the responsibility of making education at the higher level available at low cost to those students who can benefit from it.

Early last month Dr. Eric A. Walker, president of Pennsylvania State University, wrote me at length concerning H.R. 10876, and in doing so emphasized the importance of making funds authorized in the bill available to the land-grant institutions in order for them to fulfill their obligations as embodied in the act of Congress which created them.

At this point I should like to read from Dr. Walker's letter, dated June 16, 1960:

DEAR MR. VAN ZANDT: You are aware of the great demand that is being made on the land-grant institutions to increase their facilities in order to serve a greater number of students over the next decade. It has also been emphasized that such an increase in these funds is imperative in order to add additional teachers to take care of this increase in enrollment.

Recently I appeared before Governor Lawrence's committee on higher education to present the serious problems that are confronting the Pennsylvania State University with respect to future enrollments. The Governor's commission on higher education in 1957 pointed out that in Pennsylvania in 1955 there were approximately 558,000 college-age population and by 1970 there would be over 866,000 children of college age, or an increase of 55.5 percent. The university in 1958 prepared a long-range plan based on these data in order to determine what it should do to help the Commonwealth to meet this crisis.

In 1955, the Pennsylvania State University enrolled 12.3 percent of all full-time students in all colleges in Pennsylvania, or 14,054. A conservative projection to 1970 indicated that the university must increase this percentage to 17.8 or 43,179 students. In 1930 about 80 percent of the full-time enrollment in Pennsylvania colleges and universities was in private institutions, but since that time the percentage has been decreasing until by the fall of 1959 only 72 percent of the total were in private colleges, or about 93,500 out of 130,000 students enrolled in Pennsylvania. This of course places a great burden on the public institutions.

The proposed funds to be made available by H.R. 10876 will aid considerably in securing the additional teaching staff necessary for these projected enrollments at the university. Even now we could enroll 1,200 more students in the fall of 1960 than in 1959, but because of lack of funds to secure additional teaching staff members we are forced to retain our same enrollment although we have sufficient facilities to house and accommodate many more students. I want to point out that these 1,200 students have been refused admission simply because funds are not available for adding new teachers, and 5,000 more have been refused admission because facilities are not available.

The Committee on Agriculture has enhanced our chances of meeting these needs by favorably reporting out the bills in question, and I hope Congress will recognize the importance of this proposed legislation and act favorably upon your bill. It is one of the most important steps that can be taken to assure many more deserving students the opportunity of securing additional education, which of course is so vitally important to the welfare of our country.

Very truly yours,

ERIC A. WALKER,
President, Pennsylvania State University.

Mr. Chairman, Dr. Walker's letter explains rather fully the situation facing the Pennsylvania State University. As the testimony taken by the committee shows, a similar situation is faced by the other land-grant colleges and universities of the Nation, therefore enactment of this bill is imperative.

In approving H.R. 10876 the Congress will assure land-grant colleges and universities additional funds to aid them to meet the present and future demands and thus assist many students to secure a higher education.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 22 of the Act of June 29, 1935, as amended (7 U.S.C. 329), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 22. In order to provide for the more complete endowment and support of the colleges in the several States and Puerto Rico entitled to the benefits of the Act entitled 'An Act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts,' approved July 2, 1862, as amended and supplemented (7 U.S.C. 301–328), there are hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following amounts:

"(a) For the first fiscal year beginning after the date of enactment of this Act, and for each fiscal year thereafter, $7,650,000; and

"(b) For the first fiscal year beginning after the date of enactment of this Act, and for each fiscal year thereafter, $4,300,000.

"The sums appropriated in pursuance of paragraph (a) shall be paid annually to the several States and Puerto Rico in equal shares. The sums appropriated in pursuance of paragraph (b) shall be in addition to sums appropriated in pursuance of paragraph (a) and shall be allotted and paid annually to each of the several States and Puerto Rico in the proportion to which the total population of each State and Puerto Rico bears to the total population of all the States and Puerto Rico as determined by the last preceding decennial census. Sums appropriated in pursuance of this section shall be in addition to sums appropriated or authorized under such Act of July 2, 1862, as amended and supplemented, and shall be applied only for the purposes of the colleges defined in such Act, as amended and supplemented. The provisions of law applicable to the use and payments of sums under the Act entitled

'An Act to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts established under the provisions of an Act of Congress approved July 2, 1862,' approved August 30, 1890, as amended and supplemented, shall apply to the use and payment of sums appropriated in pursuance of this section."

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation. I wish to say that for the past 14 years, since these appropriations have come before our committee we have allowed the full amount requested each year. I think it was in 1953 that there was an attempt to cut this appropriation. There was such a demand from all over the country that it be continued that our committee reversed itself at that time, and it has become practically an annual appropriation. I am in favor of this increased appropriation because I think these land-grant colleges have been doing a wonderful job. However, I think we should also note that many of us who have favored a school construction law in this country have always referred to this kind of Federal aid to education that has been on our statute books for a hundred years. I think everyone admits that this is Federal aid to education. It has been a way of aiding education that has been acceptable to the vast majority of our people. When we vote for this legislation today, I hope those of you who vote for it will remember those of us who are asking for a school construction bill to be passed in this session of Congress before we adjourn, and remember that we also voted for this kind of legislation knowing full well that it is Federal aid to education.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MILLS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 10876) to amend section 22 (relating to the endowment and support of colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts) of the act of June 29, 1935, to increase the authorized appropriation for resident teaching grants to land-grant institutions, pursuant to House Resolution 586, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill S. 3450, an identical bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 22 of the Act of June 29, 1935, as amended (7 U.S.C. 329), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 22. In order to provide for the more complete endowment and support of the colleges in the several States and Puerto Rico entitled to the benefits of the Act entitled 'An Act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts,' approved July 2, 1862, as amended and supplemented (7 U.S.C. 301–328), there are hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following amounts:

"(a) For the first fiscal year beginning after the date of enactment of this Act, and for each fiscal year thereafter, $7,650,000; and

"(b) For the first fiscal year beginning after the date of enactment of this Act, and for each fiscal year thereafter, $4,300,000.

"The sums appropriated in pursuance of paragraph (a) shall be paid annually to the several States and Puerto Rico in equal shares. The sums appropriated in pursuance of paragraph (b) shall be in addition to sums appropriated in pursuance of paragraph (a) and shall be allotted and paid annually to each of the several States and Puerto Rico in the proportion to which the total population of each State and Puerto Rico bears to the total population of all the States and Puerto Rico as determined by the last preceding decennial census. Sums appropriated in pursuance of this section shall be in addition to sums appropriated or authorized under such Act of July 2, 1862, as amended and supplemented, and shall be applied only for the purposes of the colleges defined in such Act, as amended and supplemented. The provisions of law applicable to the use and payment of sums under the Act entitled 'An Act to apply a partion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts established under the provisions of an Act of Congress approved July 2, 1862,' approved August 30, 1890, as amended and supplemented, shall apply to the use and payment of sums appropriated in pursuance of this section."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 10876) was laid on the table.

PAYMENT OF RELOCATION ALLOWANCE BY FEDERAL AVIATION AGENCY

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 558 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2467) to amend the Act of September 7, 1950, to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to reimburse owners and tenants of lands acquired for Chantilly Airport for their moving expenses. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, after which I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 558 provides for consideration of H.R. 2467, a bill to amend the act of September 7, 1950, to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to reimburse owners and tenants of lands acquired for Chantilly Airport for their moving expenses. The resolution provides for an open rule with 1 hour of general debate.

H.R. 2467, as amended, would provide what could be termed a "relocation allowance" to reimburse the owners and tenants of land heretofore or hereafter acquired for the United States by the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency for expenses and other losses incurred by such persons in the process and as a direct result of moving themselves, their families, and possessions because of such acquisition of land.

The Administrator would be authorized, to the extent administratively determined to be fair and reasonable, under regulations prescribed by him, to reimburse the owners and tenants for moving costs and other losses. The total of such reimbursement would in no event exceed 25 percent of the fair value of such parcel of land as determined by the Administrator. Further, no payment would be made unless an application therefor, supported by an itemized statement of the expenses, losses, and damages so incurred, is submitted to the Administrator within 1 year following the date of such acquisition or within 1 year following the date that the property is vacated by the applicant, whichever date is later; except that in the case of land acquired on or after July 1, 1958, and before the date of the enactment of this legislation, the application for reimbursement may be made within 1 year following the date the property is vacated by the applicant or within 1 year following the date of enactment of this legislation, whichever date is later.

In fairness to those persons forced to move to make way for the new airport for the Washington area, provision should be made to reimburse them for their moving expenses under the terms of the proposed legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of House Resolution 558.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Does not the gentleman think this will be something of a precedent?

Mr. ALLEN. Personally, I am willing to wait and hear all those who held hearings on this bill. This is merely on the adoption of the rule.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2467) to amend the act of September 7, 1950, to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to reimburse owners and tenants of lands acquired for Chantilly Airport for their moving expenses.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 2467 with Mr. THOMPSON of Texas in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 3 of the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the construction, protection, operation, and maintenance of a public airport in or in the vicinity of the District of Columbia", approved September 7, 1950 (64 Stat. 770), is amended (1) by inserting "(a)" immediately after "SEC. 3."; and (2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary is authorized, to the extent administratively determined to be fair and reasonable, under regulations prescribed by him, to reimburse the owners and tenants of land heretofore or hereafter acquired in connection with the airport at Chantilly, in Fairfax County, Virginia, for expenses and other losses and damages incurred by such owners and tenants, respectively, in the process and as a direct result of the moving of themselves and their families and possessions because of such acquisition of land, which reimbursement shall be in addition to, but not in duplication of, any payments in respect of such acquisition as may otherwise be authorized by law. The total of such reimbursement to the owners and tenants of any parcel of land shall in no event exceed 25 per centum of the fair value of such parcel of land as determined by the Secretary. No payment in reimbursement shall be made unless application therefor, supported by an itemized statement of the expenses, losses, and damages so incurred, shall have been submitted to the Secretary within one year following the date of such acquisition. The authority conferred by this subsection shall be delegated by the Secretary to such responsible officers or employees as he may determine. All functions performed under this subsection shall be exempt from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U.S.C. 1001–1011), except section 3 thereof (5 U.S.C. 1002)."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BENNETT] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the legislation presently before the House was introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BROYHILL]. It authorizes the payment of moving expenses of the people who were moved away from the Chantilly Airport area. Under the present law by which the Government acquired the property in the Chantilly area, no provision is made to take care of the expenses to be incurred by those people who were forced out of their homes and off of their property for the cost of moving their personal property away from the area. All of this property was acquired by condemnation.

The Federal Aviation Agency interposed an objection to the bill, on the ground that it should not be special legislation to take care of those people, but rather it should be all-inclusive and general authority to cover similar cases generally.

The subcommittee considered, held hearings on this bill, and decided that this authority should be granted generally to the Federal Aviation Agency. Therefore the bill presented to you is in the form of a committee substitute for the bill introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BROYHILL] and is in no way special interest or special purpose legislation.

In the opinion of the committee this is nothing but morally right. These people who were moved off of this property had no choice about being moved. They were reimbursed for the value of their real property, but the expenses of moving their personal belongings away from the area fell upon their own shoulders. In my opinion this is a Government responsibility and should be discharged.

Mr. RAINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. RAINS. As I understand, the language in this bill gives general authority for the Federal Aviation Agency to pay the moving expenses of those people whose property under eminent domain was taken for the Federal airport. Is that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct, and whatever other uses the Federal Aviation Agency may have for property when it goes into an area.

Mr. RAINS. Is it in the law also that any other agency of the Federal Government that exercises eminent domain, whether it is the military, or the U.S. Engineers, for example, also have authority under this bill to pay moving expenses to people they dislocate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; the defense agencies have authority under existing law, however.

Mr. RAINS. Do they have authority under existing law when the Government takes property for a reservoir behind a Federal dam?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

The Department of the Interior also has this authority under existing law. The Departments of the Army, Navy, and Air Force also have this same authority. In view of the fact, however, that the Federal Aviation Agency is the only agency involved here and to go beyond the Federal Aviation Agency would be to exceed the jurisdiction of our subcommittee, it was necessary for us to confine this legislation to the Federal Aviation Agency exclusively.

Mr. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. HOLTZMAN. Did the Federal Aviation Agency recommend the adoption of this legislation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Federal Aviation Agency recommended the adoption of general authority legislation, just what the House has before it now. They opposed legislation dealing specifically and exclusively with the Chantilly matter.

Mr. HOLTZMAN. If the gentleman will yield further, did they not say in their letter signed by General Quesada that they recommended taking no action on this legislation in view of the fact that the General Services Administration was considering the same approach to this problem?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not recall that they recommended that we take no action. I believe the General Services Administration had recommended general legislation to the Congress, yes, but our subcommittee does not have jurisdiction over the other agencies. We have, therefore, confined it to the Federal Aviation Agency in this particular instance.

Mr. HOLTZMAN. I am reading from page 8 of the report, the last paragraph which says:

> In conclusion, I would like to reiterate a point made in this Agency's letter of July 2, 1959. The General Services Administration is preparing a draft proposal to accomplish reimbursement for moving expenses on a governmentwide basis. Since this is the case, the Federal Aviation Agency would recommend taking no action at the present time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I say that letter was directed to the committee and was based on the original legislation introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BROYHILL].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. It is fact, is it not, that the Bureau of the Budget recommended this legislation if it was general as to the Aviation Agency?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is right. The only objection that has been raised is limiting this authority to the Chantilly area.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The Interior Department which requires a great deal of land for many, many purposes already has the same authority you are asking in this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Is it not a fact that if the Department of the Interior was designated as the agency to buy this land it would already have been taken care of, and it would not be necessary if the Department of the Interior had acquired this land instead of the Aviation Agency?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is true. If the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, or Defense Department had acquired this land they would have had the authority to make these reimbursements.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. FALLON. Did I understand the gentleman to say that under the road program, people who were forced to move because of road construction were reimbursed for moving expenses?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not say under the road program. I said that if the Department of the Interior had condemned this land they would be authorized to do it, as well as the Defense Department.

Mr. FALLON. I might say to the gentleman that on a number of occasions amendments have been offered to the road bill to provide moving expenses, but those amendments have been defeated in our committee.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. I think we should get this issue clearly understood at this point. If the Members will look at the report, page 2, they will find that the Federal Aviation Agency would, however, favor H.R. 2467 if it were amended to make the authority provided therein generally applicable. Such authority is now accorded—get this, this is what the present law is—

> Such authority is now afforded to the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force by Public Law 534, 82d Congress, and to the Secretary of the Interior by Public Law 433, 85th Congress.

Those are the agencies or departments of Government which the Congress has by law given this authority.

You will find also the Federal Aviation Agency says they would favor this if it were made generally applicable. Then on page 4, the Department of Commerce would favor it if it were to make the authority therein generally applicable. The Bureau of the Budget has no objection to legislation generally applicable.

It seems to me that clearly outlines what the present authority is.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. I would appreciate it if the gentleman would tell the Committee here whether or not any of the authorizations for payment of moving expenses as they presently exist include language that is contained on page 3, at the bottom of the page, and at the top of page 4, of H.R. 2467, which, in effect, is not prospective or legislation affecting the future but goes back to taking in a certain class of people who were moved out in the recent acquisition of their property in Virginia.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not have a copy of the bill in front of me.

Mr. DINGELL. I will read the language.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What lines?

Mr. DINGELL. Starting at line 15 and going on down to the bottom, as follows:

> No payment in reimbursement shall be made unless application therefor, supported by an itemized statement of the expenses, losses, and damages so incurred, shall have been submitted to the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency within 1 year following the date of such acquisition or within 1 year following the date that the property is vacated by the applicant, whichever date is later—

The language I refer to specifically follows—

> except that in the case of land acquired on or after July 1, 1958, and before the date of enactment of this act the application for reimbursement may be made within 1 year following the date the property is vacated by the applicant, or within 1 year following the date of enactment of this act, whichever date is later.

Do other pieces of legislation carry a retroactive clause?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know whether they include a retroactive clause or not. But the only people here affected are Chantilly people. It is not anticipated it will be necessary to use this bill to a great extent in the future.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and three Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, would the gentleman tell me whether there are any other classes of people in this retroactive provision except those moved out when the land at Chantilly was condemned?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct. There is no one else covered as of now, so far as we know.

Mr. DINGELL. If we are going to cover this class of people which has been moved out when their land was purchased for construction of the Chantilly Airport, is there any reason why we should not cover all the other classes of people going back to the time that this Republic has existed who have been moved out when their land was seized by Federal eminent domain?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It should have been done at the time they were moved out. Of course, we cannot go back all the way through American history to take care of that kind of a thing. There has to be a starting point somewhere.

Mr. DINGELL. As a matter of fact, legislation of this sort, general or so-called general legislation, has always been prospective in effect and not retrospective or retroactive in effect.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think that that is completely true.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. I am at a loss to understand the assertion that this is Government wide, when the senior Senator from Arkansas has a bill, S. 2583, on this very subject to put this on a Government-wide basis.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman misunderstood me if he got that impression.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. I was referring to the chairman of the full committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He did not say that it was Government wide. He said this authority had been granted to the Secretary of the Interior and to the Defense Department, and this bill merely extends the same authority to the Federal Aviation Agency. Now, our committee did not have jurisdiction over the other agencies of Government, so we could not go beyond the Federal Aviation Agency in this legislation.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Is it not so that the Executive Office in its letter, on page 6 of the report, says that we would have no objection to granting the authority similar to that afforded to those Secretaries which would provide similar authority on a Government-wide basis? In other words, this is essentially special legislation, according to the gentleman's explanation, caused by circumstances over which obviously the committee had no control.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. This is general legislation to grant this authority to the Federal Aviation Agency. Incidentally, it covers a special situation.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BROYHILL].

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Chairman, as has been stated before, the legislation we have before us is rather short and simple and appears before us in the form of a committee amendment. All of the language of the original bill has been stricken and new language inserted as recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. Chairman, all the legislation does is to authorize the Federal Aviation Agency to reimburse the former property owners whose land was condemned by the Federal Aviation Agency for damages and expenses incurred in moving. Now, incidentally, the moving expense is not and cannot be included in the appraised value of the land which is subject to condemnation.

In fact, the appraisers cannot even recognize the increase in value of the surrounding land, land that increased in value as a result of the Federal Government going into the area. We have many instances at the Chantilly Airport where property was being sold for many times more than the Federal appraisers were appraising the land that was being condemned; in other words, adjacent land that had not been condemned had risen in value by virtue of the airport being located in that area.

If an owner was fortunate enough to receive an accurate and true appraisal for his land, and was fortunate enough to find other property at a similar value to which he could move, he was still out of pocket the expenses of moving. I do not believe it is the intent or the desire of Congress that any American citizen should lose and suffer as a result of the Federal condemnation of property.

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I yield.

Mr. FLYNT. I ask the gentleman from Virginia, Is it true that this act simply confers upon the Federal Aviation Agency the same authority that is provided in existing law for the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Air Force, and the Secretary of the Interior, those agencies being the ones primarily concerned with land acquisition under the power of eminent domain?

Mr. BROYHILL. It is identical language; language identical to the act passed by Congress conferring the same authority on the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of the Interior. And, incidentally, the Housing and Home Finance Agency has similar authority in condemnation for urban renewal.

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BROYHILL. I yield.

Mr. FLYNT. Is it true that there is nothing novel in the legislative approach to this subject? Does it simply give the Federal Aviation Agency the authority to do what certain departments of the Government can do under existing law?

Mr. BROYHILL. That is absolutely correct. As pointed out by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] the bill has been changed from its original text in that originally we authorized the Secretary of Commerce to do this, but at the time the original bill was introduced, the Secretary of Commerce had authority to condemn land. Subsequent to the date the original bill was introduced the authority for the condemnation and for the construction of this airport was transferred to the new Federal Aviation Agency. So we had to change the bill in that respect. And as was further pointed out, the Bureau of the Budget and the Federal Aviation Agency objected to special leglislation granting this authority just for the owners of the original land for the Chantilly Airport. They wanted it Government wide. But as was pointed out, it was beyond the authority of this committee to make the legislation Government wide, so they compromised and they made it Federal Aviation Agency-wide, so that it would not be special legislation.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. The gentleman cited the authority granted the Army, the Navy, the Air Force and the Secretary of the Interior. In any of those legislative enactments was there a retroactive provision for payment?

Mr. BROYHILL. No, there was not; and that is a good question. Incidentally, I have four or five questions here that were asked by Members of Congress with whom I have lobbied to get support for this bill, who had certain misgivings about it. I would like to mention these questions. One is the question of retroactivity. I should like to see if I can clear up the misgivings that some Members may have concerning this legislation. So far as the retroactive features are concerned, as was pointed out a moment ago, this bill was first introduced on June 3, 1958.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a copy here of Public Law 85–433, 85th Congress, which is the act that was passed on May 29, 1958, granting the Secretary of the Interior this authority. This is retroactive to the date of July 14, 1952.

Mr. BROYHILL. I thank the gentleman for calling that to my attention. That is a better reason than the one I was prepared to give. When we introduced the original bill it would not have been retroactive, but finally when we adopted the bill in its final form we actually had to make it retroactive to July 1, 1958, to take care of people out at the Chantilly Airport, whose need we primarily had in mind when we brought out the legislation. That is the reason for the retroactivity. If they were left out, the primary reason for this legislation would be gone.

Mr. MACHROWICZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MACHROWICZ. I am in sympathy with anyone who has been relocated and has an extraordinary cost, but what bothers me is this: Many Members of this House, including myself, are deluged with letters from people who have been dislocated because of the road program. There is no provision in the law to compensate them. Does the gentleman not think that if we are going to compensate people in the situation of which he speaks we should also make this applicable to take care of those dislocated by the road program?

Mr. BROYHILL. Certainly; I would have no objection to that.

Mr. MACHROWICZ. In that respect this is special legislation, is it not?

Mr. BROYHILL. It is not special legislation as far as one project is concerned. It is Federal Aviation Agency-wide.

Mr. MACHROWICZ. It is special legislation because it does not take care of those dislocated by the road program.

Mr. BROYHILL. I do not know whether an amendment to that effect would be held not in order, but if it were held in order I would certainly support it. One of the objections was that this does not go far enough. I hope Members will not object to this simply because it does not go as far as many Members would have it go. I certainly would support such legislation.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. FOLEY. The gentleman is referring to Chantilly Airport. He is using this particular airfield bought by the Federal Aviation Agency as an example only. The merits of this bill should be measured not by whether one feels Chantilly should or should not exist but by whether the Federal Aviation Agency should be given the same authority as these other agencies previously referred to, because the Federal Aviation Agency can and probably will move into various congressional districts throughout the land. This particular bill will be applicable to the destruction of the status of homeowners at that time in the same respect as in the Chantilly case.

Mr. BROYHILL. That is correct. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

Some Members have expressed the misgiving that this would be a handout or windfall for some of these people.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifteen Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. BROYHILL. As to the question whether this would be a handout or windfall to the people whose property was condemned, such is not the case, because when the property was condemned they could not receive more for the property than the real appraised value as certified by a qualified appraiser. In order to get reimbursement for these damages and losses and moving expenses they would have to submit detailed, itemized statements. It would have to meet with the approval of the Federal Aviation Agency before they can receive any relief under this legislation. As far as the question of precedent is concerned, that is fully covered. There is ample precedent. The only objection in that regard seems to be that we do not go far enough. Any Member who would like to offer an amendment to do so, but not against the legislation, is perfectly privileged to do so.

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I yield to the gentlewoman from Oregon.

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. You have made quite a persuasive plea for the people who have been dislocated. You just said that if additional amendments are offered to aid other people who had the same problem, it would be proper.

Would the gentleman support an amendment to pay all of the people who have had to move because of dislocation under the highway program, the $40 billion Federal highway program? You would feel all those people should be reimbursed?

Mr. BROYHILL. Any American citizen whose property was condemned and seized by the Federal Government should be reimbursed for all damages.

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Then the gentleman will support any amendment of that nature?

Mr. BROYHILL. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BROYHILL] has again expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I would like to say to the gentlewoman she recognizes that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce does not have jurisdiction to make this law generally applicable. I do understand that the Committee on Government Operations does have a bill pending before it, which has already passed the other body, dealing with the general application of this throughout the Government. I understand the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] is going to give the committee the status of that a little later. So therefore I would think that many problems that would come up in connection with the roads program would have to be worked out with the appropriate committee. As a matter of fact, we know that the roads program is a cooperative program between the Federal Government and the States. I understand the States are given the responsibility of obtaining the rights-of-way. I am not familiar with all the details, but those problems do arise. I would say, as the gentleman did, if it can be worked out where it can be applied generally, where the Government asserts the power of eminent domain and goes in and takes people from their property, then, it should be done as a matter of right.

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. It seems to me the gentleman from Arkansas has made a very persuasive argument for the defeat of this bill, and for the House to wait until this general bill comes out of the House Administration Committee, instead of passing special legislation which is retroactive for this particular group in one particular area.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. I certainly can appreciate the gentlewoman's position in that regard. but I would like to remind her that there is a feeling that such authority should not be retroactive. There is some feeling about the retroactive provision which is here to do justice to the people at the so-called Chantilly Airport area. What the gentlewoman is suggesting is to postpone a decision, which by right should be made, and apply the same justice to people who have been moved away from their property.

Mr. HOEVEN. I am concerned about the precedent being set here. Do I understand from the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Arkansas that this should apply to every case of eminent domain in which the Federal Government is involved?

Mr. HARRIS. Not at all.

Mr. HOEVEN. If it applies to highways where land is taken under eminent domain why is it not likewise involved in the construction of Federal buildings?

Mr. HARRIS. This does not apply to anything except the Federal Aviation Agency.

Mr. HOEVEN. You are setting a precedent. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

Mr. HARRIS. The precedent was set years ago by this Congress when authority was extended to the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, and to the Department of the Interior over 2 years ago.

Mr. HOEVEN. These people who are displaced through an act of eminent domain as far as the location of a building is concerned, have to move to other premises. Should not their expenses be taken care of in the same way?

Mr. HARRIS. That is taken care of in the price paid for the property.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I yield.

Mr. VANIK. Can the gentleman advise me whether or not the principle set forth in the proposed bill as now drafted would extend to the payment of damages for leasehold rights? That is a very, very important element that is not covered under present proceedings under eminent domain in every jurisdiction.

Mr. BROYHILL. I have here, if the gentleman cares to see it, a list prepared by the Office of Engineers of the Army, showing typical articles reimbursable for damages that would come under this and similar acts.

Mr. VANIK. Is it the opinion of the gentleman that leaseholds are not included?

Mr. BROYHILL. That is my understanding.

Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman is correct. That is a matter that is taken into consideration when the fair value of the property is arrived at.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMPSON of Texas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2467) to amend the act of September 7, 1950, to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to reimburse owners and tenants of lands acquired for Chantilly Airport, for their moving expenses, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it not a fact that the reason for the Committee's rising is to permit other important bills or conference reports to be called up and disposed of? And is it not intended that the Committee shall resume its sitting when these matters have been concluded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. McGown, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 4546. An act for the relief of Margaret P. Copin;

H.R. 5054. An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 with respect to the marking of imported articles and containers;

H.R. 10376. An act for the relief of Adolf B. Jochnick;

H.R. 12533. An act to amend the Migratory Bird Treaty Act to increase the penalties for violation of that act, and for other purposes; and H.J. Res. 722. Joint resolution relating to the entry of certain aliens.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 708. An act for the relief of Ante Gulam;

S. 882. An act for the relief of the heirs of J. B. White;

S. 1377. An act for the relief of Blagoje Popadich;

S. 2427. An act for the relief of Wiktoria Stefania Cranak;

S. 3146. An act to authorize the Commodity Credit Corporation to donate dairy products and other agricultural commodities for use in home economic ocurses;

S. 3247. An act to amend the act of September 9, 1959 (73 Stat. 473), to provide that payment for the lands covered by such act may be made on a deferred basis;

S. 3432. An act for the relief of Salvatore Briganti;

S. 3507. An act for the relief of Capt. Ernest Mountain;

S. 3533. An act to protect farm and ranch operators making certain land use changes under the Great Plains conservation program against loss of acreage allotments;

S. 3616. An act to deny to the District of Columbia, in suits on claims arising out of the negligent operation of vehicles owned or controlled by it and operated by its employees in the performance of their official duties, the defense of governmental immunity, to relieve such employees of liability in such cases to third persons, and for other purposes;

S. 3759. An act authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to convey certain lands to Auburn University, Auburn, Ala.;

S. 3769. An act to amend certain provisions of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended;

S. 3771. An act to amend certain provisions of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939, as amended;

S. 3772. An act to amend certain provisions of the Investment Company Act of 1940, as amended; and

S. 3773. An act to amend certain provisions of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, as amended;

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2585. An act for the relief of Josephine Lue Fan (also known as Josephine Fook-Lau), Joseph Lue Fan (also known as Joseph Lew-Fan), and Aura Joan Lue Fan.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 397) entitled "A joint resolution to enable the United States to participate in the resettlement of certain refugees," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. KEFAUVER, and Mr. DIRKSEN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1961

Mr. BOLLING, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 596—Rept. No. 2085), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution, the bill H.R. 12740 making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, with the Senate amendments thereto, shall be taken from the Speaker's table and the Senate amendments considered in the House.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 596 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution, the bill H.R. 12740 making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, with the Senate amendments thereto, shall be taken from the Speaker's table and the Senate amendments considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now consider the resolution?

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the yeas had it.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, does not consideration require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It requires a two-thirds vote.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 291, nays 79, not voting 62, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes of my time to the gentleman from Illinois, and to myself at this time such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution, 596, will make it possible, when adopted, for the House of Representatives to consider the supplemental appropriation bill, H.R. 12740, and the Senate amendments to that bill. There are a number of such amendments, some of which are controversial, I am told. There will be action on the part of the subcommittee chairman of the Appropriations Committee to concur in some amendments and to disagree with others.

All this resolution does is to make it possible for the House to work its will on the supplemental bill and the Senate amendments thereto.

The one Senate amendment that I understand is most urgent is that one which relates to the International Development Association, money for which is included in the Senate amendment in the amount of $73 million. The urgency is that the people who are going to negotiate with the representatives of other countries on this particular item feel when they go to the negotiation meeting, in the matter of just a few days, they should have the American contribution in hand.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me very clear we should follow this procedure and adopt the rule.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri has explained this resolution in a very clear manner. In the event this rule is adopted, it is my understanding that there will be allowed 1 hour of debate on each amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS. I may say to the gentleman there will be no limitation. We will debate these amendments thoroughly, but I hope that we do not spend more than an hour on all 17 of them.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand that 1 hour may be requested on each amendment, and that the amendment may be adopted with up to 1 hour's debate.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Bow].

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, I think that in debate on this rule the House should know that the main item in the bill, as the gentleman from Missouri has properly stated, the most important item in the bill, is that which has to do with the International Development Association, commonly known as IDA, which was passed by the House several days ago.

This is a new lending organization in which other nations are going to join with us in contribution so that loans may be made to the various countries of the world. I voted against IDA, I am opposed to this item in the supplemental bill because I do not believe it has been properly considered. But Mr. Anderson, Secretary of the Treasury, is going to be engaged in these negotiations before long, and he thinks this is necessary.

I would like to point out to the Members of the House a few of the facts so that they will know exactly what they are doing on this vote.

A number of countries, some of them with hard currencies and some with soft currencies, part 1 and part 2 of the IDA bill, will be making contributions. The total contribution by the United States will be $320 million, which is more than the combined total of the other hard money countries.

The point I should like to make particularly is that although the record shows and they tell us these various nations are going to make the contributions to these funds, practically every country that is making a contribution to the fund is also receiving money under mutual security from the United States in very substantial amounts.

In most instances they are getting mutual security in a greater amount than they are contributing to this International Development Association. So, actually what we are doing, I think, is paying the whole thing.

Let me give you an example. It shows here that Afghanistan is going to pay into this fund a little over a million dollars, but we are going to give to Afghanistan, under the mutual security bill, which you passed, $4.5 million—over $3 million more than they are contributing to this. And I could go down the list, but I shall put them in the RECORD, which you probably will not have an opportunity to read. Many of these nations are classified. The United Kingdom is classified. But they are receiving something, although they are contributing to this.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like so much to have the attention of the House because we have had a little talk about fiscal responsibility in the last couple of days. But here is $320 million, and if you take the amount we are contributing into this foreign aid, it is considerably more.

In our State Department hearings—and I hope you will get them and look at them—for State, Justice, and the Judiciary, we have, starting on page 999 clear through to page 1008, a series of tables. Here they are. And in each of those tables are practically every one of these countries that now say they are going to contribute to this fund to make these loans.

Now, these tables show the uncollected contributions to international organizations by these foreign countries. Now, these countries that now say they are going to come in and contribute to this fund in order to make loans, although we are paying them a substantial amount under mutual security, are here listed as being delinquent in their payments to other international organizations. And it just seems to me, my colleagues, that the day has come, if we are going to go into things of this kind, to wait. Why do we not wait? Let them go forward with the negotiations, but let us wait and see whether these other nations that are listed here actually put their money into this bank, because if we put it in and the bank gets started, then you know what is going to happen. Commitments are going to be made and we are going to have to keep our commitments. I think that this thing in a supplemental bill is in the wrong place. Here is the list. Each one of them I can show you with pencil marks receiving mutual security. And I think this is one time that we can say, well, let us just slow down a little bit; let us wait and see whether or not the other nations will contribute to this bank. Let us wait and see whether it is necessary for us to put in $320 million. This is $73 million. I must say, to be frank with the House, there is $73 million in the supplemental bill, but the rest will come. This is a matter that I am terribly concerned about, and I think you should be, when you talk about fiscal responsibility.

Mr. WESTLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOW. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. WESTLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio—and I have listened very attentively to what he had to say—are there any other loan funds for the purpose for which this fund could be used?

Mr. BOW. Yes, there are. For instance, the World Bank and the Export-Import Bank. There are a number of them. And we have made a lot of loans under mutual security.

Mr. WESTLAND. And the Development Loan Fund in the supplemental, can that be used?

Mr. BOW. It could have been, but it happens that we struck out that portion of the bill the other day on a point of order that will prevent those funds from being switched.

But they could do that now; they do not need this.

Mr. WESTLAND. Someone said here the other day that there were six other funds that could be used; is that correct?

Mr. BOW. That is correct, they could be used; and it seems to me that we should wait and see so far as this item is concerned.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOW. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. Of course, some of those other loan funds are not on a par with this, because some of those funds cannot loan and receive in payment soft currencies; they deal only in hard currencies. The International Development Association may loan and receive in payment soft currencies. That is item No. 1.

Mr. BOW. Let me say to the gentleman from Minnesota that that may be item No. 1, that we cannot get back hard currencies for these loans. But we have so much of this soft currency all over the world today, what are we going to do with it. We have it all over the world. I should like the gentleman from Minnesota to tell me what we are going to do with it and when, if ever, we are going to get back any of this money.

Mr. JUDD. The other day we had an amendment before us to provide the use of some of our soft currency for the construction of hospitals and institutions of that sort, in various countries. We had to get dollars appropriated in order to buy those foreign currencies from ourselves, from the Treasury. And the House was reluctant to put up the dollars to buy the money from ourselves.

Mr. BOW. May I say to the gentleman that the hospital he refers to was a hospital behind the Iron Curtain. Why can we not take American dollars and go into areas such as in West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Kentucky, where there are depressed areas, right here in our own country, and where our own people need these funds? Are we going to continue to put this money into this kind of an area? Of course, it has done some good in some areas.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BOW. I am happy to yield further.

Mr. JUDD. Do you think you could use Polish zlotys to build hospitals in Pennsylvania or Ohio or Minnesota?

Mr. BOW. No; but here is a figure of $320 million that we are going to contribute to this Association. And we are going to take more soft currencies for some of those loans. I would rather see $55 million go to some of these areas in our country under a depressed-areas bill.

Mr. JUDD. I grant you, that is desirable. But with respect to the Development Loan Fund, the gentleman from Washington inquired why they could not go to the Development Loan Fund to get the money. Perhaps they could, but in that case we would have to furnish all of it. There is no question about that. If the loan is made through IDA, a good deal of the money would come from other countries. Is it not better for us to provide only part of it than to provide all of it?

Mr. BOW. Here, for instance, we are giving Afghanistan $4½ million and they are going to contribute $1 million.

Mr. JUDD. But Australia and Canada and others in that list are contributing. We are not giving them money under mutual security. Should we not get some help from them instead of no help at all?

Mr. BOW. The gentleman has mentioned Australia and Canada, and he might have also mentioned Finland and Sweden. But here is a list: Australia, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, Netherlands, United Kingdom—all classified as to amounts. But they are getting mutual security.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOW. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from Ohio for the remarks he has made about the situation in West Virginia. I should like to remind him that twice in the past 2 years the Congress has passed legislation authorizing loans to distressed areas, and that action resulted in Presidential vetoes. Now, today, the State Department comes along and overnight says they must have $73 million to set up this new fund.

Mr. BOW. What the gentleman from West Virginia says is true, of course. But if we had had a $55 million depressed-areas bill, which would have taken care of most of these areas, that would not have happened. But I do agree with what the gentleman has said. He has stated the fact.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOW. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. You could take the largest alleged contributor to this new lending agency, Great Britain, with a $131 million contribution. They are so hard up they cannot pay us a cockeyed dime on the $13 billion that they owe us.

Mr. BOW. I should like to point out that we have Ethiopia listed as a contributor for $55,000, and we are giving them $5 million, plus certain classified amounts. Ghana is coming in for $2,036,000. We are giving them $1,200,000 plus a classified amount. These are listed right down the line, the countries to which we are contributing money. That was taken out. But this $73 million was put back in.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOW. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. I must rise to compliment the gentleman on the very able and honest presentation he has made relative to this matter. I think we have come to the end of the road in making these great contributions, loans, and giveaways to these nations that should be able, most of them now, to stand on their own feet, when there are six large agencies now that can lend money all over the world and also give it away all over the world, in addition to about 20 smaller agencies that give Federal aid to foreign countries. I certainly must go along with the gentleman from Ohio and take the position that we had best start now to look after our own finances and to see to it that the time will not come when we will have no money to give to anybody, including ourselves.

Mr. BOW. I sincerely hope that on this last day we will not take this up but come back in August and debate it fully.

Mr. Speaker, the tables I have referred to I include at this point in the RECORD:

[1] Debt data for foreign countries as of latest dates available (Finland, 1958; other countries, 1959). Data for the United States as of May 31, 1960.

[2] Not available separately.

NOTE.—International comparisons of public debt data are difficult to evaluate, because of substantial economic and fiscal dissimilarities between countries. A number of foreign countries have devalued their currencies in relation to the dollar during the postwar period, thus reducing their public debt total when expressed in terms of dollars.

Uncollected Contributions to International Organizations

The next list of insertions is a number of statements with regard to contributions over a number of calendar years, which sets forth the amounts of uncollected contributions to these various international organizations.

[2] Czechoslovakia (on Dec. 27, 1949), Hungary (on Jan. 26, 1951), and China (on July 21, 1951) gave notice of withdrawal from the FAO. However, because of the revisions of the FAO constitution (art. XVIII) that "notice shall take effect 1 year after the date of its communication to the Director General," and that "financial obligation to the organization of a member nation which has given notice of withdrawal shall include the entire financial year in which the notice takes effect," these countries are under obligation to pay their assessments.

[1] Under the terms of the Convention of 1875, setting up the Bureau, the maximum budget was set at 140,000 Swiss francs, which may be increased by the unanimous decision of a conference called for this purpose. In lieu of a conference, in 1948 the Bureau circularized the member governments asking that they consent to a higher budget. The United States has not given its consent because the increase has not been authorized in the manner specified in the convention.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make one comment, because I know the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOW], did not want to leave what I believe is a wrong impression, namely, that we are giving mutual security dollars to countries like Belgium, which could then put those dollars into this bank as capital. It is my recollection we are not giving any mutual security funds to any single one of the Western European countries in NATO, I think. We are giving mutual security aid in the form of missiles and modern weapons and electronic gadgets made in the United States which either they are not able to manufacture themselves or the secret of which we are not able or permitted to give them. We are not giving them any dollars. We are giving them aid to make them more secure, because their security and their strength in a united Western Europe are essential to the security of the United States, so that we can preserve a country with a sound currency and hope for survival in the future. I do not think the impression should be left that any of our money is going to these developed countries in Europe and several others which they could then turn around and use as their capital for the International Development Association.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I would not have objected myself to this bill's going to conference, but it has a great many things in it that are ragged-edged. It has a couple of items for flood control and that sort of thing which should have gone into the public works appropriations bill. They are not items that would be of an emergency character. There is very little in the whole thing that is of emergency character.

There is $5 million to start a dam way down in Mexico. As I understand, it will cost somewhere between $50 million and $100 million. There is an item of $73 million for IDA.

IDA is the International Development Association, and it is another one of those things where money is contributed and it is repaid in local currency. It is not a thing where we would ever get it back, and why we should call that kind of thing a loan is beyond me. When you get people in debt to you with that sort of thing, instead of helping their feeling toward us we get them so that they are irritated with us all the time.

Mr. PILLION. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PILLION. I understood that after the passage of Hawaiian statehood we would not have to purchase goodwill for this country. We were assured by speaker after speaker that the psychological impact would be such that we would live in sweet brotherhood ever after. I wonder if the gentleman would comment on this.

Mr. TABER. I am afraid of that situation. It is presented to us in this bill with about $30 million, and that is something that is of an entirely experimental character. I do not believe it would benefit or prove to the welfare or good feeling of the people of Hawaii toward the United States. It is a rather wealthy State, a land of great fertility. The people there have been industrious and they have worked it up to a point where instead of being in a position where they need to be helped on something of this nature, it is a place where they are able to help others. I do not understand the idea of starting out with a new State, that they must have something that other States do not have. I would say that is a rather dangerous thing to get into.

Mr. PILLION. But the gentleman agrees that the situation has again proven that you just cannot buy good will; that rather we have to learn how to earn respect, rather than attempt to buy the good will of those foreign countries.

Mr. TABER. I would doubt if this promoted good will.

Now there is another item that I think the House ought to know about. There is an item in this appropriation for buying these two blocks to the east of the Old House Office Building. I do not know how the House will want to vote on that, but they should have an opportunity to vote when the time comes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GROSS].

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is reminiscent of last September 15, in the early hours, about 2 o'clock in the morning, when we got the annual giveaway bill back to the House as an omnibus appropriation bill, with some 65 amendments, 35 of which were completely ungermane to the bill.

Here we are today with another one of those deals. It seems to me the leadership ought to be able to do better than this. I hope we do not come up to another September adjournment under the same circumstances insofar as a foreign handout or any other bill is concerned.

What is the reason for rushing into consideration of this conference report? The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING] told us that there is an aggregation of foreigners waiting hat in hand at a meeting to be held soon, and our representatives at the meeting must have cash in their pockets when they go. Some of our bureaucrats downtown are palpitating and panting; they cannot wait to get this $73 million downpayment and go to this meeting. At least there was the decency in behalf of the taxpayers when the inter-American bank bill was enacted last year to write in a provision that the United States would not put up any money until other nations came in on a date certain.

I had some contact with that situation last December, and I know it was a mad scramble to get even their small contributions from participating foreign nations before the expiration date.

But there is to be an international meeting and the gentleman from Missouri tells us that the Secretary of the Treasury, who can scream long and loudly about budgetbusting if the spending involves the people here at home, apparently wields some kind of mysterious influence in making Congress jump through the hoop to rush through this $73 million to benefit foreigners. I do not know whether it is because of banking interests, or what, but it is obvious the Secretary of the Treasury put the pressure on for this appropriation and the speed with which it has been considered. I am sick and tired of hearing this administration demanding economy and denouncing budgetbusting, yet demanding the rush act on this kind of spending.

It was only yesterday I asked the distinguished Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], if it was necessary that we consider any further appropriation bills in this session, or conference reports relating to appropriation bills. You will find his answer in the RECORD on page 15455. Let me read it to you.

Mr. GROSS. With the adoption of this resolution, it will not be necessary to drive conference reports through the House under forced draft.

Mr. CANNON. It will not be necessary to perfect them now before we adjourn.

So what are we doing with this resolution before us now?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I believe this is the first time that we have publicly admitted by this action that we have no standing in the world today; that the nations will believe that this country will come up with its commitments after the Congress of the United States has said that it will join the IDA. If we are to believe the administration spokesmen, they will not believe we will go along unless we come there with the money in our pockets and in our hands. We have to bring the money to the able before any of those countries will believe that the action of this Congress is official, that we have said that we will participate in the fund. These countries, most of them better countries to us a few years ago, say they will not believe us unless we bring the money and put it on the table and say: "Look, we have brought our share, you put yours in."

Mr. PILLION. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield.

Mr. PILLION. Who can commit this country to an appropriation except this Congress itself? Who can do that? Can anyone commit this country except Congress?

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman is right. The Congress of the United States has made the commitment, but I, for one, am not going to jump through this kind of hoop. Consideration of this appropriation bill ought to be stopped, and dealt with when the House reconvenes in August.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to note the unnecessary and intemperate language used in the veto message of the President on the bill providing for an increase in the salaries of Federal employees.

The President stated:

I am informed that the enactment of H.R. 9883 was attended by intense and unconcealed political pressure exerted flagrantly and in concert on Members of Congress by a number of postal field service employees, particularly their leadership.

The President did not make this charge upon his own knowledge. He stated, "I am informed."

The President, in all fairness to the organizations and leaders so charged, should make public his source of information. Under our form of government, even one charged with a crime is entitled to know the accusers and the acts involved in an alleged offense. In any event, the information given the President is incorrect. The Federal employees, as individuals, or through their organizations, and duly elected officers, have the constitutional right of petition.

At no time while the vetoed bill was under consideration by Congress did Federal employee organizations, or their officers, do or say anything but what was proper. At no time during my years of service has any pressure "intense or unconcealed" or "political pressure exerted flagrantly and in concert" been exercised upon me by them.

Any person has a right, which I recognize and protect, to write or call to see me on any public question or matter.

I am sure that the President did not mean to establish the proposition that it is "under pressure" for any group to take a position that is not consistent with the views of the President and it is good procedure for any group to take a position favorable to that of the President.

If ever there was an extensive campaign conducted that some could call "pressure," and I do not, it was the campaign in connection with the mutual security appropriation bill, and that campaign emanated right from the White House.

In the light of the President's intemperate language, the Federal employees and their families had better think twice before voting next fall for the Republican candidate because, if elected, he will probably follow the thinking of the President.

If I were a Federal employee, that part of the message would be construed by me as a message designed to put fear in my mind—that in the future I could not exercise as an American citizen, my constitutional right of petition.

In any event, that part of the veto message is inconsistent with the facts. Some could go to the extent of calling the language used as "insulting and arrogant," but I will not go that far. However, as I have said, the language used by the President is "unnecessary and intemperate," and his sources gave him incorrect information.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—yeas 105, noes 45.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present,

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 257, nays 109, not voting 66, as follows:

Until further notice:

Mr. Alford with Mr. Martin.

Mr. McDONOUGH changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. WHITENER changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill and the first Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the first Senate amendment, as follows:

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House disagree to Senate amendment No. 1.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman this question: I note on line 9, page 2, an item of $5,200,000 for an additional amount for construction of facilities. The question is this: Does this include $500,000 for the construction of an entomology laboratory at the University of Florida?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, let me get to this item by item. The motion is that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1 to strike out this laboratory in which our colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MATTHEWS] is interested, and we are insisting that it stay in.

Mr. MATTHEWS. In other words, if my vote is "aye" it will mean I am voting to keep the laboratory in.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 2: Page 2, line 8, insert the following:

"For an additional amount for "Construction of Facilities", $5,200,000."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House disagree to Senate amendment No. 2.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact that the Matthews item is included in Senate amendment No. 2?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, along with seven others, but we want to see that this Matthews item is taken care of first.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 3: Page 2, line 10, insert:

"SOIL CONSERVATION SERVICE"

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House concur in Senate amendment No. 3.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 4: Page 2, line 11, insert:

"WATERSHED PROTECTION

"For an additional amount for 'Watershed Protection', $1,800,000."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House concur in Senate amendment No. 4.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 5: Page 2, line 14, insert:

"FLOOD PREVENTION

"For an additional amount for 'Flood Prevention', $1,570,000, for the purposes of Public Law 86-468."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House concur in Senate amendment No. 5.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. This million and a half dollars was not in the House bill as I understand it.

Mr. THOMAS. That is my understanding, too.

Mr. GROSS. Where is this money to be expended?

Mr. THOMAS. I understand it is proposed to be expended in a little town in the southwestern part of Texas about 600 miles from where I live. It is a loan, and it will not cost the taxpayers one 5-cent piece.

Mr. GROSS. That helps a little.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 6: Page 2, line 17, insert:

"AGRICULTURAL MARKETING SERVICE

"Marketing research and service

"For an additional amount for 'Marketing research and service', for Marketing services, $1,350,000."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House disagree to Senate amendment No. 6.

Mr. McINTIRE. Mr. Speaker, I have a preferential motion.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maine spoke to me concerning this and I know what he has in mind. We are going to do our best to help him. May I respectfully suggest to him that he talk with our distinguished friend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSEN]. There is $10,200,000 in the regular bill for the Poultry Inspection Service. If $10,200,000 is not enough, come back in January to Mr. ANDERSEN, Mr. JENSEN, and myself.

Mr. McINTIRE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. McINTIRE. I appreciate what the gentleman says. I did discuss this with the gentleman.

The reason I am concerned is because the gentleman has offered a motion to disagree with the Senate amendment which would provide in this bill $1.35 million as additional funds under the Poultry Products Inspection Act. In the regular appropriation bill offered by the Subcommittee on Agriculture, there was no money provided for the additional inspection service which is required under the law to go into effect as of July 1, yesterday.

Mr. THOMAS. That is only 1 day old, you have $10.2 million, and if you do not have enough we will give you some more.

Mr. McINTIRE. The thing I am concerned with is that in the conference report of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee in relation to the agricultural appropriation bill there is specific language in that report that says the money appropriated cannot be used except for those services which were then being provided for. The act provides that as of today additional services are required and if it were possible to use such sums as are in excess of those needed for the present service as provided, it would be a matter with which I would not be too much concerned; but in view of the conference report I think we are placing the poultry inspection service under a very serious handicap.

Mr. THOMAS. May I say to the gentleman we have worked with him, he is a very valuable gentleman, and there is not the slightest disposition to hurt the service. The Congress has put it in here. Let us work it out. The year is only 2 days old. I have discussed it with our able friend, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSEN], and I am sure he is not going to let the thing go astray.

Mr. McINTIRE. Is it your opinion, then, such sums as are now appropriated for the Poultry Inspection Act under the appropriation bill already passed may be used to implement the full extent of the Poultry Inspection Act?

Mr. THOMAS. I am not trying to avoid the gentleman's question. He asks me a question and if I were able to give him an answer one way or the other I am afraid it would not be too accurate.

Mr. McINTIRE. That is exactly the predicament on that, because I am concerned in relation to the administration of that act.

Mr. THOMAS. The gentleman will be taken care of. If it is not worked out, we will see the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSEN] and I think we can work that out to the gentleman's satisfaction. We do not want to hurt you. We want to help you.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House concur in Senate amendment No. 12.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 13: Page 11, line 12, insert:

"MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS

"For an additional amount, fiscal year 1960, for 'Miscellaneous items,' $205,640."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House concur in Senate amendment No. 13.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS. In connection with this $205,000 miscellaneous item, can the gentleman give us a little hint about what this is in view of some of the speeches made by some of the Members of the other body, notably the senior Senator from Ohio, about the terrible people in the House? I just wondered whether this was a little attempt to conceal some of their expenditures.

Mr. THOMAS. May I say to our distinguished friend from Ohio, we follow the rule of comity between the two bodies.

Mr. HAYS. Oh, we do, but they do not.

Mr. THOMAS. Let us follow it here, and if the other body sees fit to violate it, why, that will be on their shoulders.

Mr. HAYS. Can you give me any explanation about what this is for?

Mr. THOMAS. The answer is "No."

Mr. HAYS. And we have to take it on faith?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. HAYS. Well, my faith is pretty weak.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Is there something classified about this? Is this a military secret?

Mr. THOMAS. This is for housekeeping items made up of 10 or 12 things, and we do not question those things. There is nothing secret about it. It is a matter of public record over there. They held debate on it, and I am sure it is carried in the Journal.

Mr. GROSS. And the gentleman cannot tell us what the substantial amounts are?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I have not the slightest idea of the details.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Is this item similar to what we had in the For-and bill?

Mr. THOMAS. In what?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, the appropriation to help people, to take care of them in some way.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand those gentlemen take care of themselves fairly well over there.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Is this an assist?

Mr. THOMAS. This is what they call miscellaneous. The real big items do not come under miscellaneous.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GARY. This says for an additional amount for fiscal 1960 for miscellaneous items, $205,640. Can the gentleman tell us what that will make the total for the year?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I cannot.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 14: Page 12, strike out:

"ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL

"For an amount, additional to amounts heretofore appropriated, for acquisition of property for additions to the United States Capitol Grounds pursuant to section 1202 of Public Law 24, Eighty-fourth Congress, approved April 22, 1955, as approved by the House Office Building Commission, $5,000,000."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House disagree to Senate amendment No. 14.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BALDWIN) there were—ayes 165, noes 30.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-six Members are present, a quorum.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 15: Page 12, line 14, strike out "$225,000" and insert "$5,256,000".

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House concur in Senate amendment No. 15, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert "$5,225,000".

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. Can the gentleman tell us why this increase from $225,000 to $5,256,000?

Mr. THOMAS. I will say to the gentleman it is by virtue of two items. The first item was an international item involving one of the cities of southern California and Mexico. The House reduced the item by 10 percent for a construction project. The other body restored the 10-percent cut. We are trying to insist on the 10-percent cut. The $5 million item is by virtue of a treaty with Mexico for the construction of a dam.

Mr. GROSS. I thought that when the bill went through the House it was stated that the $225,000 was adequate, was all that they needed at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. The other body just restored the budget estimate; I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. GROSS. So it is upped $5 million.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. GROSS. Just a slight increase.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 16 on page 12, insert:

"OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

"Subscription to the International Development Association

"For payment of the first installment of the subscription of the United States to the International Development Association, $73,666,700, to remain available until expended."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House concur in Senate amendment No. 16.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, we have debated this item with complete thoroughness; and I have not said anything. So, will my colleagues indulge me for 3 minutes? Then if somebody else wants 3 minutes, I shall yield and then I am going to move the previous question.

Let us be frank about this. There have been some fine statements made and I cannot disagree with them too much. But listen: One of our distinguished American citizens, Secretary Anderson, is very vitally and deeply interested in this bill and the funds for the International Development Association. The President signed the authorized bill 2 or 3 days ago. This is one of the important measures that the administration is interested in. I am not being partisan with you now. I am just a little lowly Democrat and I am looking at some of my friends across the aisle. If you are not interested in it, please tell me why in the world I should be.

Mr. GROSS. I do not think you should be, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I have not voted for the foreign giveaway in 5 years. Furthermore, I am not going to vote for it. But Secretary Anderson tells me, and as far as I am concerned he is the top man in the Cabinet, that this is a step in the right direction. I said, "What will it do, Mr. Secretary?" He said, "I hope"—and he did not give me any guarantee, of course not; he is too smart a man—"In my humble judgment this money will go a long way in reducing the cost of the foreign giveaway program." I said, "Spell it out to me, please. What do you mean by that?" He said, "Well, you are going to get some of the people who are now on their feet, some of the countries that have good money, to come into the pool and help the United States to defray the cost of developing some of these poor undeveloped countries."

I think it is just that simple. As far as I am concerned, I think he is right. We spend at least $4 or $4.5 billion on that foreign giveaway program every year. This is going to cost you $320 million. Let us lay it on the line, when you get through with it this is going to be a billion-dollar bank, and you spend 30 percent, and you are going to deal in soft currencies. But when he says it will be a step in the right direction and will reduce ultimately the cost to the taxpayers, I am willing to trust him. If I am willing to trust him, will not my friends over on the other side do it?

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, there are some Members on this side who wish to speak against this item in the bill. I hope my friend will not cut off debate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LIPSCOMB].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from California is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LIPSCOMB. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this motion to approve the item in this bill for the International Development Association. I fully realize what the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee has said. I, too, have great respect for the Secretary of the Treasury. But I am of the belief that the financing as provided in the legislation is not adequately worked out at this time. I believe that the Committee on Appropriations as well as the legislative committee that has jurisdiction should go into this matter further before we embark on a program which initially is $320 million, and there is no indication it is not going to be larger. In this bill there is more than $73 million to be appropriated. This is a large and important program. I think it may be a worthy program, but this is no time to appropriate almost $74 million in a hasty manner.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Bow] has already told you in previous debate that some of the countries that are offering to contribute to this program have not paid their obligations to certain international associations but they are listed as proposed contributors to the International Development Association. There are countries in this program, such as Yugoslavia and Cuba, about whom we would have certain questions as to their participating in the program.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] has indicated that some of the countries in Western Europe who are to contribute to this program are not receiving funds from the United States. I might tell you that West Germany is supposed to contribute to IDA some $53 million, yet in the Mutual Security Act under the "Special Assistance" section, we are contributing to West Berlin toward building a medical center which will cost us, as our part, at least $11 million, and the project could well cost the U.S. Government a great deal more. If we continue to add loan programs to loan programs on a piece-by-piece, patchwork basis, we will never get down to a good, valid, workable program in those countries that need it the most.

I ask you to defeat this motion.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIPSCOMB. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Another of these alleged contributors is the Netherlands. They have borrowed $3 million from the Development Loan Fund in order to resettle Dutch farmers in Australia. They are borrowing money in order to resettle farmers in Australia, and yet they say they are going to contribute to this fund.

Mr. LIPSCOMB. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WIDNALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIPSCOMB. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. WIDNALL. Does the gentleman realize that this association does not begin until the other countries have made a greater contribution than the United States would make? Sixty-five percent must actually be in the till before this becomes a working organization.

Mr. LIPSCOMB. If that is the case, there is no hurry in inserting this item in this bill at this time. We have passed the authorizing legislation. The other body has put its stamp of approval on it. The President has signed it. Let the IDA work out arrangements with the other countries and then the U.S. Government will fulfill its obligations and will vote for an adequate amount for this program. This action should be delayed.

Mr. WIDNALL. I would like to point out that no country would be able to participate in borrowing from IDA until it has made its original contribution. That is all called for under the charter.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIPSCOMB. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LAIRD. Secretary Anderson testified before the Senate on this particular item, and since the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMAS] brought up his name, it should be pointed out that in his testimony he said in effect, that he had no intention of using these funds for several months.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIPSCOMB. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. Will the gentleman say what possible harm could be done by making these funds available now? They cannot be used until 65 percent of the total capital for the association is made available. If the other countries do not come through with their contributions, our money will not be spent. How can we effectively press others to put up their share if the Congress refuses to make available the money for our share?

Mr. LIPSCOMB. The Congress has expressed its confidence in the program. Mr. Speaker, it seems it is time we realize that we are working on borrowed money. The funds we give to this program is borrowed money. Let us delay taking hasty action.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlemen from California [Mr. LIPSCOMB] has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I am going to say a few words for 1 minute, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio about a minute, and then I am going to move the previous question.

May I say to my friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LAIRD] that the Secretary called me early this morning and he sent a letter to the committee, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Bow] both read it, and he said we needed this money.

It is a page and a half long. I will not burden you with reading it now.

Mr. LAIRD. Have you read the testimony of the Secretary before the Senate committee?

Mr. THOMAS. No. I am just referring to the letter and conversation I had with him this morning.

Mr. LAIRD. He said quite definitely that these funds would not be used until all nations had subscribed.

Mr. THOMAS. That is right. I do not mean to get at any cross purposes with my friend.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. HAYS. I do not want to be accused of lese majeste, but I just do not subscribe to all this fulsome praise of the Secretary of the Treasury and his wisdom, because with the steel industry at 48 percent of capacity and with high interest rates, now, I do not blame him for leaving the Democratic Party and becoming a Republican, but I would remind the gentleman from Texas that he also gave up his citizenship in Texas and became a citizen of Connecticut. The gentleman is in difficulty any way you look at it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. KYL) there were—ayes 127, noes 100.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 17: Page 13, line 16, insert:

"GENERAL PROVISION

"Appropriations, authorizations, and funds available to the departments, agencies, corporations, and the District of Columbia, for the fiscal year 1961, may be apportioned pursuant to section 3679 of the Revised Statutes, as amended on a basis indicating the need for supplemental estimates of appropriation to the extent necessary to permit payment of pay increases (not exceeding the corresponding increases provided by the 'Postal Employees' Salary Increase Act of 1960' and the 'Federal Employees' Salary Increase Act of 1960' for employees whose rates of compensation are fixed by administrative action pursuant to law.)"

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House disagree to Senate amendment No. 17.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. FORD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas: Does not this provision invite a supplemental to the extent of $700 million, based on the Federal employees pay legislation which was approved by overriding the President's veto?

Mr. THOMAS. I just consider it as a blanket invitation for the agencies to come back for anything they need.

Mr. FORD. In effect we are appropriating $700 million.

Mr. THOMAS. No, we are disagreeing to it; that was the motion I offered.

If there is any supplemental required, let them come back. We are inviting them to come back with this language. From our point of view and the action of the House just adopted the language should be out.

Mr. FORD. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the several motions was laid on the table.

ALASKAN VESSELS INSPECTION EXEMPTION ACT

Mr. GARMATZ submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 2669) to extend the period of exemption from inspection under the provisions of section 4426 of the Revised Statutes granted certain small vessels carrying freight to and from places on the inland waters of southeastern Alaska.

Mr. GARMATZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill S. 2669.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. MAILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CERTAIN REAL PROPERTY CONVEYED TO THE CITY OF ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.

Mr. GARMATZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H.R. 5055) to change a certain restriction on the use of certain real property heretofore conveyed to the city of St. Augustine, Fla., by the United States, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That the Secretary of the Treasury shall amend, by appropriate written instrument to the city of Saint Augustine, Fla., the restriction on use with respect to the land conveyed to such city under the provisions of the Act of August 27, 1935 (49 Stat. 896), in order that such land may also be used for educational purposes"; and amend the title so as to read: "An Act to amend the restriction on the use of certain real property heretofore conveyed to the city of Saint Augustine, Florida, by the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 7004) to facilitate the administration of the public lands, and for other purposes, with Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Page 5, line 22, strike out all after "SEC. 302." down to and including "or" in line 25 and insert "The Secretary of the Interior may require a user or users of roads or trails under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management to maintain such roads or trails in a satisfactory condition commensurate with the particular use requirements and the use made by each, the extent of such maintenance to be shared by the users in proportion to such use or".

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAYMENT OF RELOCATION ALLOWANCE BY FEDERAL AVIATION AGENCY

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 2467) to amend the act of September 7, 1950, to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to reimburse owners and tenants of lands acquired for Chantilly Airport for their moving expenses.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 2467, with Mr. THOMPSON of Texas in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose today, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] had 15 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] had 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. AVERY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take a lot of time, but this is a bill affecting just a small number of people. It affects basically those in the Chantilly area and is a retroactive measure which would give a special benefit to the people in that area and provide compensation for moving of their buildings or their household effects, and so forth, from the land which was condemned for the Chantilly airport. The cost of this would be approximately a quarter of a million dollars. It was objected to by the Federal Aviation Agency, which is the Agency instructed to pay this, because they themselves feel that general legislation would be more desirable. The Department of the Interior and the Defense Department have this authority now in evaluating the cost of the property, the value of the land to the owners who are losing it, taking into consideration the moving of their property and their household effects. This would extend that authority to the Federal Aviation Agency on a retroactive basis, which I think would not be desirable.

Now, as a solution for this problem, as I see it, we should consider a general Government policy for all of the agencies: Shall we pay for the cost of moving household effects for all of the people of this country on highway allocations of land or when the General Services Administration acquires land for Government purposes? The GSA says that it will cost about 10 percent more if they consider moving costs in their condemnation proceedings throughout this country. We have already spent millions of dollars for the acquisition of land for meritorious Government needs. This would increase that cost. The GSA has recommended legislation which would offer this same authority to all of the agencies of this Government who acquire land, and similar legislation was introduced by the very distinguished Senator from the State of Arkansas, Senator MCCLELLAN. It was introduced and passed in the Senate, and in June of this year it was referred to the Government Operations Committee, which has already requested reports from the agencies, most of which are in. Hearings have been granted, and a matter of policy will be considered which will be fair to all of the people of this country, that is, that we consider as a congressional policy whether or not we should in the future pay for the cost of moving and not consider special interest legislation very narrowly drawn which would, I think, be unfair to other people of this country who had their land condemned.

Mr. BASS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BASS of Tennessee. I would like to ask my friend from Texas if this is not a real departure from the normal course in this type of purchase and the moving of the former landowners.

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. This is a rash departure from the procedure which was followed by the Federal Aviation Agency and from the procedure which is and has been followed by the General Services Administration. To be perfectly fair about it, this procedure of paying for moving expenses—and I wish the gentleman from Mississippi would check this, because I think he is familiar with it—now is being followed by the Defense and Interior Departments in condemnation proceedings.

Mr. BASS of Tennessee. But that is taken care of in the overall price.

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. At the time, but not on a retroactive basis, as a general policy.

Mr. AVERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. AVERY. I appreciate the gentleman from Texas yielding to me at this point. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Texas, did the Government Operations Committee intercede when the Public Works Committee gave this authority to the Army Engineers; or did they intercede when the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs gave this authority to the Department of the Interior, to reimburse dislocated persons for moving expenses?

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. I am not aware of the Government Operations Committee getting involved in that legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] has expired.

Mr. AVERY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute for the purpose of answering the question I asked.

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. I do not know whether other committees of Congress questioned that authority when the matter came up. But I do know in this particular instance the bill was introduced in the other body by Senator MCCLELLAN, a very distinguished and able Member of the other body; it was passed, was sent over and assigned to the Committee on Government Operations, I assume by the Speaker, in the usual procedure. We were studying the matter at the time this came over.

Mr. AVERY. Since the gentleman is referring to a precedent, I think it is important to remind the committee that when the Corps of Engineers was given this authority by the Congress some 10 years ago, no committee was heard from, virtually no objection was heard. So it is a little difficult for us to understand why, all of a sudden now the Committee on Government Operations wants to inject a jurisdictional question into a matter of precedent that has been accepted by all Federal agencies for 10 years.

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. I would not interpose a jurisdictional question at all. It is just a matter of orderly legislation which should be considered on what is going to happen in the future, and not on a retroactive basis. The legislation should be for a general purpose rather than special legislation limited to one area.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] has again expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman made quite a point that this bill would be retroactive. The Department of the Interior has the same authority by an act of Congress passed on May 29, 1958. The precedent was set when the bill authorizing the Department of the Interior, or giving them the same authority, was backdated or dated retroactively, not 2 years, but 6 years, to July 14, 1952. The Department of the Interior is much deeper involved in this type of transaction than the Federal Aviation Agency.

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. In reply to that, I might say that the Federal Aviation Agency itself has said in its letter, and it is in the report, that such authority, if granted at all, should be made on a Government-wide basis. This would afford fair treatment to landowners regardless of the agency with which they deal. As to the past action concerning the Department of the Interior, I am not familiar with the details of that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania [Mrs. GRANAHAN].

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this debate with great interest and I am truly amazed that the Congress would be asked at this point—on this final day before we recess—to pass a bill like this benefiting a small group of property owners in Virginia whose property has been taken over for an airport when those of us with large-scale urban redevelopment projects in our cities have received no consideration whatsoever from the Rules Committee on the problem of relocating businesses and families in urban renewal areas.

In my district in Philadelphia, the Eastwick project is one of the biggest, if not the biggest, urban redevelopment project in the country. It is not a slum area. It is a solid residential and business community. The people who live there and the businesses which have been built up there have to move. In the housing bill reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, the relocation allowances would be increased substantially to cover these meritorious cases. The Rules Committee has blocked that bill.

I cannot in good conscience vote a big handout to the property owners in Virginia on the airport relocation matter as long as our people in Philadelphia are not receiving similar consideration on their forced move from Eastwick. I cannot support a discrimination of that kind.

In August, we will break the stranglehold on the housing bill and pass it. At that time, I will be glad to consider voting relocation payments for the Chantilly Airport property owners, but not until then.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the issue here in all fairness to the Federal Aviation Agency is whether by lack of this legislation you are going to perpetuate a situation where a wrong is being done to people. You are giving the Federal Aviation Agency authority that is granted to three other agencies of the Government. There may be some justice in what the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania [Mrs. GRANAHAN] said a moment ago with reference to her situation, as well as what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MACHROWICZ] said about an hour ago with reference to Detroit, but it seems to me this does not take away the merit there is in this situation from people to whom a wrong is being done now, a situation which was referred to this Committee to make right. We have attempted to do that right insofar as we could by this legislation.

Our Committee had no jurisdiction to go further than what was done in this legislation. I think there is some merit through this legislation in stimulating discussion such as we have had on the floor here this afternoon with reference to what ought to be done with some other agencies who deserve to have their situation gone into and remedied by the Committee on Government Operations. But it does not seem to me to be just for some Members to say that this legislation is wrong "Because my situation is not taken care of I am not going to correct the wrong that has been done to these people who have had their property taken away and who have moved and who have had no compensation for it."

I take it that some probably have taken a short view. I have been faced with something of this same situation in the highway relocation that others have. I hope when a bill comes up to correct that situation I will be able to give it my support. But I do not think that is any reason why I should not support this legislation which is right and in the public interest. It parallels exactly what you people have been talking about who say that you ought to have the same kind of help in your situation.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Chairman, this is fair and right and in the public interest. That is why we have brought it to this floor. We believe these wrongs ought to be remedied by this legislation. I recommend that this bill do pass.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, it is clearly evident that the two major proponents of this legislation happen to be Congressmen from the 8th and the 10th Districts of Virginia. They have an enviable record as economizers on spending money in other parts of the Nation, and when it comes to spending money for the general welfare of the country they call it socialistic, but when it comes to Virginia or the District of Columbia they are the greatest spenders in the Congress.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. I have no further requests at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, actually, of course, this legislation belongs on the Private Calendar. There is no question about it. I do not know how many people are involved, but I would like to point out some interesting facts. Ten thousand two hundred acres of land for the Chantilly Airport were acquired through condemnation and other proceedings, at an average of $560 an acre. I would like any member of the committee who has not seen this land to go over and look at it. It is as fertile as is the rug in the well of this House, and could grow about the same amount of crops, or anything else, as could be grown on the carpet on the floor of this House. Keeping in mind that this is going to be a very necessary and a very great airport, and that $190 million is to be expended, and to which the Federal Government is building exclusively the roads and will maintain and police the roads, as they do on the highways to the National Airport, $560 an acre would pay for the land on which there were a few attractive homes and a great many shacks. In addition, this legislation, if you spenders want to spend this, you would reimburse about 25 percent to the owner and, if you please, to the tenants, of the value of any parcel of land. In other words, if I had 10 acres, I get $5,600. Under this, in order to move my household goods I could get 25 percent in addition, to move those goods. Of course I have moved, 2 years ago, and now I will get $1,400 additional.

Now let us not fool ourselves about this. This is special and private legislation. I commend to you a reading of the report. I recommend to you that if we are going to do this, and I am in favor of people getting reasonable value for their land, I might suggest that the juries involved in condemnation proceedings were neighbors of the tenants. It was known that the Federal Government was making acquisition, and I defy any Member of this body who has ever tried a condemnation case against the Federal Government or a State government to display a parsimonious verdict. You know very well that they inflated the value of the land when they gave them $560 an acre for it.

Now, if you please, we are asked to be sorry for a corporal's guard, and to stay here this afternoon and vote for $140 an acre more in order to move their belongings. This is an absolute absurdity.

I commend to you a reading of the report. If you are looking for an economy vote in this session, you can save $510,000 maximum, because that is the maximum amount which could be expended under this bill. In view of the fact that $560 an acre, 10,200 acres, the maximum reimbursement would be $510,000.

Mr. SANTANGELO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SANTANGELO. We, who come from the cities, have seen many of our citizens who have been dislocated by public housing projects and urban renewals, and they have had to uproot their homes and destroy most everything, and the maximum amount they were able to get was about $200, and it cost them much more to move.

The housing bill provides for an increase. The businesses that are being moved are forced to move and they are not compensated. They lose their goodwill, they have to bear the cost of moving and relocating themselves.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. To carry it to its logical conclusion there is no reason on earth why people whose land was taken in the great Tennessee Valley project and who were relocated should not retroactively be paid 25 percent of the fair value of the land; and in that case we would be spending billions of dollars.

Mr. SANTANGELO. We believe that these people who are dislocated against their own will should be reimbursed at least the cost of moving. Why should only a small group in Virginia be compensated and the rest of the Nation not compensated for their moving costs?

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Yes, but I do not think that when a man gets $560 an acre for his land he should weep over it.

Mr. SANTANGELO. What I am saying is that in this particular bill we are showing favoritism to a group of people whose land was taken probably at prices which were excessive. I oppose the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AVERY].

Mr. AVERY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey alluded to the report. I would like to suggest that he read the committee report, particularly the report that came from the other body, because the Senate report contains more information directly to the case than does the House report.

I want especially to call to the attention of the Committee the statement made by the gentlemen from New Jersey that the bill would increase the cost of the acquisition of this property by 25 percent. I am sure the gentleman in all fairness would not want to leave that impression, because it is not an arbitrary authorization for an increase, and he I am sure does not want to leave that impression with the Committee.

Furthermore, information we received from the files of the Corps of Engineers who have kept records on such matters shows that the general cost of relocation was just a little over one-half of 1 percent of the cost of the real estate.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AVERY. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. On the last point can the gentleman answer this question: Why would the gentleman put 25 percent as the maximum when 1½ percent was what it cost?

Mr. AVERY. Because that was the usual language in all bills authorizing moving cost to other agencies.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. I may state that the value of the land can be ascertained specifically in each instance only by going to the results of the condemnation proceedings. The gentleman would not suggest that if a man got $560 an acre for his land that the court would look anywhere else to determine what the 25 percent should be based on than to the amount awarded, would it?

Mr. AVERY. The court is not involved in this matter. This is purely an administrative authorization.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. By what standards, then, would the administrator ascertain the percentage?

Mr. AVERY. It is not a matter of any formula at all; it would be the cost to the displaced person as presented to the examiner by provable costs.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Obviously, and he would see that this allowed him 25 percent. He would say: "I am a reasonably honest man. I got $700 an acre for my land. I want to put in a bill for only 12½ percent or $220 for a moving job that cost me about $80 to move to the next district."

Mr. AVERY. I am sure the gentleman can only be referring to one thing, that is that he feels there would be administrative irresponsibility on the part of the agency.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. The administrative agency is bound by this language if we adopt it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from New Jersey is a fair man. I am sure he knows that the purpose of the 25 percent provision was to help not the man who got the maximum price for a large number of acres but the little man who had a quarter acre or a half acre and got $125 or $250. The purpose of limiting this is to prevent the small acreages from collecting large amounts of money.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. The gentleman from New Jersey does not mean to imply that the landowners are capricious or greedy; the gentleman from New Jersey means simply to imply that if the intention is to be perfectly reasonable in acting retroactively at the present time, and the limit ought not to be 25 percent.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS. The gentleman's example does not influence me. If a fellow has $700 worth of property he could not have there enough to move that would be worth $125 to move. That is the question that bothers me.

Mr. SPRINGER. I cannot state that they are not worth very much. I suspect there are acreages in here of 100 feet by 275 feet, and probably what they have to move is not worth very much money. The purpose of the 25-percent limitation is to prevent those people from collecting excessive amounts of money. Everybody knows the General Accounting Office is rather restrictive, on all such expense accounts and I think we should keep this in perspective, even those who are against the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD].

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to speak for this bill. This pleases those who are against it. I am not going to speak against the bill. That pleases those who are for it.

This ought to be my most successful 1-minute speech.

I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. I live in the block near here. The Congress has just appropriated $5 million to move the people out of their property. I am going to be moved out, and I have no Congressman to go to to help me. I do not dare help myself because that would be a conflict of interest. So I want to know, if I am going to have moving expenses when the Government moves me out of my home.

Mr. SPRINGER. You are not going to have any unless the law is changed.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Let us change the law, then.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I have a great personal affection for the two Members concerned with this particular bill, and I hope my remarks will not be considered unkindly by either one of those two Members.

We hear today that the taking of this land was unlawful or inequitable, or was done improperly or without fair consideration of the value of the land. I think it is very clear that the land was taken under lawful processes, a great deal of which was done not by condemnation but actually by negotiated sale. Contrary to impression left by some statements today a large part of the takings by the Federal Government are done by negotiation rather than by condemnation proceedings. I am sure that most of us are aware of the fact that condemnation proceedings consider the fair value of the land with rather generous liberality.

Mr. Chairman, I would point out that this bill is a special interest bill. It is aimed, according to the language of the report, to give some $250,000, a quarter of a million dollars, to the residents of two congressional districts. The General Services Administration has urged that it favors the enactment of general legislation on a Government-wide basis. It does not indicate any favorable consideration, express or implied, of this particular piece of legislation or of the special interest aspects of the bill.

I refer my colleagues to the language of the report on page 8 for confirmation of that fact. I would also point out if my colleagues will read the bill and will compare the committee amendment with the original bill, they will find out that we have here drafted a piece of special interest legislation under the guise of possible legislation to cover the needs of all of the people affected by the taking of land by the Federal Aviation Authority. This constitutes a very dangerous proposition.

The bill is retroactive, and it is interesting to note that the retroactive date happens to be sufficient to cover the needs of a certain selected prechosen class of people. We have had many classes of people who have lost land for airport and other facilities who have never received any compensation and would receive none under this bill, who are fully as deserving of this special benefit as the classes covered by this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further requests for time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 3 of the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the construction, protection, operation, and maintenance of a public airport in or in the vicinity of the District of Columbia", approved September 7, 1950 (64 Stat. 770), is amended (1) by inserting "(a)" immediately after "SEC. 3."; and (2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary is authorized, to the extent administratively determined to be fair and reasonable, under regulations prescribed by him, to reimburse the owners and tenants of land heretofore or hereafter acquired in connection with the airport at Chantilly, in Fairfax County, Virginia, for expenses and other losses and damages incurred by such owners and tenants, respectively, in the process and as a direct result of the moving of themselves and their families and possessions because of such acquisition of land, which reimbursement shall be in addition to, but not in duplication of, any payments in respect of such acquisition as may otherwise be authorized by law. The total of such reimbursement to the owners and tenants of any parcel of land shall in no event exceed 25 per centum of the fair value of such parcel of land as determined by the Secretary. No payment in reimbursement shall be made unless application therefor, supported by an itemized statement of the expenses, losses, and damages so incurred, shall have been submitted to the Secretary within one year following the date of such acquisition. The authority conferred by this subsection shall be delegated by the Secretary to such responsible officers or employees as he may determine. All functions performed under this subsection shall be exempt from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U.S.C. 1001–1011), except section 3 thereof (5 U.S.C. 1002)."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency is authorized, to the extent administratively determined to be fair and reasonable, under regulations prescribed by him, to reimburse the owners and tenants of land heretofore or hereafter acquired for the United States by such Agency for expenses and other losses and damages incurred by such owners and tenants, respectively, in the process and as a direct result of the moving of themselves and their families and possessions because of such acquisition of land. Such reimbursement shall be in addition to, but not in duplication of, any payments in respect of such acquisition as may otherwise be authorized by law. The total of such reimbursement to the owners and tenants of any parcel of land shall in no event exceed 25 per centum of the fair value of such parcel of land as determined by the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency. No payment in reimbursement shall be made unless application therefor, supported by an itemized statement of the expenses, losses, and damages so incurred, shall have been submitted to the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency within one year following the date of such acquisition or within one year following the date that the property is vacated by the applicant, whichever date is later, except that in the case of land acquired on or after July 1, 1958, and before the date of enactment of this Act the application for reimbursement may be made within one year following the date the property is vacated by the applicant, or within one year following the date of enactment of this Act, whichever date is later. The authority conferred by this Act may be delegated by the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency to such responsible officers or employees as he may determine. All functions performed under this Act shall be exempt from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U.S.C. 1001–1011), except section 3 thereof (5 U.S.C. 1002)."

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that there is anything I can contribute to the discussion on this bill that has not already been said. As far as I am concerned, this is a bad bill and I am opposed to it. I would be constrained to offer a motion to strike the enacting clause, but I think the thing to do is to let the proponents down as easily as possible, but nevertheless let them down. If we are going to enact this type of legislation it should be made government-wide. There are some farmers out in Iowa that are being dislocated by virtue of the roadbuilding program, and I am not going to be a party to passing a bill here today that does not take them into consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Would the gentleman also be in favor of repealing the act granting authority to the Secretary of the Interior and the Department of Defense to do the very same thing?

Mr. GROSS. I do not know anything about that, but I would prefer repeal to enactment of this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Until general legislation is passed?

Mr. GROSS. I am dealing with the bill I have before me now. But, I am not in favor of singling out any group for preferential treatment. You know, we are doing a pretty good job of building bridges for Virginia and Maryland. It seems to me they are doing pretty well as it is. I am opposed to this legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am rather surprised that there should be so much blood pressure raised over such a small matter as this in view of the astronomic figures we have been dealing with here today both at home and abroad.

Now, I wonder if the Members really understand what this is all about. And, I am just going to talk a minute or two to review this situation over here on the Virginia shore about these airports. Now, first we had an act passed by this Congress to establish an airport down at Burke. They went down there and moved those people out. They did not want to sell; they did not want to move out. But, they hustled them off of their property and took it over. Then in about a year they decided, after they disrupted all of these people, some of whom had lived in their homes for generations, they did not want it at all. So, they went up to Chantilly and they decided that they would put it up there. And, I happen to know of one individual who was thrown out of her property down at Burke, who went up to the area of the Dulles Airport, bought a home there, moved in, got settled, and before she really got settled, they came up and condemned her property and took it away from her again.

Now, those people have suffered a great hardship. And, when they took this property at Dulles Airport they were in such a hurry about it that they just threw those people off. And, I remember very distinctly that there was so much complaint, so much pressure put on these folks, because many were farmers that had their silos filled, their barns full of hay, their corncribs full of corn, and so forth, and all of that stuff had to be moved. There was so much arbitrary action on the part of this agency that the people complained so vigorously, I called the judge of the district court down there and told him what was going on. He very informally called in the agency, called in their people, and told them they had to stop that arbitrary kind of action and give those people reasonable time.

Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of just common, ordinary justice that should be meted out. If this property had been bought by the Department of the Interior, who probably should have handled it, the law would have provided for it. It provides for it in the case of the Army and Navy. Let us be fair about it. This does not involve much money. It is not one of these great big things such as we voted on just a while ago.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WOLF. I am curious to know, would the gentleman's attitude change toward housing for other people in America, would it be possible that we might get a rule on the housing bill, if we helped the gentleman with his folks in Virginia?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If the gentleman will permit me to answer his question, the gentleman's query indicates his utter insincerity with respect to the matter now under consideration by the House. I am talking about one thing, he is talking about something else and neither has any connection with the other on the merits. I am speaking to the merits of a question of an injustice that is being done to the people in Virginia by the Federal Government. It is a picayune attitude that the gentleman has taken who has just inquired of me, because he thinks that is a good way to punish me for some of the things about which he does not agree with me. If that is the kind of legislation he believes in, that is his privilege. I do not. But I do hope that this House will not be diverted from the question of common, plain, ordinary, honest justice that should be done, just because of some prejudice with respect to other matters which have no bearing on this matter.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. WIER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to yield my time to the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WIER].

Mr. WIER. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I may say that this whole affair over in Chantilly and northern Virginia has been quite a messy one because of the three different projects, one following the other, and now this one pops up. However, I have heard quite a bit today about the discretionary power of the military to do this very job of relocation on property that becomes embroiled in condemnation proceedings, with the Government.

I have had in recent years, just a couple of years ago, a situation where the Air Force came into my district to put in an airbase, but before they would take any steps at all they required the State to put up $1 million for the State's acquiring the property and satisfying judgments and satisfying the property owners by negotiation or otherwise. So they dodge the issue, not only in this particular project I had, but throughout the Nation they do the same thing. They require the State or the community to take over the acquisition of the property, thereby leaving these people that are dislocated without any avenue of redress. So do not say that the military does anything else but take a discretionary action in these matters. I am keenly alarmed about this Christmas present that has come up today, particularly at this time, before an election.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to offer an amendment to strike out the retroactive feature of this bill. I think rather than that it would be well for this body to beat this piece of legislation and to consider at an appropriate time on its merits the General Services proposal to accomplish reimbursement of moving expenses of all persons affected by Government seizure, Government taking of lands under eminent domain. This should be done when this body is not in a hurry, when we do not have the pressures of leaving and going to national conventions and the other things that are pressing on our minds. If we do that we will be able to achieve a more calm and a more correct approach, and we will secure enactment of better legislation.

I would point out that legislation of this sort has fallen to Presidential vetoes on many occasions. Many times Presidents of the United States have pointed out that retroactive legislation of this sort is not in the public interest. It is in a way a very dangerous precedent to make general legislation into special-interest legislation by the devices included in this bill. You take what should be prospective legislation and convert it into what is in effect retroactive legislation, special-interest legislation.

I think accordingly this measure should be defeated and the House should go on and consider a more constructive proposal, consider the needs of all the people affected by this kind of problem.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I will admit that the debate has taken a line this afternoon that I have never seen before in the House. I have stated that the objections, and I have stated they are sincere, have come from two directions. One has come from those who in the urban areas have had roadways take up their property, and there is no way to reimburse them. They are saying, "You cannot do this. You cannot reimburse these people over whom the Federal Aviation Agency has jurisdiction unless you take care of us."

The second objection comes, as near as I can make it out, from a group that says that there are two particular Congressmen who want this legislation that affects them in their area but they ought not to have it unless it is made general. But I do not believe that is the way you ought to legislate in the public interest. If there is a wrong that has been done, and we admit there is a wrong, something ought to be done about it. I will say to those people this afternoon, if you come along with a bill in the public interest that takes care of this wrong, I will be happy to support it. I do not think that is any reason for voting against the bill, which is good and in the public interest, because of wrongs that have been done. I think the resolution should be reported by all those who want to do what is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS] to close debate.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I have no personal interest in this bill at all. It is just a matter of simple justice. The committee has considered it now for over 2 years. The author of the bill, prior to taking over the Chantilly Airport, was seeking to do something for these people. On June 3, 1958, he introduced legislation to authorize these payments. That was H.R. 12772, 85th Congress.

We have given the same authority to the Army, to the Navy, the Air Corps, and to the Department of Interior. There is no precedent here. It has been done by the Congress before. It is in the law today for those departments. This extends to the Federal Aviation Agency the same authority that has been extended to other departments of this Government.

There is no precedent to this brief retroactive provision, because that was done in the Department of Interior bill in 1958, retroactive to 1952.

I think we should consider this matter solely on its merits. I feel that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the subcommittee which has done such a good job of holding hearings and developing all the facts should be sustained by this House and the committee bill should be approved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman being in doubt, on a division there were—ayes 66, noes 81.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. HAYS.

The Committee again divided and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 89, noes 87.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMPSON of Texas, Chairman of the Committee on the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2467) to amend the act of September 7, 1950, to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to reimburse owners and tenants of lands acquired for Chantilly Airport for their moving expenses, pursuant to House Resolution 558, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MACHROWICZ. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 190, nays 164, not voting 78, as follows:

The SPEAKER. He is recorded as voting "aye."

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the RECORD is in error, in that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] is absent.

The SPEAKER. On the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] the name of Mr. BURDICK will not be recorded.

Mr. AVERY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. AVERY. Could the Chair advise us what the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] was?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked if the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] was recorded, and he was recorded. Mr. DINGELL said that Mr. BURDICK was not here.

Mr. AVERY. I could not understand the request. I just wanted it to be plain what was done.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD has already been corrected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the reimbursement of owners and tenants of land acquired by the Federal Aviation Agency for their moving expenses."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. McGown, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 3900. An act to permit the admission to registry and the use in the coastwise trade of certain foreign-built hydrofoil vessels;

H.R. 7895. An act for the relief of Gloria Anne Loveday;

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 2339. An act to revise, codify, and enact into law, title 39 of the United States Code, entitled "The Postal Service";

H.R. 7758. An act to improve the administration of overseas activities of the Government of the United States, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 10921. An act to amend section 35 of chapter III of the Life Insurance Act for the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 675. An act to regulate the practice of physical therapy by registered physical therapists in the District of Columbia;

S. 2709. An act directing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the city of Flandreau, S. Dak., any interest remaining in the United States to certain property which it conveyed to such city by the act of August 21, 1916 (39 Stat. 524);

S. 2979. An act to authorize the Administrator of General Services Administration to make grants in cash to the Convalescent Hospital of Washington, District of Columbia, Inc., for the purpose of enabling the corporation to establish a convalescent and chronic disease hospital in the District of Columbia;

S. 3147. An act relating to interest rates payable on obligations of the United States purchased by the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund; and

S.J. Res. 217. Joint resolution to authorize the President to make certain adjustments in the sugar quota for Cuba.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2969. An act to authorize the award posthumously of appropriate medals to Chaplain George L. Fox, Chaplain Alexander D. Goode, Chaplain Clark V. Poling, and Chaplain John P. Washington.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 10495) entitled "An act to authorize appropriations for the fiscal years 1962 and 1963 for the construction of certain highways in accordance with title 23 of the United States Code, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 397) entitled "Joint resolution to enable the United States to participate in the resettlement of certain refugees."

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to Senate amendment numbered 15 to the bill (H.R. 12740) entitled "An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes," further insists upon its amendments numbered 1, 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 14, 15, and 17, and requests a conference with the House, and appoints Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. HILL, Mr. ROBERTSON, Mr. HOLLAND, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. SALTONSTALL, and Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3616) to deny to the District of Columbia, in suits on claims arising out of the negligent operation of vehicles owned or controlled by it and operated by its employees in the performance of their official duties, the defense of governmental immunity, to relieve such employees of liability in such cases to third persons, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HAYS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us a little about this bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I will be glad to comply with the gentleman's request.

The purpose of this bill is to deny to the District of Columbia, in suits on claims arising out of the negligent operaton of vehicles owned or controlled by the District of Columbia and operated by its employees, such as policemen and firemen, in the performance of their official duties, the defense of governmental immunity, and to relieve such employees of liability in such cases to third persons.

Under existing law, the District of Columbia cannot be sued on a claim arising out of the negligent operation of a police car or firetruck. This bill would make the District of Columbia liable and relieve the employees, but the degree of liability would be gross negligence. The District would not be liable unless the negligence was gross negligence.

Mr. HAYS. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "District of Columbia Employee Non-Liability Act."

SEC. 2. As used in this Act the term—

(a) "Commissioners" means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or their designated agent.

(b) "Court" means either the United States District Court for the District of Columbia or the Municipal Court for the District of Columbia, depending upon the amount involved in an action under the authority of this Act as related to the limits of jurisdiction of the said courts.

(c) "District" means the Government of the District of Columbia, a municipal corporation.

(d) "Emergency run" means the movement of a District-owned vehicle, by direction of the operator or of some other authorized person or agency, under circumstances which lead the operator or such person or agency to believe that such vehicle should proceed expeditiously upon a particular mission or to a designated location for the purpose of dealing with a supposed fire or other emergency, an alleged violation of a statute or regulation, or other incident requiring emergency action, or the prompt transportation to a place of treatment or greater safety of an alleged sick or injured person.

(e) "Emergency vehicle" means a vehicle assigned (1) to the Fire Department of the District or to the Metropolitan Police Department and not designated by the Commissioners as a nonemergency vehicle; or (2) to other departments or officials of the District and designated by the Commissioners as an emergency vehicle.

(f) "Employee" means a person serving as an officer or employee of the District, whether or not paid by the District, or a person formerly so engaged, or the representative of a deceased officer or employee of the District.

(g) "Vehicle" means every type of conveyance or machine capable of movement on land, or in water or air, including an animal being ridden and any animal-drawn machinery or conveyance.

SEC. 3. Hereafter the District of Columbia shall not assert the defense of governmental immunity in any suit at law in which a claim is asserted against it for money only on account of damage to or loss of property or on account of personal injury or death caused by the negligent or wrongful act or omission of any employee of the District occurring as the result of the operation by such employee, within the scope of his office or employment, of a vehicle owned or controlled by the District: Provided, That in the case of a claim arising out of the operation of an emergency vehicle on an emergency run the District shall be liable only for gross negligence. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed as depriving the District of any other defense in law or equity which it may have to any such action or give to any person, corporation, partnership, or association any right to institute or maintain any suit against the District which it did not have prior to the date of enactment hereof.

SEC. 4. The judgment in any such action shall constitute a complete bar to any action by the claimant by reason of the same subject matter against the employee of the District whose act or omission gave rise to the claim. No suit shall be instituted involving any claim described in section 3 unless the claimant shall have first given notice to the District in accordance with the Act of February 28, 1933 (47 Stat. 1370; sec. 12–208, D.C. Code, 1951 edition) and shall have presented to the District in writing a claim for money damages in connection therewith, and the District has had six months from the date of such filing within which to make final disposition of such claim. The administrative disposition of a claim by the District shall not be competent evidence of liability or amount of damages in proceedings on any such claim.

SEC. 5. In any case involving any claim described in section 3 in which the trial court shall consider the verdict excessive, the court may order a remittitur of so much of the amount of such verdict or judgment, as the case may be, as it considers excessive, and either permit the party in whose favor the verdict was rendered or the party recovering such judgment, as the case may be, to file a remittitur.

SEC. 6. After the effective date of this Act, no civil action or proceeding shall be brought or be maintained against an employee of the District for loss of or damage to property or for personal injury, including death, resulting from the operation by such employee of any vehicle if it be alleged in the complaint or develop in a later stage of the proceeding that the employee was acting within the scope of his office or employment, unless the District shall, in an action brought against it for such damage or injury, including death, specifically deny liability on the ground that the employee was not, at the time and place alleged, acting within the scope of his office or employment. If in any such civil action or proceeding pending in a court in the District of Columbia as of the effective date of this Act the District has not been named as a defendant, said District shall be joined as a defendant and after its answer has been filed and subject to the provisions of the preceding sentence, the action shall be dismissed as to the employee and the case shall proceed as if the District had been a party defendant from the inception thereof.

SEC. 7. Nothing in this Act shall be construed so as to relieve any District employee from liability to the District for negligent damage to or loss of District property.

SEC. 8. This Act shall take effect thirty days after its enactment.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RESETTLEMENT OF CERTAIN REFUGEES

Mr. WALTER submitted the following conference report and statement on the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 397) to enable the United States to participate in the resettlement of certain refugees:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2088)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 397) to enable the United States to participate in the resettlement of certain refugees, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered (3).

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered (1), (2), (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), (9), (10), and (11), and agree to the same.

FRANCIS E. WALTER,
MICHAEL A. FEIGHAN,
ARCH A. MOORE, Jr.,
Managers on the Part of the House.

JAMES O. EASTLAND,
ESTES KEFAUVER,
EVERETT M. DIRKSEN,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 397) to enable the United States to participate in the resettlement of certain refugees, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The amendments of the Senate, numbered 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, incorporate in House Joint Resolution 397 the provisions of two bills, H.R. 9385 and H.R. 10419, acted upon by the House on January 18 and March 7, 1960, respectively. House Joint Resolution 397 was approved by the House on April 4, 1960.

The Senate has found it preferable to act on one bill instead of taking separate action on three measures pending before it.

The amendments of the Senate taken from the House bills extend until June 30, 1962, the two special immigration programs affecting Portuguese victims of the natural calamity which occurred in the Azores, and the Dutch expellees from Indonesia.

Further, House Joint Resolution 397, as amended, extends for 1 year the provisions under which alien orphans adopted by U.S. citizens may enter the United States under applicable provisions of the law in which no substantive changes are made by this legislation.

House Joint Resolution 397, as amended, also includes the provisions of the House bill strengthening our antinarcotics laws in providing for mandatory exclusion and deportation of aliens who engage or have engaged in trafficking of marihuana.

Amendment No. 10 relates to a provision of our general immigration laws prescribing the manner in which an alien in the United States may be granted the status of permanent residence without having to leave this country for the sole purpose of obtaining an immigrant visa abroad if such visa is available to him under the provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act. In view of the frequent abuses of the immigration laws by deserting seamen, alien crewmen are not eligible for adjustment of their status. This provision was contained in the House bill, H.R. 9385.

The other amendments of the Senate appear to conform with the intention of the House expressed in the passage of House Joint Resolution 397, enabling the United States to participate in the resettlement of certain refugees in connection with the World Refugee Year. Our share in the resettlement of refugees under the mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees will be determined upon the number of refugees admitted by other countries since the beginning of World Refugee Year which was July 1, 1959. A separate amendment of the Senate prescribes the limitations for the admission of refugees generally termed as "difficult to resettle" by setting up reasonable safeguards designed to relieve the various States, municipalities, etc., from the burden to support refugees falling into this category.

In conference, agreement was obtained to delete from the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 397), as amended, a provision under which certain aliens who are not under the mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees could be paroled into the United States.

FRANCIS E. WALTER,
MICHAEL A. FEIGHAN,
ARCH A. MOORE, Jr.,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on House Joint Resolution 397.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SOFIA SKOLOPOULOS

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2765) for the relief of Sofia Skolopoulos.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purposes of sections 101(a)(27)(A) and 205 of the Immigration and Nationality Act the minor child, Sofia Skolopoulos, shall be held and considered to be natural-born alien child of Mr. and Mrs. William Sykas, citizens of the United States: Provided, That the natural parents of Sofia Skolopoulos shall not by virtue of such parentage be accorded any right, privilege, or status under the Immigration and Nationality Act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ALIENS

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the resolution (H.J. Res. 722) relating to the entry of certain aliens, with Senate amendments thereto and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Insert the following new sections:

"SEC. 18. For the purposes of sections 101(a)(27)(A) and 205 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, the minor child, Janusz Dominik Textor-Rolleder, shall be held and considered to be the natural-born alien child of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Rolleder, citizens of the United States.

"SEC. 19. For the purposes of sections 101(a)(27)(A) and 205 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, the minor child, Naoko Kitazawa Cooper, shall be held and considered to be the natural-born alien child of Mr. and Mrs. James Kipling Cooper, citizens of the United States.

"SEC. 20. For the purposes of sections 101(a)(27)(A) and 205 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, the minor child, Adamantios Demoglou Andrew, shall be held and considered to be the natural-born alien child of Mr. and Mrs. William Andrew, citizens of the United States."

Renumber section 18 as section 21.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARGARET P. COPIN

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE].

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 4546) for the relief of Margaret P. Copin, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Insert the following new section:

"SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, benefits payable by reason of the amendments made by the first section of this Act shall be paid from the civil service retirement and disability fund."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING BANKRUPTCY ACT

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FORRESTER].

Mr. FORRESTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 6556) to amend subdivision (c) of section 39 of the Bankruptcy Act (11 U.S.C. 67c) so as to clarify time for review of orders of referees, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after "thereto." insert: "Unless the person aggrieved shall petition for review of such order within such ten-day period, or any extension thereof, the order of the referee shall become final."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSPORTATION OF MAIL BY AIR

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 583 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 12595) to clarify the law with respect to transportation of airmail, and for other purposes. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. BUDGE] and yield myself such time as I may consume.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the consideration of the so-called airlift bill, to clarify the law with respect to the transportation of mail by air. It would prohibit the Postmaster General from transporting 4-cent letter mail by air. There are various provisions in the bill which affect different types of services and areas.

I urge the adoption of the rule and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BUDGE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I know of no opposition to the adoption of this rule. I think the legislation is necessary in order to protect, at least in small measure, the railroad industry of the Nation which could well be destroyed if this plan is carried to its ultimate conclusion.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the rule is adopted, and that the legislation will receive favorable consideration.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania [Mrs. GRANAHAN] will be in charge of the bill.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 12595) to clarify the law with respect to transportation of airmail, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 12595) with Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Chairman, I feel it imperative that the House pass the legislation now before us, H.R. 12595, which will clarify the law with respect to transportation of mail by air. There is a pressing need for this legislation to be passed so that it will serve as a declaration of congressional intent in the field of mail transportation. As chairman of the subcommittee appointed to consider H.R. 12595, and similar legislation, I filed the committee report and a statement of supplemental views on this bill.

The Post Office Department, during the past 7 years, has been conducting an experimental airlift of first-class, 4-cent letter mail. No legislative authority has been granted for the conduct of this experiment. Witnesses for the Post Office Department maintain that the authorization for air transportation of such mail matter has been granted them by litigation in the courts. Regardless of the validity of this assumption, the committee feels that it is the responsibility of the Congress to decide the pattern of postal transportation, with the Post Office Department having the responsibility of administration within the terms set forth by the Congress.

H.R. 12595 prohibits the Postmaster General from arranging for the transportation of first-class, 4-cent mail by air. Excluded from the provisions of this bill is first-class, 4-cent mail intended for transmission first, between the 48 contiguous States of the United States and Alaska, Hawaii, the Canal Zone, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or any territory, possession, or protectorate of the United States; second, within and between any of the places referred to above which are outside of the 48 contiguous States of the United States; and third, with respect to military mail between a port of embarkation or debarkation in any of the places referred to above.

This bill does not alter existing authority for the establishment of air star routes in localities where surface transportation is inadequate. In such cases, star route contract requirements prevail with regard to competitive bidding. Neither does this bill restrict in any way the Postmaster General's existing authority to provide for emergency mail service where such action is necessitated because of flood, fire, or other calamitous visitations. In such grave emergencies, existing law grants the Postmaster General authority to contract for such service without advertising.

The purpose of this proposed legislation does not contemplate a deterioration in postal service rendered on first-class, 4-cent letter mail. It provides that all existing laws granting the Postmaster General exceptional authority in emergencies and in instances where surface transportation is wholly inadequate, to fly first-class, 4-cent letter mail.

This proposed legislation does direct the Postmaster General to discontinue the so-called experimental flying of 4-cent letter mail between large cities where existing surface transportation is adequate.

Open hearings were held on this bill on June 6, 9, and 10, at which representatives of the railroads, airlines, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, National Postal Transportation Association, as well as Members of Congress who introduced legislation, and the Post Office Department testified. Representatives of the railroads, the employee groups, and most Members of Congress who appeared testified in favor of H.R. 9488, now replaced by the substitute bill H.R. 12595 which was reported favorably by the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

I would like to again emphasize that H.R. 12595 makes adequate provision for airlifting mail to and from Alaska and Hawaii, and also provides for airlifting of military mail outside of the 48 contiguous States of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the House will give its approval to this much needed legislation which will serve to clarify the situation regarding the airlifting of 4-cent letter mail.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. GRANAHAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to associate myself with the remarks of the distinguished gentlewoman from Pennsylvania and to congratulate her on the fine work she has done on this bill, and for her expeditious handling of first-class letter mail. I associate myself with her remarks.

Mr. TOLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. GRANAHAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TOLL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to also associate myself with the distinguished gentlewoman from Pennsylvania for the very fine and clear explanation which she made. I hope that this body will vote unanimously for the pending bill.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CUNNINGHAM].

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I want to say first off that I am very appreciative to the chairman of our full committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MURRAY] and the ranking minority Member, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], because without their cooperation this legislation would not be before us today. I also want to express my appreciation to the subcommittee chairmaned by my very dear friend, the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania [Mrs. GRANAHAN], and the full committee which brought this legislation out; also to the Committee on Rules, who gave us every consideration, and to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] for allowing it to be scheduled.

I might say, to begin with, that this legislation has been introduced by several Members of this body. I might name them in order: the gentlman from Idaho [Mr. BUDGE], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CARNAHAN], the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PORTER], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD], the gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MURPHY], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA], and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WIER].

Testimony in behalf of this legislation was offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BROWN], the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. MORRIS], and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. THOMSON]. We had 3 full days of hearings on this legislation, and the subcommittee voted it out with only one dissenting vote. The full committee voted it out with three dissenting votes, a total of 14 to 3.

There are many interested groups and organizations throughout these United States that have supported this legislation, and I will just name a few: The American Association of Railroads; the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees; Railway Labor Executive Association; National Association of Railroad and Utility Commissioners; National Postal Transport Association; Midwest Association of Railroad and Utility Commissioners; Mountain Pacific State Conference of Public Utility Commissioners; Southeast Shippers Advisory Board; Central Western Shippers Advisory Board; Southern Railway; Joint Conference of Affiliated Postal Employees of Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

And, there have been many newspaper editorials favoring this particular legislation. I am sorry to say that a paper or two here in the District of Columbia saw fit to disagree with this bill, but I can understand their position. After all, the Postmaster General, I am sure, has a great deal of influence with these newspapers because of the tremendous mail subsidies that they receive, and I am sorry that they did not understand the bill and took the position that they did.

Mr. Chairman, I might say now that there has been a traditional spread, and the Congress has passed legislation to provide that there shall be a 4-cent letter rate for surface transportation and a 7-cent rate for airmail. This spread is in very great jeopardy as the result of the Postmaster's unauthorized and illegal program of airlifting 4-cent letter mail by air. He started this out in 1953 as an experiment. Many of us were not too concerned at that time, because an experiment is an experiment, and we perhaps closed our eyes to it, even though there was no authorization that he should do this. But, he has never from that day had legislative authority to undertake this experiment, and, now this year, he has expanded the airlift in tremendous proportions.

I might tell you, if you are not familiar with the way this operates, that this so-called experimental airlift operates in this manner: The Postmaster General takes a 4-cent letter, which belongs to surface transportation, and sends it by air on what he calls a space-available basis. Under his regulations the airline people must take the mail once it is delivered to them within a 12-hour period. If he trucks the mail from the post office here in Washington to the airport on its way to New York, it may wait down there at the airport for 10 or 12 hours before it is moved by air. When it reaches New York, if it ever does, it is then taken from the airport in New York back to the post office in New York where it is sorted and worked and distributed.

Now, this airlift proposition is definitely more expensive. This was brought out in the testimony we had before the committee. There is no question that, any position to the contrary. There is no question but what this is a more expensive way of moving mail than by surface transportation.

Furthermore, the airlift does not speed up the mail as the Postmaster General claims. There is a very good reason why it does not.

When you ship this mail on this airlift basis, it has to wait at our airport for up to 12 hours, for example, and then goes to New York. Then it has to be sorted and worked; whereas, if this mail leaves the Washington railroad terminal, the moment that train leaves, that mail is being worked en route by the postal employees in a railway mail car. So that when it gets to New York it is ready for distribution.

It seems to some people that, surely, you can send this mail faster by air than by rail. But the point is that under this airlift program, with the possible 12-hour delay and the fact that it has to be sorted and worked after it reaches its destination, it has not speeded up the the service. So I want to make it very, very clear that there is no substitution for en route distribution.

One of the most amazing things that came out in our hearings—and this is something that concerns all of us, because the Post Office Department operates at a deficit—is this: It is clear that the airlift is going to increase the deficit. First of all, this airlift is more expensive than surface transportation, but there is another financial problem. We found that between 1955 and 1960 the volume of airmail letters, those carrying a 7-cent stamp, had decreased by 356,300,000 pieces. That means that a large percentage of the regular airmail is no longer being used. It has fallen off that much in the few short years between 1955 and 1960. What is the answer? The answer is simply this, that people have heard that the airlift is in operation; they are familiar with it, so instead of putting a 7-cent stamp on their letter, they put a 4-cent stamp on it, thinking that this is going to go by air anyway. So that is going to have a very serious financial impact upon our postal rate structure deficitwise. That is something that ought to be borne in mind by every single member of this committee, because it could lead to this situation: that as the airlift is expanded, it could mean that everybody will be sending their mail at a 4-cent rate. That is going to have very serious consequences.

Mr. Chairman, let me tell you something about the economic effect that this airlift has upon our Nation's railroads. Between 1953 and the middle of 1958, 115 trains have been discontinued, after the Post Office Department had withdrawn the railway post office cars. I would like to quote from page 25 of the committee hearings, from the testimony before our committee of a representative of the railroads, when he stated:

> Nor should there be any secret that if the plans of the Post Office Department to divert large portions of first-class mail from the railroads are carried out the decline in railroad passenger facilities will be accelerated at a rate which has never before been seen in this country.

And never before have truer words been spoken.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I cannot complete my statement in 2 minutes, but I will say this.

The Postmaster states that X number of trains have been taken off. In fact, he says 1,215 mail-carrying trains have been taken off since the airlift began. That is certainly proof that when he started airlifting this mail, a great number of passenger trains have been taken off. Where the airlift is used, it is used for transporting mail between major cities, usually on a hop of 500 miles or more. Most of these trains that have been taken off were short-run trains, branch lines, because the statistics are that 83 percent of the trains that have been discontinued have operated less than 200 miles.

They are using that as an excuse for the airlift of mail. In those situations the airlift is of no use because when these short runs are discontinued the mail will move by truck.

During the snowstorms of February and March it was necessary for the Post Office Department to divert over 205,000 pounds of regular airmail to the railroads because the planes were grounded. If this airlift program continues and all the passenger trains are taken off, it simply means that in another emergency such as weather the railroads are not going to be there to move this mail. Further in times of national emergency, where the National Government would take over all or almost all of our passenger trains, and this airlift program continues, there are going to be no trains left to move the mail. That is certainly a very, very serious situation that confronts us.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me if I get him more time?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Yes. I would be delighted to yield to my friend and able colleague from Iowa.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska, at the request of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WOLF. I want to congratulate the gentleman. I intended to speak on this, but he is doing such an excellent job that I think anything I might say might be superfluous.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I thank the gentleman. He is an excellent legislator and I appreciate his remarks.

What is the opposition to this? I have been working hard and diligently with other members of the committee since January on this matter. I have never received one letter urging that this program be continued except the letter from the Postmaster General. There are some people who are interested in this, of course; the Postmaster General and the airplane lobby, and they have been quite busy these last few days.

It is not quite enough that we build runways for the airplane people, we build them terminal facilities, we give them weather guidance, radar, and control towers; we give them 7-cent mail, which gives a very lucrative return to them. They are not satisfied with that. Now they want to take the little that is left, the 4-cent mail which rightfully belongs to the railroads, away from them. I think they have certainly gone too far, and certainly a stop should be put to this. There is no justification for this. There is a legal way to do this. If the Postmaster General wanted to, he could come to Congress and ask for it. There is a legal way to do this. I will not go into it because I do not have time, but there is a way he can do it.

To get back to the airplanes, with all of the subsidies we give them and have given them, I do not think we should subsidize them any further by giving them this 4-cent mail. We cannot take this away from the railroads, which is rightfully theirs. This has nothing to do with a subsidy to the railroads. The railroads do not want a subsidy, they do not ask for a subsidy. But if we take this mail away from them and give it to the airlines we are giving the airlines an additional subsidy.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I am sure all of us have transportation on our minds at this time of the evening and this time of the session of one sort or another, so it is an appropriate topic to discuss.

The issue here right now is not the railroads versus the airlines. The issue here is whether or not the Postmaster General can make his own law or whether this Congress makes the law. The issue here is not for or against fast and efficient mail service, and letting Americans who put a 4-cent stamp on their mail get it sent by airmail. I am from Oregon, and we really need and appreciate fast service, but we are willing to pay the full cost. We want the Congress to decide this question, not the Postmaster General. The fact is that the airlift as practiced now by the Postmaster General is not authorized. The authorization of space available on airlift mail ought to be done by the House and the Senate acting through their respective committees. There will be time for that next year, with the new Postmaster General. The Postmaster General should abide by the law. He has not abided by the law.

He is a violator of the law in this case and in many others, a four-times violator of the law. He violated the law 2 years ago, and I am sure many of you remember when he came to the Appropriations Committee and said he had to have more money. We have an antideficiency law on the books which states to the head of the department: "Do not overspend your money because we do not want you coming back to us. Portion it out over the quarter." The Postmaster General, after intentionally overspending, said: "I will cut the service if you do not give me more money." That is what he did. That law has no penalty clause in it, so nothing could be done about it.

He violated the law with regard to the McKinsey report. The gentleman from Virginia, Mr. GARY, will back me up in this. It had to do with the hiring of consultants and their pay. The Atomic Energy Commission had to obey the law and pay less than $100 per day to consultants, but the Postmaster General made his own rules and found a loophole that plainly violated the spirit of our laws if not the letter.

Then in 1958 came the big question of postal policy in the matter of third- and fourth-class post offices and star routes and how their cost as public services should be handled and reflected in accounting, but he has not followed the policy laid down by Congress. The Postmaster General violated the letter of the law, but again there is no penalty clause.

Let the Congress decide what to do about the airlift and let us make the Postmaster General obey the law.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARRY].

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter as to whether or not we progress or retrogress. I call your attention to a statement made by Postmaster General Barry in 1837—and I claim him as a kin at this point in my history.

> The celerity of mail should be equal to the most rapid transition of the traveler. For the Post Office Department to be outstripped by the ordinary means of travel is deemed discreditable to the Department, injurious to the general interest of the country and a thing, therefore, not to be permitted.

Much has been said by the gentleman from Oregon and also the gentleman from Nebraska about the legality of the Postmaster General's position with respect to the airlift. I will refer you to page 2 of the Supplemental Views, paragraph 2, Legal Status Of Air Lift. On January 28, 1955, the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia expressed doubt about the competence of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad to bring suit. It was in the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad case. The court stated:

> On the other hand, for the failure at this point of the plaintiffs to show irreparable injury, the motion for permanent injunction will be denied.

The court of appeals in the same case ruled:

> We are unable to find any prohibitions of the present experimental program while we do find statutory provisions broad enough to encompass it within their terms. In sum, we conclude that the experimental program for carrying ordinary first-class mail by air is within the statutory authority of the Postmaster General and is authorized by law.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARRY. I am sorry, I cannot yield.

It is also asked, why is not the Postmaster General in here getting specific authority for the airlift? The facts are he has asked for just that authority and a bill died in committee which would have given him the authority. Those who now accuse the Postmaster General for not seeking the authority were the very ones in the committee who tried to substantiate the fact that he did not have the authority by pointing to the bill that would give him the authority. They just twisted the argument around to suit themselves in the present debate.

As to serving the public, certainly the Postmaster General must bring the greatest service to the greatest number of people that he possibly can. There are times when railroad service cannot be relied on to transport mail between two given points as there is no railroad and it is sometimes necessary that the mail is transferred as many as three or four times in a circuitous route. This may occur between communities where there is an airline between the two points. Why should we deny the people living in those communities the most rapid form of mail service possible? I think we should not.

Now, I would like to speak to the Congressmen from the areas of Chicago and the areas of New York. When businessmen in these cities dictate their letters in the morning and their secretaries transcribe them in the afternoon it is too late for the letters to be dispatched and be on trains plying between the two cities that same afternoon. Those trains normally leave in the late afternoon.

I strongly urge Congressmen living in metropolitan centers to consider the fact that you are imposing upon everyone who sends a letter in these cities the possibility of 48-hour delivery instead of 24-hour delivery.

Mr. PUCINSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRY. I am sorry; I cannot yield.

Mr. PUCINSKI. The gentleman referred to Chicago.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield. We have given up 12 minutes of our time to the opposition. That means the proponents of this legislation have 42 minutes to debate whereas those against the bill have only 18 minutes to debate the matter. I am sorry, but I cannot yield.

Let me explain, if I can, why this is so. Planes leaving the big cities in the late afternoons often go out without sufficient passengers and on a space available basis there is room for mail. The mail that is delivered to the post offices in New York, Chicago, and other major cities in the United States misses the major trains and would normally have to lay over until the following day before it gets dispatched in the direction to which it is intended. By the use of the airlift mail arrives in the post office in the early morning of the following day, saving a full 24 hours on delivery.

Something may have been said with respect to the sorting of mail on the train. Let me assure you that between the major cities of this Nation mail is not sorted in mail cars. It is only the mail that is picked up en route that is sorted. The mail that goes between major cities is put into cars, the cars are sealed and not opened until they reach their destination.

In reference to the matter of cost, if there are Members in the Congress who are interested in economy, let me say that the Assistant Postmaster General testified that $144,129 was saved in 1959 by use of the airlift rather than the rail. Remember, too, that there are $325 million worth of train revenue received from the Post Office Department from mail. Only $3,400,000 is airlifted or approximately 1 percent of the $325 million paid to the railroads. So we are talking about 1 percent of the total mail revenue received. In fact with an increase of rail revenue from the Post Office for the next fiscal year estimated to be $25 million greater than the last fiscal year, the entire airlift mail revenue equals only one-seventh of the increase the rails will receive in the coming fiscal year.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 12595, and urge its enactment. In his letter transmitted to the chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, the Postmaster General stated that the proposed bill would, and I quote:

> Seriously hinder and delay the natural progressive development of the postal service and force the Department to ignore public demands for more expeditious transportation of mail in keeping with modern modes of transportation.

What he is saying, in effect, is that the enactment of this bill into law would roadblock the execution of a master plan designed to completely replace conventional rail transportation of letters by air transportation, where the latter is available. It is because I am opposed to the execution of such a plan, that I am in favor of this bill.

I cannot speak for the entire United States, but I can speak for my own Second Utah Congressional District. I have found, in my district, no popular demand for the abolition of the rail delivery of mail in favor of exclusive air delivery. On the contrary, I have found a strong demand that we cut out the frills and the nonsense in our governmental services.

The aforesaid plan is rooted in the proposition that anything that is bigger, faster, and more expensive, represents progress, regardless of cost. From this proposition, I must respectfully dissent. The fantastically increased expenses which this plan will entail are not justified by the alleged savings in delivery time.

The citizens of my district are budget minded and economy conscious. They view with alarm the mounting postal deficit and public debt, on the one hand, and the tons of junk mail which land on their desks every day, on the other, most of which is never read, and indeed, never even opened. They tearfully watch the cost of the lowly postage stamp go up, and hear threats on all sides to drive the cost still higher. They see their postal budget becoming a larger and larger item in their total business operating budget. They cry out for economies and cutbacks. Frankly, I find myself completely sympathetic with their point of view.

Now they are confronted with a master plan which seems to violate the most basic concept of sound economy in governmental administration, namely, that of limiting premium service to those who want premium service, and who are willing to pay a premium price therefor. This, to me, is not progress, but is a step in the wrong direction.

There are certain elemental laws of physics which not even the Post Office can repeal. Every little boy in this country has learned before he was 6 years old that it requires less muscular efforts to pull his baby sister in a wagon than to carry her in his arms. Why, then, do we insist on talking about carrying all our mail, as it were, in our arms, or, more accurately, on our wings, at fantastically greater expense, even where the slight increase in speed is an inconsequential factor to the correspondent?

I am thinking, now, of the situation of a typical professional man: a doctor, an accountant, or an attorney, such as I was for 16 years. Or perhaps it is the case of a department store, or the local garage or service station. Every month hundreds of billings will be sent out by these people, most of them to be delivered locally. Airmail obviously will here be of no benefit. Nevertheless the proposed plan of the Post Office will require such letters to help carry the burden of the extra cost of carrying long-distance letters by airmail. How can such an inequity be defended?

Even where letters are long-distance letters, there is still no showing that most of the senders want them sent by airmail. If they do, then let them pay for that premium service, but let us not distribute the cost of that premium among those who want no part of it.

I am reluctant to build up an argument in favor of this bill on the sole grounds that we need to protect the railroads. But the facts are rather clear that the historic role which the railroads have played in mail transportation is a factor which cannot be ignored. We need rail transportation. Without in any way reflecting upon the efficient service which our air transport companies have provided for us, the fact still remains, first, that many persons in sending valuable documents by mail would rather that they be transported by railroad; and, second, that in time of extremely bad weather, railroads are far more suitable and reliable. These are factors which must be carefully weighed before launching out in the direction of a plan which may seriously cripple one of the finest, most historic, and most permanently useful industries which we have in this country.

For the above reasons, Mr. Chairman, I urge that we proceed cautiously in this matter. The enactment of H.R. 12595 would require the Post Office Department to reevaluate its so-called airlift, and to harmonize its proposed solution of the mail transportation problem with the universally recognized requirements of economy. I urge the adoption of this legislation.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the bill now before the committee. I have the honor of representing the city of Council Bluffs, Iowa, where a mail terminal has been located for many, many years, where the mail is sorted and goes to the various points. That terminal operates efficiently and the railroads see to it that the mail is delivered as expeditiously as possible.

Should we take revenue from the railroads, as has been the case recently, by sending 4-cent letters by airmail? If this continues, soon we are going to take much revenue from the railroads who pay local, State, and Federal taxes by the millions upon millions of dollars.

May I express a word of commendation for our Postmaster General Arthur Summerfield, for certainly he has given better mail service to everyone in America. He has given front-gate service to hundreds of thousands of farmers, who did not have front-gate service when he became Postmaster General. Those people are very grateful and they are entitled to the service which they are now getting, and more farm front-gate service will be provided.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good bill and should be adopted.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I have seen the parading of masked ghosts or whether I am hearing screwy talk. I heard reference made to a claim that we would save several million dollars in carrying cost if we sent letters by air instead of by rail. Then, why, for goodness sake, do they put upon the people who use airmail a 7-cent tax?

There is something illogical in all of this. I thought when we were raising the 3-cent stamp to 4 cents that it should carry the pirates flag, as first-class mail at 3 cents was returning a profit. Now we are told that the mail that we pay 7 cents for can be carried very much cheaper than the mail for which we pay 4 cents. Somebody is screwy. I do not want to say that the Office of the Postmaster General is a screwy factory, because I do not think that is true. I think the Postmaster General is an estimable gentleman, but there seems to be a lot of people around him who find it hard to figure things out.

I am interested in the railway postal workers. They constitute a loyal, well trained, dedicated body of public servants and for many, many years have given to the postal transportation a service unsurpassed in efficiency. I met with them in Chicago some years ago. Even then they saw on the walls the shadows of a conspiracy to destroy the finest postal transportation setup the world had ever known. Mail that was intended to go by rail was being shipped by truck and by air.

No matter how much postage had been paid on it, 4 cents or 7 cents, mail was being sent by air. Even a child of 6 could figure what this meant—part of a drive to destroy the railway mail service. It was that simple, just that brutal and unexplainable to the American taxpayers.

These fine railway postal workers, who have been the backbone of our postal transportation system for many, many years—I do not want somebody to say to me that they do not distribute the mail when it goes between Chicago and New York and that they only distribute the mail that goes into the little towns, the big and little towns. Let me say to my colleague, I think he is from New York, who sought to bring me into agreement that New York and Chicago are the United States of America, that he stands as far apart from me as a 4-cent stamp that ought to be a 3-cent stamp and a 7-cent stamp that under the Postmaster General's airlift does the work of a 4-cent stamp.

I anticipate that this bill will pass by a whopping majority.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. I yield to my dear friend, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CUNNINGHAM], because he knows so much more about this subject than I do.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I thank you very much for the compliment. Some people maintain that you cannot stop progress. I want to make the observation that this is a step backward; it is not progress at all. It does not speed up the mail.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. ST. GEORGE].

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, it is quite evident to me that I am definitely in a minority in this matter, but I am rather accustomed to being in a minority and that does not really bother me very much.

First of all, it seems to me that the argument that this is rather unprogressive legislation is probably the understatement of the day. Of course there is going to be a change. Of course letters are going to be carried by air. And of course at the present time 4-cent mail does not get the treatment that 7-cent airmail gets. This is indeed an experiment. The 4-cent mail is only carried by air when there is space left over. The 7-cent mail takes precedence all along the line. And for the benefit of those who think that their letters with a 4-cent stamp are going by airmail, I suggest, if they want to be absolutely sure, they had better put on the 7-cent stamp, because, of course, that is not the case.

At the present time we are told by reliable figures that about 1 percent of this 4-cent mail is going by air. I submit to you if you think this thing through, that 1 percent is not going to ruin the railroads. It will take and it has taken a little more than that.

When we weep over the plight of the railroads—and I certainly do weep over the plight of the railroads—we must remember that we could also weep over the plight of the pony express. There was a very splendid organization. In its time it carried the mail magnificently, and very fast. What happened when it was abandoned for the railroads? Well, a lot of people were put out of work, a lot of fine young men who rode those horses lost their jobs. A lot of blacksmiths who made the shoes that shod the horses lost their jobs. That is progress. You cannot expect anything else. And those who were up-and-coming progressive people went out and got other jobs.

The railroads of this country I know are going through very grievous times, but if for that reason you are going to tell all of us that from here on out we have got to travel by rail, send our letters by rail, transact all our business by rail and scrap the airplanes, I know full well that that is not really your desire. And, therefore, this kind of legislation is bad, no matter how sympathetic you may be toward it—and I am very sympathetic to the purpose; I know that we all have sympathy for it and we are sorry to see these changes. Many of us have reached the age where we are quite nostalgic about the railroads. I am, myself. But after all, we have got to look ahead and we have got to realize that this pilot trial, because that is all it is, is a trial to see how far we can go. It is going to lead eventually to airmail all over the world. It is coming. Nothing you can do here will stop it.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 12595. I believe one of the major factors pertinent to this legislation is the view expressed by the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania [Mrs. GRANAHAN], in her reference to the national defense of this country, as set forth in her supplemental views to the committee report:

> The safety of the Nation and its defense rely very heavily upon a healthy railroad industry. Even though there is now ample air passenger space available, in the event of a future war the existing airspace would be preempted for the most vital military transportation, and most of the remaining traffic would gravitate toward the rails.
> The committee feels that the Post Office Department in diverting mail away from the railroads has taken a position which may leave the Nation exposed and without a healthy railroad industry in the event of attack.

Mr. PUCINSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PUCINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation and should like to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MURPHY].

I should like to state to the gentleman from New York who showed such great solicitude for the businessmen of Chicago, that he was completely mistaken in his assumption that the letters poor little secretaries write in the afternoon are going to get any slower service if this legislation is enacted.

The businessmen who want faster service offered by airmail can get it merely by putting a 7-cent airmail stamp on the letter. By doing that they will get the fastest service available in America. On the other hand, many businessmen today are not using airmail stamps, are not paying 7 cents for this premium service, because they know they can get the same service for 4 cents under present practices of the Post Office. I suggest this is one reason the Post Office is having the big deficit we hear so much about. A great deal of additional revenue would be made available to the Post Office if mail users knew that the only way they can get premium, speedy, airmail service is by paying the extra postal fee. I hope the legislation will be adopted.

Finally, I remind the gentleman from New York that Chicago was a railroad hub and a railroad center long before it became the world's greatest airline center.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MURPHY] for cosponsoring this important legislation.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WIER].

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WIER. Mr. Chairman, because of the shortness of the time I have, I am going to share that time with a colleague who I think has done a marvelous job in this field.

I appeared before the committee in behalf of this legislation and introduced a bill myself because of the concern in Minneapolis and St. Paul, and my testimony of four pages appears beginning on page 109. In giving that testimony I had communications and the testimony of not only the Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse Commission but many other organizations in the Twin Cities regarding favorable action on this legislation. I will give you a typical letter from a railroad company that I received under date of March 7, 1960. This is typical of what is happening in the upper Midwest, as my colleague, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN], reported. This letter is from the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Co., and is signed by the executive assistant for public relations and advertising, Mr. Louis I. Gelfand.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE WIER: The Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway has asked the Interstate Commerce Commission for authority to discontinue passenger trains 13–14 between Minneapolis and Watertown, S. Dak.

We would like to bring to your attention these facts:

A. The train averages 2.1 passengers per trip.

B. Passenger revenue for 1959 was $3,800.

C. Seventy-five percent of the train's revenue is mail, but nearly all first-class mail outbound from the communities served goes by highway post offices.

D. Our loss for 1959 was $36,600.

E. We no longer can merchandise losing commodities.

This letter is written so you will know the facts which have led to our decision.

Sincerely,

——— ———.

Mr. Chairman, I am deeply concerned with this bill, not only from the standpoint of the railroads themselves but because of the service and the business interests who do not subscribe to some of the things that have been said here about the extent of the service.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. The Postmaster says this is not a very large amount, yet there are thousands of passenger trains throughout the country that are operating on a breakeven basis. They are just taking in enough to meet expenses. The loss of just one-half of 1 percent of this mail revenue is going to mean that those passenger trains will have to be terminated.

May I say to anyone who says anything about progress, and that the airplanes are here to stay and we ought to use them, that that is no argument against this. We have provided for them with the 7-cent stamp. Anybody who wants mail to go by air can do it and get preferred service.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, 1 minute hardly gives one an opportunity to discuss the merits of this legislation. Let me take the time to say to you that I am on the side of the railroads. I know that these companies have millions of dollars invested in mail equipment. I know, too, that the railroad workers and the people in the mail service stand to lose their jobs if this action on the part of the Postmaster General is not stopped and stopped promptly.

I urge my colleagues to support the legislation as it is presented by the committee.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OSTERTAG].

Mr. OSTERTAG. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this bill. I believe it to be sound in principle and in purpose. It seems to me that when we establish rates and classifications for mail service, we should adhere to the basic concept of fair return for fair value.

If we are to have one rate and classification for the speediest and most rapid means of mail service or delivery, I believe we should establish such a rate of classification. But to give a 4-cent user a 7-cent value or service, we are clearly discriminating against the airmail or 7-cent stamp users.

While I applaud the efficiency of the Post Office Department and the program which has so effectively improved the service, I cannot help but point out that in the attempt to do this a grave discrimination has developed.

This bill now under consideration does correct this existing situation. If we do take steps to provide equality in the matter of rates and service as they apply to each other, then we will have resolved this problem.

I strongly support this measure and believe it desirable and necessary.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BERRY].

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, I want to express my appreciation to the members of this committee for bringing this bill to the House floor. I am very much interested in the passage of this bill.

There are many areas in the United States which are similar to my congressional district, where we used to have four transcontinental passenger trains daily and a number of local passenger trains traversing my district. Today most of them have been taken off. This, of course, is not entirely because of the difference in mail handling, but part of it is.

The present airlift program is a wonderful thing for terminal cities, but only for terminal cities. Mail transportation is actually slowed down in most instances because of the fact that it cannot be worked en route. When mail is carried by rail, it is worked and ready for delivery as it is dropped off in the various cities along the route.

I am not opposed to paying airlines for carrying this space-available mail, providing it is more efficient and better mail service can be obtained this way; but when delivery is not speeded up, when trains are taken off because of the loss of business resulting from airlifting the mail, then I am very much opposed.

The Government is subsidizing airlines and airports, much of it at the expense of the railroads. The railroads built this country. They maintain a high level of employment. The economy of this country has depended upon the railroads. Business should not be taken from them, particularly when mail service is not improved thereby.

If users of the mail wish to speed up the delivery of their mail, if they wish to use the air service, they have that right by simply paying for that additional service through an airmail stamp. If their mail is not with that additional postage, if time is not that important, then let surface transportation provide for the delivery of their letters.

In protection of the surface transportation system of the Nation, in protection of the finances of the postal system which is being seriously affected by the loss of revenue under this program, in protection of the people who have spent their lives in this work and whose employment is essential to the healthy economy of the Nation, I support this legislation, and I hope the House will pass it.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. THOMSON].

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 12595, to stop the airlifting of 4-cent letter mail.

The House Appropriations Committee, of which I am a member, made particular note of this consideration in the Treasury-Post Office Department appropriations bill report. The committee report stated:

There has been much interest in the experimental airlift of first-class mail. Extension of this experiment would have far-reaching consequences. Any excess of costs over those of surface transportation would be a matter of direct concern to this committee, and, of course, any action which would further impair the condition of the railroads as an important element of our national economy would concern every citizen.

Proposals affecting airlift and surface transportation of the mails—involve major considerations of policy and major impacts upon the railroads, the airlines, their employees, and the public. These policy questions should be formulated in legislative proposals for separate resolution; they are not a matter for inclusion in an appropriation or for exclusive administrative determination.

Accordingly, the committee recommends that there be no extension of the airlift until the Congress has taken legislative action on the question.

This language and this action by the House Appropriations Committee had my full support.

The primary concern of the Post Office Department is that of constantly improving postal service for all users of the mails. This improvement must, however, be consistent with the overall public interest and operations of the Department on a businesslike basis that is fair to the customers and those who supply services to the Department. Congress must accept its responsibility and declare a forthright policy, by law, in the interest of the taxpayer and because this matter has, and will continue to have, a tremendous impact on some of the most basic segments of our Nation's economy.

The Post Office Department is a business type of operation, and the various classes of mails have their rates established by the Congress to provide for the citizens the type of mail service that they want and that they are willing to pay for.

Our country's post office patrons should pay for the services they receive and in this respect, pay the going rate of air postage if they want their mail to be carried by air transportation.

It is not only unfair to the people who are paying the additional air postage to sanction the airlifting of first-class mail, but it is equally unfair to the other methods of surface transportation which are adversely affected by this airlifting of mail which has not paid the airlift rate.

I would respectfully point out to the committee that in view of the estimated Post Office Department deficit of $603 million for the fiscal year starting this July 1, it would be wrong to add to these burdensome deficits—which the taxpayers must assume—even more in the way of post office deficits by moving mail by a preferential mode of transportation when the preferential rate, as required under law, has not been paid.

In fairness to the taxpayer, handling of first-class mail by air transportation should not be continued.

It also seems fair to assume that if we do not take this positive action and stop arbitrary diversions of mail from the railroads and other types of surface transportation, it can further undermine the railroads' financial strength and their ability to perform their functions so essential to our overall transportation system.

By allowing such a diversion, we could ultimately expect the financial condition of the railroads to be affected, the number of railway post office cars in service to be affected, and the Post Office Department's yearly deficit to increase unnecessarily. We would also place in great danger the jobs of many railroad workers.

For these reasons, I support H.R. 12595 and urge its favorable consideration.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MOULDER].

Mr. MOULDER. Mr. Chairman, every year the railroads are being squeezed out of more and more mail-carrying business, even though they have an investment of about a billion dollars in their mail-handling equipment and facilities. The railroads' loss of postal service business has caused the discontinuance of many, many passenger trains throughout the country.

I am convinced that the postal airlift program has been a complete failure and could be proved so if the Postmaster General would give the Congress a complete report on its operation during the past 6 years. Further airlifting of first-class mail should be discontinued unless the appropriate rate of airmail postage is paid thereon.

Mr. Summerfield says that 25,000 tons were airlifted each year prior to the expansion of the program this year. How much of this could the airlines actually handle and move promptly under the space-available plan? Did the 25,000 tons actually move promptly and efficiently through air carriage or was a percentage of it held up by the airlines for 24 hours which is allowed under regulations governing airlift? How much of this tonnage was actually sent by train after delay due to shuttling to and from post office and airport? Is time actually saved when mail received for airlift must be transported from the airport to a terminal or post office and then distributed before it can be forwarded by surface transportation and delivered? If distribution costs were charged to airlift, the actual airlift cost would rise astronomically. It is a hit-and-miss proposition and a classical comedy of errors. Bad weather and lack of space keep truckloads of mail moving back and forth between the airports and the post offices. And it prevents proper scheduling of work assignments by the Post Office Department.

Moreover, the present airlift costs the railroads $11½ million each year in revenue by withdrawal of postal service in long-haul railroad operations and if it is expanded as requested will run to about $66 million.

The Post Office Department is expanding the program, and in spite of the advice and request of the Appropriations Committee last year that the experiment be discontinued, the Postmaster General continued to operate it as an experiment.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOULDER. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GARY. I would like to point out that the Postmaster General entirely disregarded our recommendations. An order was sent to the railroads in Georgia telling them to disregard the order, and the last paragraph of that order contained the following statement:

> It is not desired that this matter be given any publicity.

In other words, he directed them to disregard the recommendations of our subcommittee but not to give any publicity to it so it would not get back to the Congress.

Mr. MOULDER. The gentleman is right and I thank the distinguished and able gentleman for his statement and revealing information.

Now the Post Office Department is rapidly expanding the airlift to 18 routes in direct disregard of the Congress which in passing the 1961 appropriations for the Department recommended no extension of the airlift of first-class mail until Congress had taken legislative action on the question.

Should this Nation again become involved in warfare, we will need the complete use of all facilities of our major transportation systems—air, rail, and highway. We cannot get away from the fact that rails are and must continue to be a vital part of our transportation system—that there is a vast amount of haulage that can be accommodated in no other way. No other form of transportation could meet the demands of a wartime nation. And once the passenger trains are gone, we cannot expect them to be again restored. Once the railway post offices are discontinued and hundreds of postal transportation clerks are displaced, there can be no return.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state a few of the reasons why we should support H.R. 12595.

First, the airlift is more expensive than surface transportation, thus adding to the postal deficit;

Second, many passenger trains have already been removed because of the loss of the 4-cent mail due to the airlift program;

Third, the airlift is seriously, yes very seriously, affecting the railroads' ability to carry mail when snow, fog, sleet, and ice ground the airlines; and

Lastly, if the people of your district depend on the railroads either for passenger service or for the movement of freight, then it is in their best interest for you to look favorably on H.R. 12595. You should support this bill.

Mr. Chairman, Congress in exercising its authority to set postage rates, has established two rates for handling first-class mail. One rate is at 4 cents per ounce and entitles the sender to expect the most expeditious handling by surface transportation. The other rate is 7 cents per ounce. This latter rate entitles the sender to expect his mail to be transported by air if such transportation provides more rapid delivery.

The Postmaster General presently has the authority to transport 4-cent first-class mail by air under certain conditions, namely, in cases of calamity which disrupts surface transportation, over areas in which the terrain prohibits surface transportation, or between cities which do not have adequate surface transportation facilities.

The Postmaster General has now embarked on a program of flying 4-cent first-class mail over routes which do not meet the above specifications. This program goes far beyond the experimental stage and falls into the category of becoming an established practice.

The flying of 4-cent first class will have a terrific impact on normal modes of surface transportation. It will bring about further curtailment in the already faltering pattern of rail passenger operations.

The Post Office Department proposes to finance the flying of 4-cent first-class mail by reducing the use of en route distribution now efficiently performed in railway post offices. A portion of the overall financing will come by reducing railway post office operations over three rail routes running wholly or partially through my own State of Missouri.

In a statement before the Committee on Appropriations, U.S. Senate, the Post Office Department proposed to reduce railway post office service between St. Louis and Kansas City in the amount of $92,750 annually; between St. Louis and Little Rock by $89,087; and between Chicago and Kansas City by $140,388. Although these railway post offices reductions are proposed, there is no proposal to airlift 4-cent mail between Chicago and Kansas City or between St. Louis and Little Rock.

It cannot be stated that there is not now adequate rail service over these routes. There are six mail carrying passenger trains operating each way between St. Louis and Kansas City. Five mail carrying passenger trains operate between St. Louis and Little Rock. Eight such trains run between Chicago and Kansas City. These trains provide excellent mail and passenger service to the terminal cities and, also, to the intermediate communities along the lines.

There is no public demand for airlifting 4-cent first-class mail. Patrons who desire airmail service can secure it by paying the airmail rate of 7 cents per ounce.

H.R. 12595 should be enacted into law in order to curtail the expansion of air lifting 4-cent first-class mail until Congress has carefully studied the overall impact on essential modes of transportation.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I think it might be well to call the attention of the committee to just what this legislation is all about. Last year approximately 80 million pieces of nonlocal first-class mail was carried every day. Five million pieces out of the 80 million pieces per day that we are talking about was carried by the airlift.

I believe you are making a mountain out of a molehill when you talk about the business that is being taken away from the railroads.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, in that regard that this is sort of a nose-under-the-tent bill. The Postmaster General in 1953–54 airlifted 24,000 tons of mail under his airlift scheme. However, this year he has already operated this airlift to include 16,000 additional tons. I may say to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY], a member of the Appropriations Committee, that this was done after they had specifically in their report to him stated that he should not expand the airlift until they had legislative authority to do so.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I think the statement of the gentleman from Oregon concerning the Postmaster General at the beginning of this discussion was unnecessary and uncalled for.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FOLEY].

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 12595 for the reason that I cannot see why the 7-year old experiment by the Postmaster General must be continued. In the 7 years' time it has either proved nothing or it has proved everything it was designed to do. In either event, no further reasonable purpose of the experiment is apparent.

If the Postmaster General has undertaken to prove he can carry letters by airmail, he has done that. If he has endeavored to prove he can send 7-cent mail by air, he has done that. If he has sought to prove he can send 4-cent mail by air part of the way for 4 cents and the rest of the way free, he has done that. If he is trying to prove that carrying 4-cent mail by airmail has an adverse effect on 7-cent airmail and on the railway industry, he has demonstrated that. If he is trying to fool 7-cent air mail users part of the time, he has succeeded in doing that. But if he has sought to fool the 7-cent airmail users all of the time, he has failed.

If he is interested in saving the taxpayers money as well as airmail users money, I suggest that he can achieve both ends by sending airmail free on MATS. I support H.R. 12595.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COAD].

Mr. COAD. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the members of the committee for bringing this legislation to the floor for consideration. This is good legislation and needs to be enacted into law. The only question I would like to raise is just exactly how far does the Postmaster General plan to go with this? If it is possible that 41,000 tons can be transported on the present basis, and that the idea is to expand this program further, then may it not be true that we can put all the 4-cent mail on the airlines? If that be true, then it is not necessary that we have the 7-cent letter rate.

Obviously the railroads have a program. They have been doing everything they can to get the mail to its destination in the most expedient manner. I have, at times, criticized the railway systems where I have believed them to be at fault. However, this is more than a matter of a fight between the railroads and the airlines. It involves the priority of existing law, the moral contracts we have with the railroads and the railway postal workers. I feel the Postmaster General is in error in airfreighting bulk mail and urge enactment of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subject to section 6 of the Act of April 15, 1938, as amended (39 U.S.C. 470), and section 405 (h) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended (49 U.S.C. 1375(h)), all mail matter of the first class transported by air within or between the forty-eight contiguous States of the United States on or after the effective date of this section shall be held and considered to be airmail as such term is defined in section 2 of the Act of June 12, 1934 (39 U.S.C. 469). Such mail matter of the first class shall not be transported by air on or after the effective date of this section except upon prepayment of the appropriate rate of postage for airmail prescribed by section 201 of the Act of July 3, 1948, as amended (39 U.S.C. 463a), or for air parcel post of the first class prescribed by the first section of the Act of June 29, 1948 (39 U.S.C. 475), and the proviso contained in the first section of the Act of August 14, 1946 (62 Stat. 1098; Public Law 730, Seventy-ninth Congress), as the case may be.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after "United States" insert "(including the District of Columbia)".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to this debate, and it strikes me that this is one of the most negative pieces of legislation that I have seen in some time and one of the most negative arguments that I have heard in some time.

Now, we are supposed to be a progressive body, and yet no one has discussed the merits or demerits of the question of whether airlifting of bulk mail is good or bad; whether it is in the public interest or not. If it is a step forward, why, then let us go ahead with it. Apparently the House is acting today on this piece of legislation because of pique and irritation at the Postmaster General because he did not come to the House and ask for permission to airlift bulk mail. Well, all right. If that is the case, slap his wrist. But why punish the public just to punish the Postmaster? Of course, I do not believe it is the case in the first instance. I think the Postmaster is authorized to do what he did. But if not, let us examine the question on the merits to see what kind of authorization he should have to go forward with this program. You know, one of these days we will drop mail by rockets, and I suppose in the Congress we are going to get sticky about it and say this is something that has not been specifically authorized and therefore we will not allow any experimentation; we will not allow the Postmaster to experiment to see if he can move the mail faster.

I am somewhat surprised at this notion, and I, for one, will oppose this bill in its present form. It is a step backward, not forward. We ought to be thinking ahead and not contenting ourselves with the status quo.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINDSAY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARRY. Is the gentleman aware that two decades ago there were 10,000 trains that carried the mail and now there are only 1,900; in other words, 81 percent of the trains that used to carry the mail are off the rails?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINDSAY. I will yield to the distinguished author of the bill if he will answer a question first. He said in his remarks in debate that there was a way that the Postmaster General could have come to the Congress and straightened this thing out. I would like to know from the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska what that way is.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. The Postmaster General sent a communication to the Speaker and the President of the Senate last year asking that they enact legislation to give him this authority. The Congress has not seen fit to do so because they do not agree that this is good policy.

Mr. LINDSAY. Is bulk airlifting of mail good or bad for the public?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. That is not the point. If you want fast mail service, the Department provides a 7-cent stamp for a premium service, but the Congress has decided that 4-cent mail should go by surface transportation. We do not want somebody downtown being in contempt of the Congress doing something that they are not authorized to do.

Mr. LINDSAY. Why does your great committee not come up with a piece of legislation which will authorize bulk airlifting of mail with whatever proper safeguards you want to put on it, or with a higher postage or anything instead of this negative approach?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Simply because the committee does not agree with the argument made in favor of such a proposal.

Mr. LINDSAY. I do not understand why we do not go back to the horse-and-buggy days.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. What is the matter with the pony?

Mr. LINDSAY. Fine. Let us go back to the pony.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Wonderful.

Mr. LINDSAY. According to this piece of legislation, that would be a step forward.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HECHLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. HECHLER. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I merely wanted to ask, judging from the arguments made, might not this so-called airlift better be called error lift?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 12595 now before us will prohibit the Postmaster General from arranging for the transportation of first-class, 4-cent letter mail by air.

It is commonly known that for many months 4-cent letter mail has been airlifted to its destination on an experimental basis.

Under the bill before us the Postmaster General is directed to discontinue the so-called experimental flying of 4-cent letter mail where existing surface transportation is adequate.

Of course the bill does not alter existing authority for the establishment of air star routes in localities where surface transportation is inadequate.

In reviewing the merits of H.R. 12595 it is necessary for me to mention again, as I have done many times on the floor of the House, that my hometown, Altoona, Pa., is the largest railroad center in the world. From a percentage standpoint my railroad population is probably the greatest of any congressional district in the Nation.

Therefore, the loss of jobs in the railroad industry is of grave concern to those whom I represent and also to the railroads of the Nation.

To fully understand the unemployment in the railroad industry, in the last several years, employment has been reduced nearly 50 percent, and in Altoona the number of jobs decreased from nearly 15,000 to less than 7,000.

This loss of jobs has been felt in other communities of my district and when coupled with unemployed miners, and so forth, it explains why nearly 10,000 of my constituents are victims of chronic unemployment.

One of the contributing factors to the unemployment in the railroad industry has been the loss of passenger traffic, necessitating reduced passenger service.

When comparing the number of passenger trains in service 10 years ago, you will find that better than 50 percent are no longer in operation, due to the decline in passenger traffic.

Mr. Chairman, I am not inferring that approval of H.R. 12595 will restore any passenger trains or the jobs of railroaders that were abolished because of declining passenger and express revenues.

I am however supporting the bill because it will help to preserve the passenger trains in operation today and likewise safeguard the jobs of many railroaders.

Almost every passenger train operating today carries mail, express, and very frequently carload lots of perishable commodities. From a revenue standpoint these mail, express and perishable shipments represent a major portion of any profits earned by the railroads in the operation of passenger service.

What I am trying to point out is simply this. If you deny the Nation's railroads the income earned from carrying first-class mail you have taken from them a source of revenue that will cause in many cases a sharp reduction in revenue which may lead to abandonment of more passenger trains and the destruction of more railroad jobs.

Time will not permit me to discuss the question of subsidies now enjoyed by the airlines of the country at the expense of the taxpayers and to the detriment of the railroad industry nor is there sufficient time to dwell upon the heavy tax burden and the maintenance costs the railroads have to pay for their own facilities. Therefore the point I would like to make in concluding my remarks is simply this.

The enactment of this bill will be helpful to a declining railroad industry that not only provides jobs for thousands of Americans but is a vital part of the Nation's economy in war or peace.

As one of my constituents said in a recent letter to me:

> When I airmail a letter I pay 7 cents postage for the service I expect. Therefore I cannot understand how Uncle Sam can airlift mail that bears only a 4-cent postage stamp.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, is it not required under the rules that a Member speak to the purpose of the amendment under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. According to the rules of the House; yes.

Mr. CORBETT. And is there not a committee amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. No; there is not.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time to address my remarks to the gentleman from Oregon who said earlier in the discussion of this bill that this is not an issue between the railroads and the air carriers, that it is not a question of the mail service rendered, but rather the issue of the Postmaster General violating the law. Certainly this legislation would not even be before us unless it involved the question whether or not the mail service we are getting under the airlift is the best possible service or the most economical and efficient service. The Postmaster General needs no defense. And in these closing minutes or hours of this session before the recess, if there is going to be a recess, I realize full well that there are frayed tempers. But there is no reason in this instance, whether or not the administrative procedure invoked by the Postmaster General has been a success or a failure, to make this a personal issue or make the Postmaster General a whipping boy. Personally, I think the Postmaster General has done a tremendous job. He has been one of the most dedicated Postmaster Generals in the history of the Department. He has improved and modernized the mail system generally. I do not think a personality should be the issue in dealing with this legislation. It should solely be—if it is kept in the proper perspective, whether or not the service we are now getting or being offered—mail service in the most efficient and most economical manner.

I should like to point out also at this time that a series of remarks was made that the Postmaster General violated the law. We all know there has been no violation of law. This is an administrative procedure. If it has failed in the some 5 or 6 years of its trial, it is up to this Congress to take action strictly upon the facts before us if such action is necessary.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PORTER. I appreciate the gentleman's attitude. I am glad he is going to vote for the bill. The gentleman realizes that our committee did vote by a very big majority in favor of this bill and in favor of a statement that the Postmaster General was violating the law. In other words, that was our considered judgment. After looking at the facts, we agreed that he is not authorized. The Appropriations Committee specifically asked the Postmaster General not to go ahead with the airlift until our committee had passed on it. The Postmaster General has said "No" to both of us, and he has gone his merry way with this airlift.

Mr. COLLIER. Let me say to the gentleman from Oregon I have the deepest respect for his committee, but the mere fact that the majority of the committee decided that the Postmaster General violated the law certainly does not sway me one bit. I find myself many times at odds with the majority thinking of many of the fine committees of this good House, and I suppose I will be in the future, if I am still a Member of the House.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The remainder of the bill is as follows:

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding the first section of this Act and any other provision of law defining classes of mail or prescribing postal rates therefor, the Postmaster General is authorized to provide for the transportation of first-class mail by air carrier—

(1) between the forty-eight contiguous States of the United States and Alaska, Hawaii, the Canal Zone, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or any territory, possession, or protectorate (including the Mandated Islands of the Pacific) of the United States,

(2) within and between any of the places referred to in subparagraph (1) which are outside the forty-eight contiguous States of the United States, and

(3) with respect to military mail, between a port of embarkation or debarkation in any of the places referred to in subparagraph (1) and

(A) any United States military post office which is outside of such places or

(B) such other places as the Secretary of Defense, or his designee, from time to time may prescribe.

SEC. 3. The transportation of mail authorized by section 2 of this Act shall be over the routes and between the points between which the Civil Aeronautics Board has authorized air carriers, under title IV of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, to engage in the transportation of mail by aircraft. Such transportation shall be effected under such conditions with respect to service, not inconsistent with the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 and regulations issued thereunder, as the Postmaster General may prescribe.

SEC. 4. (a) The Postmaster General is authorized to require that any air carrier shall transport, in accordance with section 2 of this Act and within the limits of its authority, in addition to mail on which airmail postage has been paid, first-class mail bearing the appropriate postage for such class. Such air carrier shall transport such first-class mail in accordance with such requirements.

(b) The Civil Aeronautics Board shall fix, in accordance with the Federal Aviation Act, of 1958, the rates of compensation to be paid such air carrier by the Postmaster General for such transportation of mail, under such conditions with respect to service as the Postmaster General may prescribe.

SEC. 5. (a) The Postmaster General and any air carrier may, within the limits of authority of such air carrier, enter into contracts, for terms of not more than two years, for the transportation of mail authorized by section 2 of this Act, at rates other than the rates fixed by the Civil Aeronautics Board under section 4(b) of this Act.

(b) The Postmaster General shall consult with the Civil Aeronautics Board before he enters into any contract under subsection (a) of this section.

(c) The Postmaster General may not renew any contract entered into under subsection (a) of this section if, upon review of such contract, the Civil Aeronautics Board finds the rate or rates specified in such contract to be unfair, unreasonable, or contrary to the public interest.

(d) Advertising for bids shall not be required in connection with the procurement of mail transportation services within the purview of this Act if such services can be procured from any air carrier lawfully operating in the area where such services are to be performed.

SEC. 6. For the purposes of this Act, the term—

(1) "Air carrier" has the meaning prescribed for such term by section 101(3) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1301(3)); and

(2) "Aircraft" has the meaning prescribed for such term by section 101(5) of such Act (49 U.S.C. 1301(5)).

SEC. 7. The foregoing provisions of this Act shall become effective on January 1, 1961.

With the following committee amendments:

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GROSS of Iowa:

Page 2, line 25, strike out "and".

Page 3, line 8, strike out the period and insert ", and".

Page 3, immediately after line 8, insert the following new subparagraph:

"(4) between those places within the forty-eight contiguous States of the United States (including the District of Columbia) between which, on June 1, 1960, first-class mail was being transported by air carrier under contracts entered into by the Postmaster General at rates approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board."

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I carry no torch for the railroads, the airlines, the Postmaster General, or anyone else except the public. I think that all first-class letter mail that can be transported overnight and made available for delivery the next morning ought to be carried on surface transportation. But I am unwilling through this bill to meat-ax all of what is presently being done to expedite delivery through the use of aircraft. I do not believe that is the proper way to legislate in the interest of the public.

I am pleased to see Mr. GARY, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Post Office Appropriations, on the floor, because I take my cue in offering this amendment from the report of that committee in connection with the 1961 appropriation. This is what the committee said:

Accordingly the committee recommends that there be no extension of the airlift until the Congress has taken legislative action on the question.

I think that is reasonable, and my amendment would validate the tonnage of airlift of 4-cent mail in effect up to June 1 of this year, removing the expansion that has taken place since. Then let the legislative committee meet early next year and go to the basic law that gives the Postmaster General authority to transport mail, and write a formula for the Postmaster General telling him what Congress wants him to do.

Let us not use a meat-ax on the present transportation of mail.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I gladly yield to my friend.

Mr. GARY. I would say to the gentleman that our committee acted because it had been brought to our attention that the Postmaster General was expanding his service. We did not think there should be any expansion. The authority granted to him in the first instance was to experiment with it. We thought that before he left the experimental stage and expanded the program the Congress should give him further authority.

Mr. GROSS. Let me ask the gentleman this question: In view of what you said in your report do you not think my amendment is fair and in the best interest of the orderly transportation of the mails? Does the gentleman not think it is a fair amendment?

Mr. GARY. I think so. I will say to the gentleman that our purpose was to stop the expansion. The gentleman's amendment will do that and at the same time permit the Postmaster General to do what he has been doing in the past.

Mr. GROSS. Up to June 1.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield.

Mr. CANFIELD. I agree with the statement just made by the chairman of the subcommittee handling appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments. I think it only fair to say, though, that the Senate subcommittee handling these funds did not agree with the position indicated in our report, but I support the amendment, as does our committee chairman.

Mr. GROSS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield.

Mr. BARRY. I am sure the gentleman knows that $325 million of rail revenues, the largest amount the railroads have ever received, they received last year, and the prognostication is that next year they will receive the largest revenue from mail ever in history. So the gentleman's amendment would in no way cut into the mail revenue that the rails have received in the past.

Mr. GROSS. Let me add just this: That there is no guarantee, if you approve this bill ending the airlift of 4-cent mail, that it would go back to the railroads. It may go to other forms of surface transportation.

Mr. BARRY. The amendment of the gentleman would not hurt the railroads one iota because they are going to receive $25 million mail revenue more than they received last year according to the present estimates that have been made.

Mr. GROSS. As a friend of the railroads, as a friend of the airlines, I want this situation handled as nearly right as possible. That is the only purpose of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GROSS] may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Does the gentleman's amendment continue the present contracts?

Mr. GROSS. Those contracts in existence on June 1. There has been some extension since.

Mr. REES of Kansas. You do not want to cancel any of them out. I think the gentleman's approach is fair.

Mr. GROSS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. Is it not true that the committee had 3 days of hearings and they reported out this bill by a vote of 14 to 3?

Mr. GROSS. I do not remember the vote.

Mr. ALLEN. The gentleman will find that is correct. Here we come in with an amendment the effect of which we do not understand. Just the other day on the wage-hour bill we accepted an amendment offered, I think, by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SMITH] under conditions of severe limitation and we finally found ourselves in a jam.

Mr. GROSS. Just a minute. I hope the gentleman is not attempting to say that I have offered an amendment in an attempt to deceive the House in any way.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think it was intended to deceive the Members the other day, but I think we should support the committee on a bill which they reported out by a vote of 14 to 3.

Mr. GROSS. I may say to the gentleman that I do not want my amendment to be compared to any amendment that has ever been offered before in the House. I have offered this amendment in good faith.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Did not the ranking minority member of the committee accept your amendment just now?

Mr. GROSS. Yes; and the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee said he thought it was a good amendment.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That is what I thought.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is an excellent amendment. Contrary to what the gentleman from Illinois just said, this does the very opposite of causing confusion. The amendment was considered in committee. It was pleaded for by the Postmaster General in charge of transportation, and it boils down to this very simple matter.

Mr. ANDERSEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORBETT. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSEN of Minnesota. Personally, it has been my observation that the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. GROSS, usually knows what he is doing.

Mr. CORBETT. I am sure the gentleman from Iowa appreciates that remark, and I will associate myself with it.

Referring back to the amendment, what it tries to do is to say that all contracts entered into by the Post Office Department prior to June 1, 1960, shall be valid. Therefore, it puts a prohibition on all contracts that might be entered into in the future.

The effect of this will be, if the amendment is adopted, all of the schemes which presently are carried through in connection with the distribution of mail can be continued. But if this legislation should pass without the amendment, then we would have to tear up all of our contracts, all of our scheme examinations, and it would result in utter confusion and chaos in the Department's transportation system.

We have a simple situation wherein we validate existing contracts, as the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Post Office Appropriations agreed and the committee agreed, so what we are pleading for is a continuation of orderly progress in the Post Office Department. We are trying at the same time to say "speed up."

Mr. Chairman, I recognize it is rather difficult to establish reason at this time of day, but I repeat again, this is a good amendment. It would allow the Post Office to continue to improve its service, it would permit all the present transportation schemes to be continued, but without this amendment I would say this is very, very detrimental legislation. Therefore, the amendment should be agreed to, then we can all support the legislation.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORBETT. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. FOLEY. I would like to pose a question of the gentleman. This is an experiment, it is 7 years old. The question is this: Has this experiment not proved everything it set out to prove? Has is not supported everything it was supposed to prove? If it has not, has it not proved nothing, if I may use a double negative? In either case it is time to put an end to the experiment.

Mr. CORBETT. I may say to the gentleman very definitely in attempts to improve the mail service of these United States, this experiment has proved it to be successful to the point where that which has been proved good should be continued.

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORBETT. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. How long would this prohibition continue on the Postmaster General to enter into these contracts?

Mr. CORBETT. Under the bill, after January 1, 1961, no new contracts could be entered into under the terms of this amendment for carrying first-class mail by the airlift, after that date, January 1, 1961.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, for the past several days—actually for the last several months—we have known that serious developments in the Caribbean area have made it imperative that before the Congress recesses or adjourns the President of the United States must be granted authority in respect to sugar to deal with unpredictable events which may lie immediately ahead.

The latest developments in the Caribbean have only underscored the need for this legislation.

If 2 months ago we knew we needed to grant this authority to the President, what has happened these past few days makes this authority doubly essential now.

Mr. Speaker, on this matter I say that we in the Congress have open to us only one responsible course—to refuse, in the interest of America, to recess until this legislation is enacted.

I for one will not vote to recess until such legislation is passed.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the House passed a sugar bill the other day unanimously. It got over to the other body and it is in committee. The other body passed a Senate joint resolution which raises many serious constitutional questions. It is the opinion of competent authority that the resolution affects revenue and, of course, to begin with, under the Constitution, no bill affecting revenue can originate in the Senate. If this body were to act upon it and it became law, then it would be subject to court action on the question of its constitutionality.

Sugar legislation is very difficult legislation to consider. We know that from experience. The House has done its duty. The other body has passed a Senate joint resolution which in the opinion, I say, of competent authority—and it is my opinion—is not consistent with the Constitution in that it affects revenue, and such legislation cannot originate in the other body. I hope that proper legislation will pass. Every effort has been made, and I hope that the other body will act upon the resolution that the House passed. Now, the other body, if it wants to, can take up the House resolution and amend it and send it back to us.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. On yesterday, I think it was, the gentleman from Massachusetts spoke of the House bill. I voted for that bill as did every other Member who was present and voted. And I joined the majority leader then in expressing the hope that the other body would act on the legislation that had been sent over there. Again, all I can say is that I am completely convinced that the situation in the Caribbean—there is no necessity at this point of going into the mentioning of names—the situation is such that we ought to invest in the President the power to deal with this matter in our national interest.

Mr. McCORMACK. Unfortunately, when the bill was in the House the administration strongly indicated, while there was not complete satisfaction with the bill, that they could live with the bill and that the bill would be satisfactory under the circumstances. I have evidence to believe that in the other body there has been a change somewhere along the line. I am not stating that upon hearsay. I am stating that upon my ability to evaluate conversations that I have had with officials. In other words, in my mind the position of the executive branch was one in favor of supporting the House bill. When the bill got over to the other body there was some kind of change. Now, that is unfortunate; most unfortunate.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I have conversed with quite a few people, and I must say to the gentleman that I have not had anything come to me of any such suggestion as that, although the gentleman's opinion may be correct. Certainly it has not come to my attention.

Mr. McCORMACK. I said evidence. I will subscribe to that.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GARY. The gentleman refers to a change. Does he mean a change by the administration?

Mr. McCORMACK. Some person of prominence in the administration. I would not want to say the administration itself.

Mr. GARY. But not by the Congress. You are not referring to a change in the Congress; you are referring to a change in the administration?

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, somebody in the administration in high position.

Now, I have suggested something that I hope the Senate will consider. I have suggested it in private conversation with colleagues of mine in the hope to extricate ourselves from this situation. My suggestion is that the House bill be adopted by the Senate, extending the Sugar Act for 1 year, because if you do not, there are complicated questions about apportionment. If you extend the act for 6 months, it raises an awful lot of serious questions and complications about the 6-month period. My suggestion is to extend the act itself for 1 year to give the President the power to reduce until June 30 of next year. Something of that kind could be worked out if the Senate is agreeable, and I hope that the other body will not be adamant. The House bill is a very good bill, one that took an awful lot of time to work out. Here we have a Senate joint resolution sent back to us that raises grave, serious questions as to its constitutionality as well as other questions that would be raised in debate, such as whether the President would have the power to carry out the intent of the Congress or to meet the situation in the light of the language employed in the Senate resolution.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I would just like to say apropos of the gentleman's suggestion, regardless of the position that may have been taken by certain people, I am absolutely convinced if the other body were to take the bill as passed by the House, it would become the law of the land.

Mr. McCORMACK. There is no question about it. We are willing to go further. If they take the House bill and put amendments on it, then we can go to conference and try to iron them out. But they have taken the adamant position that they will not consider the House bill.

Under the Senate bill, as I said, even if it were constitutional, we would have to legislate when we got back here on August 15. Anyone who knows anything about legislation that refers to sugar knows that that would not be a matter of days, but a matter of many weeks and we would probably be in session well into November.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I think the majority leader would agree that if nothing is done between now and the time we come back, a very chaotic condition may be created by the present Cuban Government, as they are trying to do now by the shipments of unusual quantities of sugar into this country to get their whole 1960 allotment in before the President can act.

Mr. McCORMACK. I will say to the gentleman that that is involved. But the House has acted. The House has sent over a bill to the other body that is a good bill, one that was worked out very carefully. We now have a situation where we have a bill before us that raises very serious constitutional questions, and in the opinion of competent persons does not conform with the Constitution because it affects revenues. If the other body would act, they ought to accept the House bill. If they would amend the House bill, when it came back here we could try to iron out the situation. I hope the other body will do so.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the distinguished majority leader yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I would be glad to yield. I have taken the floor in an effort to try to create an atmosphere in which action will be taken.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that this would be the appropriate time to bring up this matter, but I do want to suggest that I have had a great many wires and many expressions of interest in Senate Joint Resolution 207 which deals with a temporary or trial test exemption of section 315, of the Federal Communications Act, which would authorize the broadcasting industry to provide for a distribution of equal time to major candidates for President and Vice President of the United States. Since the gentleman has mentioned the date August 15 when we expect to get back into session, I should like to say that it is my understanding that that day will be a suspension day.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is my understanding.

Mr. HARRIS. In view of the interest that has been manifested rather broadly in this particular provision, and because time is getting a little tight. I thought this would be a good time to suggest that perhaps on suspension day, August 15, the resolution may very well be called up in the House and considered under suspension, so that the broadcasting industry may make their plans for the campaign during the fall.

I have discussed this with the gentleman. I thought perhaps this would be a good time to put the membership on notice that very likely that matter will be brought up on that day. That would be the day we would return, August 15, and it would be brought up under suspension, in order that we could start to see if this trial test was something we could depend on in American politics.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is a matter for the Speaker to determine. The gentleman discussed this with the Speaker and myself and I am glad he has made his statement so that the Members may be alerted as to what may happen.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HALLECK. It has been suggested to me, I might say to the gentleman from Arkansas, that possibly for the convenience of the Members, we might arrange by unanimous consent for suspensions to be considered on some day a few days after the 15th. But in any event, as far as I am concerned, I join the gentleman from Arkansas in favor of bringing that matter up for action under suspension of the rules.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will yield further, I might say to the gentleman from Indiana that that certainly would be agreeable to me; that is, if such a unanimous-consent agreement could be reached. But I do think we should alert the Members to the fact that this may come up on that particular day. I expect to ask my committee to come into session on that morning, the morning of the 15th, to consider informally the resolution, in order that we may be able to discuss it when it gets to the floor of the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. Coming back to my original observation, we passed a bill and there is a bill that has been passed by the Senate which in the judgment of competent persons is unconstitutional.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have the deepest regard for the gentleman from Iowa. He offered this amendment in the committee meeting and it received only one vote, his own. I admire the gentleman, but I do not admire somebody who tries to rewrite the legislation of all of us on the committee or any committee who have worked as hard as we have worked.

I think this amendment, if it is agreed to, would simply scuttle this bill. What the Postmaster General has been doing is either right or it is wrong. It is my opinion and that of most of us here that it has been wrong. I am not going to compromise between right and wrong. I am not going to say that what he has done illegally now is OK and we ought to approve it, because I do not happen to feel that that is the way we ought to operate in this Congress.

May I say to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY], that I have in front of me the history of the airlifts, and on this front page it is shown that the airlift began in October of 1953, and by the end of 1954 an experimental 25,000 tons annually had been achieved. Nothing was done to expand the airlift from 1954 until March of 1960. Then he started expanding. On April 4, 1960, he expanded that to include approximately 4,000 more tons, which was after the gentleman's committee report stated that he should not expand it. So I cannot understand why the committee chairman would agree to an amendment that would freeze these in when his own committee said he could not proceed any further in this regard.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GARY. I would just say to the gentleman that I would prefer to see the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa changed to make it March 1, rather than June 1; but I do think that it probably would be better not to cover the entire airlift at the present time.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I thank the gentleman. I personally have a lot of charity in my heart and believe in trying to play fair. I would have to swallow a great deal of my self-respect to say now that what the Postmaster General did illegally we are now going to approve. I would find it difficult to do that. But if it is the will of this group, I would simply say that if that is the way the people want it in the committee, as bad as it is, certainly you ought to advance the date to at least March 1 of this year so that you will not be saying to the Postmaster General, "What you did, even after you were warned by the Appropriations Committee, is legal." I just could not stomach that. I think it would scuttle the bill. It would mean he was again dictating to the Congress, which he has been doing all along in this area.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this bill and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, when this bill came before the Special Subcommittee on Postal Transportation, I discussed the Postmaster's practice of transporting by air in certain areas mail matter which does not bear the appropriate postage to entitle it to air transportation. I shall not burden the House with the statement I made to the committee, but could I say this.

Partly as a result of the airlift, the Post Office Department has been causing severe hardship to postal people who are forced to change their residences when railway post office trains are withdrawn. One estimate is that three out of every four such people live at substantial distances from the major centers at which the Post Office Department plans to accumulate mail for transportation by air. This accumulation creates delays of its own and the pattern of ground transportation is weakened each time the railway post office is withdrawn. No substitute has yet been developed for the superb service which is provided by railway post office cars.

Mr. Chairman, under unanimous consent I include the editorial which appeared in the Springfield Leader and Press, Springfield, Mo., entitled "Undercounter Dealing":

UNDERCOUNTER DEALING

Congressional hearings on measures which would expressly permit—and expressly forbid—Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield to continue with his plans for taking the job of carrying the mail away from railroads and giving it to airlines are in progress in Washington this week.

As has already been indicated in these columns, it would appear that Summerfield is trying to pull a fast one on someone—maybe Congress, maybe the railroads, maybe us taxpayers. The more information becomes available on the matter, the more it looks as if the Postmaster General has something he is trying desperately to hide.

Summerfield proposes—indeed, already has in partial operation—a plan whereby first-class mail would be carried by regularly scheduled airlines on space available contracts. That means the airlines would carry ordinary mail if they had room for it. If not, it would go by some other conveyance.

Last February, the House Appropriations Committee submitted to the House a report which said in part:

"Proposals affecting airlift and surface transportation of the mails involve major considerations of policy and major impacts on the railroads, the airlines, their employees, and the public. * * * Accordingly, the committee recommends that there be no extension of the airlift until the Congress has taken legislative action on the question."

A Senate committee came up with a similar recommendation—and Summerfield blithely ignored both of them.

Said Representative J. VAUGHAN GARY, of Virginia, a member of the House Appropriations Committee, in a recent House session:

"I am sorry to say that the Postmaster General treated our report with disdain and our recommendations with absolute contempt. I have in my hand a general order which he issued on April 1, 1960, after the House action on the bill, and before the other body (the Senate) acted. In this order he directed an extension of the service contrary to the recommendation of the House. The last paragraph of the order contains the following: 'It is not desired that this matter be given any publicity.'

"In other words, he directed that the service be extended surreptitiously. He did not want information concerning his actions to get back to the Congress."

Nor, apparently, to anyone else. When any Government official indulges in such backstairs goings-on, we are immediately suspicious of his motives. We are not, at this point, questioning Summerfield's integrity, but we are certainly questioning his judgment in thus flying in the face of what seems to us a very reasonable recommendation on the part of Congress.

Aside from the fact that the "airlift" plan would have a disastrous effect on railroad passenger service, which depends to a considerable extent on revenues from hauling the mail, and that it would very likely deprive a great number of railroad and railway mail service employees of their jobs, we think that Summerfield's futile attempt to hide his actions deserves a resounding rebuke.

We earnestly suggest that others with a like feeling get in touch with their Congressman now and express themselves as emphatically opposed to the airlift plan. Speed is of the essence. If Congress adjourns without action on the matter, we may be sure that the Postmaster General will go right ahead with his plan—and we are convinced that he should not be allowed to do so until Congress has had time to make a searching investigation of his motives.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments? If not, under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 12595) to clarify the law with respect to transportation of airmail, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 583, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BARRY. I am.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BARRY moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Civil Service.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken and the Speaker announced that the Noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, on this I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present and object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-eight Members are present, a quorum.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1961

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 12740) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and consider the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, with the Chair's permission, if I may be permitted to explain what we are trying to do, I think the matter will be greatly simplified.

This afternoon we considered 17 amendments in disagreement. Of these the House agreed to eight and sent nine back in disagreement.

As the matter stands now, the other body has sent word, and we have an understanding with the gentleman, and I have cleared it with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN], on the other side, and others, that the House will recede on two little amendments that really cost in round figures $6 million. There is nothing new in these two amendments. One is the poultry inspection amendment for about $1,350,000 The other amounts to about $5 million to finish seven or eight agricultural experiment stations that have already been started.

They are under construction, and they are scattered throughout the United States. If we do that they say, "Send back the other amendments, insist on your disagreement, and we will recede." It will be over within 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider en bloc amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 6. Nos. 1 and 2 are practically the same, 6 is the poultry amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 1: Page 2, line 6, strike out "For construction of an Entomology Laboratory, $500,000."

Senate amendment No. 2: Page 2, line 8, insert "For an additional amount for 'Construction of facilities', $5,200,000."

Senate amendment No. 6: Page 2, line 17, insert "For an additional amount for 'Marketing research and service', for Marketing services, $1,350,000."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 6, and concur therein.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider en bloc amendments Nos. 7, 8, 9, 14, 15, and 17. We will insist on the House position and the other body says "Do that, send it back over to us, and we will adopt it."

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. There is no longer any question about the $5 million for the purchase of the property over here? That is no longer in disagreement?

Mr. THOMAS. It is, sure. We are insisting on that and they are going to recede.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. You are taken care of.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I thank you so much.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 7: Page 3, line 9, insert "Bureau of Public Roads."

Senate amendment No. 8: Page 3, line 10, insert:

"FOREST HIGHWAYS (LIQUIDATION OF CONTRACT AUTHORIZATION)

"For payment of obligations incurred in carrying out the provisions of title 23, United States Code, section 204, pursuant to contract authorization granted by title 23, United States Code, section 203, to remain available until expended, $30,000,000, which sum is composed of $29,250,000, the remainder of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1960, and $750,000, a part of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1961: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the rental, purchase, construction, or alteration of buildings and sites necessary for the storage and repair of equipment and supplies used for road construction and maintenance but the total cost of any such item under this authorization shall not exceed $15,000."

Senate amendment No. 9: Page 4, line 1, insert:

"PUBLIC LANDS HIGHWAYS (LIQUIDATION OF CONTRACT AUTHORIZATION)

"For payment of obligations incurred in carrying out the provisions of title 23, United States Code, section 209, pursuant to the contract authorization granted by title 23, United States Code, section 203, to remain available until expended, $3,000,000, which sum is the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1961."

Senate amendment No. 14: Page 12, strike out lines 1 to 7 inclusive.

Senate amendment No. 15: Page 12, line 14, strike out "$225,000" and insert "$5,256,000."

Senate amendment No. 17: Page 13, line 16, insert:

"GENERAL PROVISION

"Appropriations, authorizations, and funds available to the departments, agencies, corporations, and the District of Columbia, for the fiscal year 1961, may be apportioned pursuant to section 3679 of the Revised Statutes, as amended on a basis indicating the need for supplemental estimates of appropriation to the extent necessary to permit payment of pay increases (not exceeding the corresponding increases provided by the 'Postal Employees' Salary Increase Act of 1960' and the 'Federal Employees Salary Increase Act of 1960' for employees whose rates of compensation are fixed by administrative action pursuant to law."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House insist upon disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 8, 9, 14 and 17.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer another motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House insist upon its amendment to Senate amendment No. 15.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the aisle agree with the proposal the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMAS] has just explained to the House.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Chair will declare a recess until 9:45.

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 35 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess until 9 o'clock and 45 minutes p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 9 o'clock and 45 minutes p.m.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS].

TEMPORARY SUSPENSION OF DUTY ON HEPTANOIC ACID

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 12659) to suspend for a temporary period the import duty on heptanoic acid, which was unanimously reported favorably by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That heptanoic acid, provided for in paragraph 1 of the Tariff Act of 1930, shall be admitted free of duty if entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption, after the date of the enactment of this Act and before the expiration of the three-year period beginning on the day after such date.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 12659 which was introduced by our colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. IKARD], would provide for a suspension of the import duty on heptanoic acid for a period of 3 years.

Heptanoic acid is used in the manufacture of special lubricants and brake fluids for use particularly in military aircraft. The lubricants manufactured with heptanoic acid are highly resistant to heat which is an essential characteristic for high velocity jet airplanes. Your committee was advised by the Department of Commerce that there is no domestic production of this acid at this time and that U.S. consumption of this acid is dependent entirely on imports.

Heptanoic acid is classified in paragraph I of the Tariff Act of 1930 and is dutiable at a rate of 12½ percent ad valorem. The dollar value of present imports is low.

Your committee has received favorable reports on H.R. 12659 from all of the reporting agencies of the executive branch.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, the legislation which is being considered by the House, H.R. 12659, would provide for the suspension of the import duty on heptanoic acid for a period of 3 years.

During the consideration of this legislation the membership of the Committee on Ways and Means was informed that heptanoic acid is not produced in significant commercial quantities in the United States. This acid is produced as a byproduct of nylon manufacturing in France and in West Germany, and it is from those two countries that our imports are derived. Heptanoic acid is used in the United States as a specialized lubricant primarily for military purposes.

Heptanoic acid is classifiable under a provision for acids, not specifically provided for, in paragraph 1 of the Tariff Act of 1930. The original duty rate was 25 percent ad valorem which has been reduced to its present rate of 12½ percent pursuant to the trade agreements authority.

I have joined with the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in urging House approval of this legislation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BAMBOO PIPESTEMS

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 10841) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to place bamboo pipestems on the free list.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that contains the amendment that I suggested?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; that contains the committee amendment, I might say to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 201 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1201) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"PAR. 1824. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, bamboo pipe stems in whatever condition of manufacture, whether wholly or partly finished, or whether bored or unbored.

SEC. 2. The amendments made by the first section of this Act shall apply only with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption, after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 9, after the period and before the quotation mark, insert: "This paragraph shall not apply to products of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or of any nation or area dominated or controlled by the foreign government or foreign organization controlling the world Communist movement, as determined by the President pursuant to section 5 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951."

On page 1, line 10, strike out "amendments" and insert: "amendment".

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 10841, which was introduced by our distinguished colleague, the Honorable CLARENCE CANNON, would amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to place bamboo pipestems on the free list when such pipestems are imported from countries other than Communist-dominated countries.

Bamboo tobacco pipestems are currently classified for duty purposes under paragraph 1552 of the Tariff Act of 1930 covering a wide variety of mouthpieces for pipes and for cigar and cigarette holders and carrying a rate of duty of 1 cent each and 15 percent ad valorem. H.R. 10841 would remove the duty on bamboo pipestems only.

The Committee on Ways and Means adopted an amendment to provide that bamboo pipestems that are products of Communist-controlled countries shall not enjoy duty-free treatment and, in fact, such pipestems shall continue to be dutiable at the full rate of duty as provided for by section 5 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951.

Bamboo pipestems are used principally on corncob pipes. The low average retail selling price of corncob pipes and the relatively high rate of duty on bamboo pipestems have made it prohibitive to use such stems in the manufacture of corncob pipes. Elimination of the duty will make it possible to use such pipestems and will permit the corncob pipe industry to produce and sell a more attractive product.

The Committee on Ways and Means received favorable reports from all the interested departments and agencies on this legislation.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, the legislation, H.R. 10841, which has just been considered by the House provides for the duty-free importation of bamboo pipestems when imported from other than Communist-dominated countries.

Bamboo tobacco pipestems are currently classified for duty purposes under paragraph 1552 of the Tariff Act of 1930. Originally under that act items falling within this tariff classification were dutiable at the rate of 5 cents each plus 60 percent ad valorem. Trade agreement concessions have reduced the applicable duty to 1 cent each and 15 percent ad valorem. Bamboo pipestems are principally used on corncob pipes. During the committee consideration of this legislation we were informed that bamboo suitable for bamboo pipestems is not produced in the United States. Pipestems are currently being made in the United States from a wild domestic swamp weed which is not grown commercially in this country.

The Committee on Ways and Means in approving this legislation adopted an amendment to make it clear that the duty-free importation shall be available only when such imports are from other than Communist-dominated countries.

Mr. Speaker, I join in urging my colleagues to support the passage of this legislation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the repeal of this unnecessary and inequitable tariff on pipestems for corncob pipes further reduces the price of the components of this indispensible adjunct to human happiness.

Mr. Speaker, when the earliest pioneers from Virginia and the Carolinas first migrated to the motherly bosom of Missouri a century and a half ago, each settler brought with him his rifle, his Bible, and his pipe, and was equally proficient in the use of all three.

There on the fertile alluvial Mississippi and Missouri River bottoms and the rich loam of the Missouri uplands he found Indian maize yielding corn with cobs of such durable texture and generous proportions that he abandoned the colonial clay and briar bowls of the Old Dominion and adopted the Missouri meerschaum, which has become today the standard of pipe comfort, luxury, simplicity, economy, and enjoyment throughout the world.

Whether in London, or Shanghai, on San Francisco Bay or the sidewalks of New York, buy a pipe at the nearest tobacconist's, and on the bottom of it you will read "Made in Missouri."

Fill it up with the golden flakes of your favorite smoke, preferably old homespun from a Missouri hillside, aged and ripened and mellowed in the top rafters of an ancient log tobacco barn, and it will give you such joy and solace as it is seldom human privilege to enjoy.

Mr. Speaker, I have placed an assortment of this exceptional product of Missouri's soil and industry in the cloak room and shall be glad to have the Members of the House avail themselves of the opportunity to sample one of them. When you get crosswise with life, or digestion is bad; when things go wrong and you want to kick the dog; when the wife is critical and your best friends are out of town, tamp down an extra-heavy charge in one of these friendly pipes and light it with a coal from the fireplace, and peace and contentment will attend you like a benediction. Cares will vanish in dissolving rings of fragrant blue, and life once more will be worth the living.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], the authors of the two bills which we have considered, and the chairman of the committee may extend their remarks in the RECORD on these bills.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDRESS AT THE ACADEMIE DIPLOMATIQUE INTERNATIONALE, PARIS, ON MAY 3, 1960, BY THE PRINCE ALY KHAN, PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE OF PAKISTAN TO THE UNITED NATIONS

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I am calling to the attention of the U.S. Congress and the American people the important statement of a real friend of America, and a good friend of mine, in his last address at the Academie Diplomatique Internationale, Paris, on May 3, 1960, by the Prince Aly Khan, permanent representative of Pakistan to the United Nations:

The Academie Diplomatique Internationale has paid me great honor, through your distinguished Secretaire General Perpetuel, His Excellency, Ambassador A. F. Frangulis, by inviting me to address you this afternoon.

This privilege has inspired me with a spirit of sincere humility. Ever since the days when Ambassador Frangulis was a colleague of my late father at the League of Nations, I have known of the eminent and unrivalled position so long enjoyed by the Academie, and it is indeed a great pleasure to be with you today.

The foreign policy of Pakistan, the country which I have the honor to represent at the United Nations, should be viewed in the light of a broader phenomenon of great significance on the contemporary international scene. As the vast drama of world affairs unfolds, we become ever more conscious of the growing importance of the roles played by countries that have achieved independence since the end of the last World War. This is true insofar as bilateral relations among States are concerned. It is also true with regard to the more highly organized, complex and multilateral aspects of relations among the countries of the world, as, for example, in the mutual security organizations, and in the United Nations.

It is not without significance that membership in that great world organization has increased from the original 51 in 1945 to 82 today, and that many of the newer Members are Asian or African countries that have emerged from a dependent status since World War II. It is very likely that within the next year or so an additional seven or eight newly independent countries, of which almost all are Africans, will be admitted to membership in the United Nations.

The importance of such facts, in today's complex and interdependent world, should not be underestimated. I mention them in passing because they throw much light on our consideration this afternoon of Pakistan's policies in international organizations, particularly in the United Nations.

In discussing this subject it will be helpful to recall that, with a population of 87 million, Pakistan is the seventh largest country in the world. Its area is equal to that of France, Italy, Belgium and the Netherlands combined.

The geography of Pakistan is of special significance, considered from the point of view of the defensive strategy of the free world, as well as of Pakistan's relations with other areas of the globe. That Pakistan is divided in two parts may seem at first glance to be a disadvantage, but one may think of the country as a house with two windows, one facing toward the east and the other toward the west. East Pakistan, bordering upon Burma, looks out upon southeast Asia, and beyond to the Pacific. West Pakistan, bordering upon Iran and Afghanistan, faces toward the Middle and Near East, and beyond to the Mediterranean and Europe. West Pakistan also has a common, although not extensive, border with China, and is not far from the southern frontier of the Soviet Union.

Thus, Pakistan is a link, or a bridge, between the Eastern World and the Western World. Lying athwart the age-old invasion routes from the north, it is also a bastion of defense for the great Indo-Pakistan subcontinent.

From the historical point of view, the origins of Pakistan have a direct bearing on many aspects of the country's foreign policy, including, for example, our relations with India. For what basic reasons were two separate, independent countries, rather than one, created on the subcontinent?

The basic factor underlying the origin of Pakistan was the sense of national homogeneity among the 100 million Moslems, inhabiting the subcontinent of 20 years ago, who formally resolved at Lahore, in the "Pakistan Resolution" of the Muslim League, that their destiny was to be found in creation of a sovereign, independent State. The counterpart of this factor was the equally strong conviction that the Moslems were too numerous to be relegated permanently to the position of a political minority in a single successor State to British India.

No one played a greater part in giving form and substance to this conviction than Quaid-i-Azam Mohammed Ali Jinnah, the founder of Pakistan, and its revered great leader, whose name stands among the architects of history.

In his presidential speech to the Muslim League at Lahore, on 23d of March 1940, he said: "The Hindus and Moslems belong to different religious philosophies, social customs, literatures. They neither intermarry nor interdine and indeed they belong to two different civilizations which are based on conflicting ideas and conceptions. * * * To yoke together two such nations under a single state, one as a numerical minority, the other as a majority, must lead to growing discontent and final destruction of any fabric that may be so built up for the government of such a state."

There were others who had had the same vision of Pakistan. As early as 1883, Sir Syed Ahmed Khan, one of the earliest leaders of Moslems in that area, spoke in prophetic terms of differences of race and creed, and distinctions of caste, which formed an important element in the sociopolitical life of India, and influenced her inhabitants in matters connected with the administration and welfare of the country at large. He pointed out that the larger community would totally override the interests of the smaller community.

In 1887 he said:

"Now suppose that all the English were to leave India—then who would be the rulers of India? Is it possible that under these circumstances two nations—the Moslems and the Hindus—could sit on the same throne and remain equal in power? To hope that both could remain equal is to desire the impossible and the inconceivable."

There were many who labored in this cause. My revered father, in 1906, led a deputation to the then Viceroy of India, Lord Minto, to express the need for the specific protection of Moslems and for separate electorates through which Moslems would elect their own representatives.

The great poet-philosopher of Pakistan, Iqbal, in his presidential address to the Muslim League in 1930, had the vision to prophecy:

"I would like to see the Punjab, Northwest Frontier Province, Sind, and Baluchistan amalgamated into a single state. Self-government within the British Empire or without the British Empire, the formation of a consolidated northwest Indian Moslem state appears to me to be the final destiny of the Moslems."

The ceaseless efforts of the Moslem leaders and, more importantly, the will of the Moslem people, reached fruition on August 14, 1947. On the Indian subcontinent, on that day, two new states were born, India and Pakistan.

In the inscrutable ways of providence, Pakistan thus emerged as the culmination of the first impact of Islam on the subcontinent in the year A.D. 712, when an expedition, under the well-known general, Muhamed Ben Quasim, landed in Sind and conquered it in the name of the Caliphate. This early influence was followed by further invasions from the north, resulting finally in the establishment of the Mogul Empire in 1536. Then came the quest of European explorers and adventurers for India, the expeditions to find the land of the Great Mogul, and by accident, the great continent of America was thus discovered. India, or Industan, as it was then called, has always been on the European horizon a land of mystery, of untold riches, eminently desirable.

Meanwhile, through the migration of Muslim peoples across north Africa and into southwestern Europe, through manifold contacts during the time of the crusades, and in many other ways, Islam had profound influences on the development of Western European civilization. But those same influences, through the many streams of Arab and Muslim culture which made their way to the subcontinent from earliest times, through Iran, through central Asia, and Turkistan, across the Arabian Sea and the Persian Gulf, provided the roots for the national civilization of Pakistan. They explain her close affinity with other Muslim countries, especially those of the Middle East.

In general and rather obvious terms, one might say that Pakistan adheres to a foreign policy of malice toward none and friendship toward all.

This basic philosophy characterizes our attitude toward our neighbor, India. Occupying a relatively smaller part of the subcontinent, bordering upon and divided by the territories of that country, it is obvious that relations with India must play an important role in the foreign policy of Pakistan.

Although our relations with that country have improved somewhat in recent months, there is as yet no real trust between the two countries. Some problems have been resolved by mutual agreement. For example, the borders between India and east and west Pakistan have been demarcated successfully, except for one or two outstanding areas.

We are also fairly well along the way toward settlement of the rankling dispute concerning disposition of the Indus River waters. This problem is of vital concern to Pakistan as it has a direct bearing on the survival of almost half the population of our country. The lives of this large proportion of our people, farmers living in the Indus Basin, depend upon the waters of that river for the irrigation of their lands.

Thanks to good will on both sides, thanks also to the untiring patience and skill of Mr. Eugene Black, President of the World Bank, the basic outlines for a settlement have been determined. One may hope that, despite remaining impediments, a final settlement will soon be signed, by which, with the expenditure of about $1,000 million (nearly 5,000 new French francs), a new beginning could be made in the cooperative sharing by neighbors of the bounty of nature.

Gratitude must also be expressed to the Government of the United States, United Kingdom, West Germany, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand, whose generous financial support not only will greatly facilitate but has, in fact, been the prime factor in the negotiation of a settlement.

The most important and urgent of outstanding issues between India and Pakistan is the problem of Kashmir, which continues to plague relations between the two countries and to embitter feelings on both sides of the border. Until there is an equitable solution of this problem, there can be little hope of establishing a lasting foundation for mutual confidence and fruitful cooperation.

The facts in this case are relatively simple, and they are particularly pertinent to the general subject we are discussing today, because the United Nations has played a very large but, so far, unsuccessful role in efforts to settle this dispute.

Kashmir is equal in area to Holland, Belgium, Denmark, Austria, and Albania put together. Its population is 4½ million, which is greater than the population of many member States of the United Nations. The overwhelming majority of its people in the entire State, 78 percent, and in the Province of Kashmir alone, 93 percent, are linked by blood, culture, and economic ties with the people of Pakistan; in fact, they are part of the same nation. Hundreds of thousands of them have been expelled from their homes in the Indian-occupied area of Kashmir, and, although some of them have been integrated into the Pakistan economy, many others are still living as wards of the Pakistan Government in refugee camps along the border.

We do not say that for these reasons Kashmir should be given to Pakistan, but we do say that the people of the area should be given the opportunity to decide where they want to belong. This principle was implicit in the partition of the Indo-Pakistan subcontinent, and it was accepted by both India and Pakistan on the basis of Security Council resolutions dated August 13, 1948, and January 5, 1949.

It is thus an international agreement which has to be upheld. In order to implement it, it is necessary that both India and Pakistan should withdraw their forces from Kashmir, and let the United Nations hold a free, fair, and impartial plebiscite in accordance with Security Council decisions.

Pakistan has shown its readiness to withdraw its troops from Kashmir as soon as India signifies its willingness to do likewise. But India has not done so. On the contrary, it has used every means and adopted every strategem to consolidate its hold on the territory, perhaps in the hope that the passage of time would lend legitimacy to its occupation of Kashmir. It is not the passage of time, however, but the forces of justice, and sanity, and good will that must solve the problem. It is our earnest hope that these forces will assert themselves before the present situation results in far greater perils.

Developments of the last year or so in south Asia have made the danger in this situation even more grave. With the seeds of instability that exist in this area, with the problems that it faces, it would be sheer blindness not to see that Kashmir constitutes a huge gap in the structure of world peace; if it is not closed, it can only serve as a point of entry for dangers which it may not be possible to control. Because of these recent developments, a crop of rumors has circulated around the world to the effect that my Government might be disposed to agree to a settlement of the Kashmir problem on some basis, other than that in resolutions passed by the United Nations Security Council. This is not the case.

The Pakistan Government, consistent with its constant support of the right of self-determination for all peoples, everywhere, stands by those resolutions, and continues to press for implementation of Security Council decisions; namely, that disposition of the state of Jammu and Kashmir shall be decided on the basis of a free and unfettered plebiscite of the Kashmiri people, wherein they may decide for themselves whether they wish to become part of Pakistan or of India. Pakistan has accepted every arrangement proposed by successive U.N. representatives for holding such a plebiscite and has, therefore, amply proven its bona fides. As much cannot be said for India which, contrary to U.N. decisions, remains in control of two-thirds of the state territory, has steadily been integrating this internationally disputed area into India, and has denied to the people of the area its right of self-determination.

Of our relations with Afghanistan, which borders Pakistan on the northwest, I shall say but a few words. They are not, unfortunately, as happy as they might be, although from a rational point of view, they should be easy to improve, and we shall continue our endeavors to do so.

For some time past, leaders of Afghanistan have been making claims which amount either to asking for a portion of Pakistan, or having the right to interfere in the internal affairs of Pakistan. Such claims are quite intolerable to us, and yet they have been vociferously supported by leaders of the Soviet Union. This can only be interpreted as part of an effort to aggravate tensions in that part of the world and, in turn, to pave the way for the age-old ambition of dominating the subcontinent, and areas around it.

With Iran, Pakistan's neighbor to the west, our relations are of the very warmest and we have the most brotherly and affectionate feelings for the sovereign and people of that country.

This leads me to consideration of Pakistan's participation in mutual security, or defense, pacts, a type of international organization which has come to play a decisively important role, since the end of World War II, in the prevention of war and the maintenance of peace.

Such organizations are, of course, entirely consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations and are, indeed, envisaged in the charter of that Organization. Article 51, for example, provides that nothing in the charter "* * * precludes the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action * * *."

It hardly seems necessary to state that these mutual security pacts, of the type to which Pakistan adheres, are purely defensive in character, and I do so only because there are others who still charge on occasion, quite falsely, that they are aggressive.

As defensive pacts they supplement the United Nations, and it may be said that they help remedy some of the weaknesses of that Organization, as for example, if the Security Council were slow to act, or acted indecisively, or was prevented from acting by a veto. Thus, the mutual security organizations may be compared to the fire brigade, ready to go into action at a moment's notice in case of need.

As a new country, and like most of the 20-odd other countries that have achieved independence in the last 15 years, Pakistan has suffered many growing pains, and has been confronted with enormous problems of political, economic, and social development. We have received, and are very grateful for, but we still need, a tremendous amount of help from our friends and well wishers, not only technical assistance from national and international programs, but also in the form of a greatly increased flow of foreign private capital investment, and we have provided assurances and guarantees that are fully adequate to protect such investments.

During the last year and a half, under the devoted leadership of President Mohammad Ayub Khan, whose qualities of patriotism, devotion to his people, and greatness have been compared to those of General de Gaulle, and with the overwhelming support of the population, great forward strides have been taken, a new outlook achieved, and much progress made toward solving the country's problems. But continued progress depends upon peace, upon the preservation of the country's territorial integrity and independence, upon freedom to develop its own life in its own way, and upon security from any threat of external aggression or subversion.

Like most countries, whether new or old, Pakistan does not, by itself alone, possess the physical and material resources necessary to preserve and defend her freedom and security. Like other new countries, she has had to make a very fundamental decision in the development of her foreign policy. Some countries, and it is well known which they are, have decided that their interests lie in striving to steer a neutral course between the two great power blocs and thus gain the best of all possible worlds. But the predominant opinion in Pakistan believed that this would be shortsighted and opportunistic, and we made our firm decision in favor of the more positive policy of collective security. That is, we decided to share with other like-minded nations, and to the fullest extent of our limited means, in the great collective task of defending those principles of freedom, democracy, and justice, to which we, like they, are profoundly devoted.

I have referred in the course of my remarks this afternoon to the concept of Pakistan both as a link or bridge between two worlds and as a bastion of defense athwart age-old routes of invasion. The tangible reality of this concept is to be found in Pakistan's participation in the Central Treaty Organization (CENTO) on the one hand, and in the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization (SEATO) on the other, both of them being mutual security organizations, strictly defensive, in keeping with the United Nations Charter, and not aimed at any one.

Through its membership in CENTO, the former Baghdad Pact, Pakistan is allied for collective defense with Iran, Turkey, and the United Kingdom. Although the United States of America, which participates in much of the work of CENTO, is not a full-fledged member of that organization, Pakistan is allied with the United States in a mutual assistance agreement and also through the membership of both in SEATO, the other members of that organization being Australia, France, New Zealand, the Philippines, Thailand, and the United Kingdom.

CENTO and SEATO, taken together, thus form a vast defensive network that stretches from the Pacific to the Mediterranean and, linked with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), literally circles the globe.

It is interesting to note that Pakistan and the United Kingdom are the only two countries that are members both of CENTO and of SEATO. Geographically, of course, Pakistan's situation as a member of both organizations is entirely unique, and it is in this sense that she is a link, and, if I may say so, a strong one, in the free world's chain of defense.

The world's statesmen had much right to think when they founded the United Nations in 1945, that it would prove capable, as a worldwide collective security organization, of assuring perpetual peace. It has, certainly, done a very great deal to prevent the outbreak of armed conflict and, when conflict has occurred to limit it from spreading, and bring it to an end. The organization has not so far, however, proved itself capable of rooting out the causes of tensions among the great powers, particularly between the superpowers, or of eliminating those tensions. It has not, on the other hand, in any conceivable way, aggravated them and, although certain matters that divide the powers do not come before the United Nations, many others do. This is in itself a very good thing because, at the very least, much light is thrown upon problems by debate, resolutions and many unofficial contacts, and the powers have only themselves to blame if they fail to comprehend the force of world opinion thus expressed, and try to adjust their policies accordingly.

Although, unfortunately, not all of the free and independent nations of the world have as yet become members of the United Nations, the Organization is nearly a universal one. As such, it reflects the world as it is in reality, and not, ideally, the world that all of us, who are laborers in the vineyards of diplomacy, hope that it will some day become.

The situation of Pakistan in the United Nations is somewhat unique. As an Asian country, among the first to achieve freedom after the last war, we are a member of the Asian-African group of 29 countries in the United Nations. At the same time we are also a member of the British Commonwealth group, and of the CENTO and SEATO groups.

There is one characteristic that distinguishes these various groups, as well as the Latin American group of 20 countries, from the Eastern European group of member states. This latter group, it may be said objectively, is more highly integrated; it is monolithic, and members of it tend to participate in United Nations debates and vote on resolutions as a bloc, following the lead of the Soviet Union.

This is not the case with the other groups. They reflect varying degrees of homogeneity and organization. Thus, the Latin American group is quite highly organized and homogeneous, while the Asian-African group is not so much so. It is interesting to note, in passing, that these two groups, which share many problems, ideals and aspirations, together account for 49 votes in the United Nations, or better than a majority of the total membership. The outstanding characteristic of all these groups is that there is complete independence of position, and freedom of expression, within them. Individual members of these groups do not always speak and vote the same way, indeed they may find themselves at opposite poles on particular issues.

As a participant in the work of various groups, Pakistan is thus able to maintain its own independent policy. The position it takes, and the votes it casts, are based on principle, on conscience, and on the pragmatic factors of its relationships, including its defensive alliances, with the various countries of the world, within as well as outside the United Nations.

On the other hand, Pakistan is a Moslem country, with its long tradition of Islamic culture, and close affiliations with other Moslem peoples, wherever they may be. It is an Asian country, it is a country that has but recently won its freedom from alien rule, and it is an underdeveloped country, struggling desperately to overcome the handicaps of disease, ignorance, and poverty. For these reasons one expects, and quite correctly, that, in the conduct of its foreign relations, including its participation in the United Nations, Pakistan's policies and positions are very likely to be similar to those advanced by other countries in a comparable situation. This is particularly true with regard to issues of direct and vital concern to all such countries, for example, those concerned with human rights, the fundamental freedoms, and economic, political, and social advancement.

The number of subjects dealt with in the United Nations is large and varied, and it is natural that Pakistan should devote a major share of its attention to those which directly reflect its own particular situation. Among these are the economic subjects, the importance of which can hardly be exaggerated. One has only to recall that 60 of the 82 Member States of the United Nations have an average annual income of $120 (600 new French francs) per person, while the average for more highly developed countries is $800 (4,000 new French francs) annually. This disparity creates many strains and tensions, and it has been suggested that the dangers inherent in the situation are more explosive than those of the cold war.

There are many factors, of course, which militate against the improvement of living standards. One of the most important, I mention it for illustration, is fluctuation in the prices of commodities, which has been the subject of extensive debate at the United Nations.

In the last few years there has been a sharp decline in the prices of exported raw materials, while, on the other side of the balance, prices of imported manufactured goods have registered a steady rise. The fall of export prices, combined with the rise of import prices, has resulted in a loss of import capacity equivalent to about one-sixth of the official gold and foreign exchange holdings of the underdeveloped countries. This amounts to about 6 years' lending to them by the World Bank, or to give it its correct title, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and Pakistan, like other underdeveloped countries, has suffered severely from this situation.

In efforts to find remedies for this very serious situation, which has jeopardized the development programs of all of the underdeveloped countries, Pakistan played a leading role. It joined with other delegations in introducing, at the last session of the General Assembly, a resolution which looks toward the establishment of machinery, within the framework of the United Nations, to help offset the effects of large fluctuations in commodity prices on balances of payments. This resolution was adopted unanimously, and we are hopeful that there will develop from this beginning, a more concerted and effective attack on the problem.

The principles of respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion, and the principles of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, are firmly established in the United Nations Charter, and Pakistan has always been a strong champion of those principles at meetings of the General Assembly and other United Nations bodies. Thus, we have worked to overcome the denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms, to which peoples of Indo-Pakistan origin, and their African brethren, are subjected in the Union of South Africa. We have also encouraged the right of self-determination for the emerging nations of the great African Continent who have been subjected to foreign rule.

Nationalism is a force that may tend gradually to lose some of its vigor in the older countries, but it is a vital factor among the newer countries, particularly those that have not yet been able to express the right of self-determination guaranteed in the charter. As a new country itself, Pakistan understands and sympathizes with the great wave of nationalism which has swept through all of Asia during the past decade and a half, and is now so rapidly overflowing the continent of Africa. We see in the emergence of newly independent states in the world, the fulfillment of the aspirations of remaining peoples, an essential aspect of efforts to establish lasting peace.

Pakistan feels the deepest sense of shock and grief at the loss of human life, the large-scale arrests, and the virtual reign of terror in the Union of South Africa in recent weeks. This situation is the direct and inevitable result of the systematic denial of human rights in the Union, and the Union Government's avowed policies of racial discrimination and segregation, known as apartheid.

It is quite obvious to me that conditions in South Africa today constitute a threat to international peace. No policies of any government that are so obviously and so definitely contrary to the great, sweeping forces of history, can possibly hide behind the cloak of what some are pleased to call "domestic jurisdiction." No situation as explosive as this one can possibly be brushed aside, or forgotten, in any period of momentary calm, or because of preoccupation with other, seemingly more important events.

For such reasons as these, Pakistan considered it essential to join recently with the other twenty-eight members of the Asian-African group in requesting an urgent meeting of the United Nations Security Council to discuss this situation, and to take such practical steps as might be feasible and appropriate to deal with it. Unfortunately, there is not much that the Security Council, or the United Nations as a whole, can do, so long as the government of South Africa is blind to all elemental considerations of humanity and justice, and so long as it is heedless of the powerful voice of world public opinion, as it is expressed through the United Nations, and without a single dissenting voice from any part of the world.

Fortunately, there are courageous voices still to be heard in the Union, and we must all hope that they will be listened to, and that this foul and frightful blot on the contemparary international scene will soon be erased.

I do not believe that there is any valid ground for misunderstanding about our position in the United Nations with regard to Algeria.

On the one hand, although widely separated geographically from that area, we have, very naturally, close feelings of kinship with the Moslems there. Also, as I have pointed out, we are deeply committed to the principle of self-determination that is embodied in the United Nations Charter.

On the other hand, we have the very deepest respect and admiration for France, and for the great contributions France has made to humanity. We consider ourselves to be allied with France, as indeed we are in SEATO, and it must be stated in the most categorical terms, that our position on this question is not directed in any way against France or French interests. We are for France but we are also for self-determination for Algeria. Our position has been positive, but it has also been moderate and conciliatory.

In the light of our firm and definite policy of support for the principle of self-determination, it has seemed to us axiomatic that this principle should provide the basis for solution of the Algerian problem. Accordingly, we welcomed most sincerely President de Gaulle's historic statement of September 16, 1959, as a great landmark in the evolution of French policy toward Algeria. As I said at the United Nations last December, we believe that recognition of the right of self-determination for the people of Algeria marked a great advance from previous positions and opened the path to a solution of the problem.

There have been ups and downs in the situation since then and deep cleavages still exist, but we venture to hope that President de Gaulle's statement will continue to stand as a beacon illuminating the future of Algeria, and that the light of peace, harmony, and justice will soon be restored to that land.

The issue of disarmament is a major one dividing the free world from the Communist world, but disarmament has long since ceased to be an issue which concerns only the big powers. As it was in the days of the League of Nations, so it is today; all the nations of the world have an equal stake in the achievement of an effective disarmament system, because without such a system, there can be no real and lasting peace.

The United Nations Charter sets forth the objective in the following words: "to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources." This quotation calls attention not only to the quest for peace but also to the fact that the burden or armaments is a crushing one. The diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources is enormous, of course, and it is evident that this great wealth spent on armaments means just that much less available, in our interdependent world, for the relief of human suffering, to combat illiteracy for economic development and, generally, to raise living standards throughout the world.

For many years, no appreciable progress was made toward the establishment of an effective disarmament system, despite exhaustive efforts. Positions were rigid, and new ideas were greeted with coolness, or rejected out of hand. In recent months, however, there seems to be some ground for hoping that the situation is improving. Representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom, and the Soviet Union have been meeting intermittently at Geneva for nearly 2 years, and have recently been in session there, in an effort to reach agreement on the cessation of nuclear explosions. We must guard against wishful thinking, but some progress seems to have been made in these negotiaations and meanwhile, it is gratifying to note that the powers concerned in those meetings have voluntarily suspended nuclear tests for the time being.

The injurious effects of radioactive fallout on living organisms, it may be said, is a matter of special concern to us, because part of Pakistan lies in the belt of greatest concentration of such fallout, and rice, the staple food of the majority of our population, absorbs radioactive substances to a much larger extent than other crops.

At the General Assembly meeting last fall, Pakistan supported a resolution which, in effect, endorsed the establishment of the Ten Nation Committee agreed to earlier by the Great Powers, called upon governments to make every effort to achieve a constructive solution of the problem of disarmament, and expressed the hope that measures leading toward the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control would be worked out in detail and agreed upon in the shortest possible time.

This resolution passed the Assembly unanimously, a somewhat rare event in the annals of the United Nations, and the Ten Nation Committee has recently been meeting at Geneva. These negotiations have not, however, fulfilled the expectations that one might have had the right to expect, judging from last autumn's meetings of the United Nations General Assembly, and this failure so far of the governments represented at Geneva must inevitably disappoint other countries. At the same time defeatism will not serve any useful purpose, and one is still permitted to hope, despite the magnitude and complexity of the problems involved, that the groundwork laid at Geneva, and even in earlier years, will lead, at the forthcoming summit meeting, to some basic agreement on principles at least, which may thereafter be worked out in detail, and submitted in due time to the United Nations.

Diplomacy, whether it is practiced at summit meetings or at the United Nations, is not, after all, so very different from any other aspect of human affairs. Good will, friendship, patience, and tenacity, a measure of optimism, a dash of common sense, and a bit of humor, all help to smooth man's rough road toward peace and freedom.

I am a firm believer in the United Nations. Like any other human organization, it is not perfect. It has defects, faults, and weaknesses. It has not always been successful in solving the problems confronting it. But in the last analysis there is no alternative to it. Perhaps the major purpose it serves is to concentrate world attention on danger spots; in this way it helps to avoid explosive situations or, where such situations exist to prevent them from leading to widespread, international, conflict.

The United Nations is also a great center for harmonizing relations among nations, it is a sort of marketplace of the world, where presidents and prime ministers, foreign ministers and ambassadors, have an opportunity, not otherwise provided on such a scale, to meet and discuss problems of mutual concern. Very often, when they have presented their respective countries' ideas and points of view, and discussed and thrashed them out in a friendly way, agreement is reached. That, after all, is what the United Nations exists for; to provide a forum for discussion, and through discussion to reach agreement. By mutual agreement alone can peace and the advancement of human welfare be attained.

THE PRINCE ALY KHAN

(Biographical sketch)

His Excellency the Prince Aly Kahn was born in Turin, Italy, on June 13, 1911. His early education was under Swiss tutors, and later at Lincoln's Inn, London.

He served as a secretary to what was then the Indian delegation to the Second Round Table Conference, called by the British Government, to discuss constitutional reforms for India.

When the Second World War broke out in 1939 he joined the Foreign Legion of the French Army and served as a second lieutenant in the 6th Regiment until the fall of France. After the occupation of France by Germany, Prince Aly Khan joined the British Army and served in the British Hussar Regiment called the Royal Wiltshire Yeomanry and reached the rank of lieutenant colonel before the end of the war.

During the final phase of the war Prince Aly Khan was attached to the U.S. Army and served in the 6th U.S. Army Group which carried out the second invasion, landing in the south of France in August 1944 (under the command of Gen. Jacob L. Devers).

During his military service Prince Aly Khan was decorated several times. He was awarded the U.S. Army Bronze Star; and by France the Croix de Guerre with Palms (order of the army) and the French Legion of Honour (officer).

After the close of the war, the advancing years of His Highness the late Aga Khan made it necessary for Prince Aly Khan to remain at his disposal to carry out missions for him in the Near and Far East.

He is at present the Colonel Commandant of the 4th Cavalry in the Pakistan Army.

Since 1958 he is Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary and Permanent Representative of Pakistan to the United Nations; he was Chairman of Pakistan Delegation to the 13th session of the General Assembly; he was elected vice president of the 13th session of the General Assembly; elected Vice Chairman of United Nations Peace Observation Commission in 1959; he is representative of Pakistan to the Geneva Office of the United Nations.

CHANGES IN THE ROAD AT WHITES BRANCH, GRAPEVINE RESERVOIR, TEX.

Mr. IKARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 2178) to authorize the Secretary of the Army to make certain changes in the road at Whites Branch, Grapevine Reservoir, Tex.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, is authorized and directed to elevate, relocate, or make such other changes as may be necessary to insure that the road at Whites Branch, Grapevine Reservoir, Texas, will at all times be above the water level of such reservoir.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7 after "times" strike out the balance of the line and insert "be above elevation 565.0 feet above mean sea level."

"SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such funds as may be necessary to carry out the purpose of this Act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN REAL PROPERTY TO THE CITY OF LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3319) to authorize the Administrator of General Services to release the recapture provisions contained in the conveyance of certain real property to the city of Little Rock, Ark., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PELLY. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Texas if he has cleared this with the minority side?

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. I have.

Mr. PELLY. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) subparagraph numbered (2) of the concluding paragraph of the first section of the Act entitled "An Act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes," approved May 15, 1936 (49 Stat. 1292), is hereby repealed.

(b) The Administrator of General Services is authorized and directed to execute and deliver to the city of Little Rock, Arkansas, without consideration, such instrument as he shall determine to be required to release effectively to that city all right, title, and interest heretofore reserved to the United States or any department or agency thereof in or with respect to the land described in section 2 of that Act (49 Stat. 1292–1293) in compliance with the condition imposed by that subparagraph.

Passed the Senate June 22, 1960.

Attest: FELTON M. JOHNSON, Secretary.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HARPERS FERRY NATIONAL MONUMENT

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 10831) to authorize the acquisition of certain lands for addition to Harpers Ferry National Monument, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. GROSS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman the cost and the purpose of the bill?

Mr. STAGGERS. The cost of it as reported by the Department of the Interior is $300,000. I introduced the bill at the request of the Department. I should like to explain just a little bit of the background, if I may.

This is meritorius legislation. Every schoolchild in America has read and studied about Harpers Ferry. A national monument is already established and is in operation in the locality.

This 30 acres could not be obtained at the time of the original purchase of the land for the Harpers Ferry National Monument because Storer College, an institution of higher learning for colored students, was then in operation.

In recent years, when the schools in our State integrated, it was necessary to abandon Storer College and the property is now for sale. The Federal Government can secure it at the present time, with all of the buildings, for the small sum of $300,000.

These buildings on the Storer College grounds may be used for housing personnel of the National Park Service and for training purposes.

The 30 acres of land in question are located almost in the center of the Harpers Ferry National Monument and acquisition is necessary to complete this project. In fact, many historical buildings and outstanding spots in our history are located on the Storer College site, including John Brown's Fort and the Federal Armory which was seized by John Brown in 1859. George Washington requested that moneys be appropriated for the building of this historical armory.

If this additional land is not acquired by the Federal Government now, there is the danger that it would be purchased by private interests. In the event this should occur, I am sure that in later years it would cost our Government many, many times over the expenditure necessary today. And, as stated above, in time the land, of necessity, must be acquired for completion of the Harpers Ferry National Monument.

I sincerely believe it is only wise and using good judgment to pass this legislation today and not take the chance of waiting to take action on it when we return in August. The RECORD will show that full hearings were held before the subcommittee and approved by it, and then approval was granted by the full committee. The legislation meets all the requirements for passage on the Consent Calendar which the objectors require.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. KYL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CONVEYANCE OF LAND IN VAN BUREN COUNTY, IOWA

Mr. SCHWENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3247) to amend the act of September 9, 1959 (73 Stat. 473), to provide that payment for the lands covered by such act may be made on a deferred basis.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. SCHWENGEL. I shall be very glad to offer an explanation.

This is a private bill. It is the same as a companion bill H.R. 10784, introduced by myself and which was reported out of the Committee on Agriculture the other day by unanimous vote. It makes it possible for the city of Keosauqua to acquire certain lands in negotiation with the Government which can be used as a park and for extension of sewer facilities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SENATE RESOLUTION RETURNED

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution based on the privileges of the House and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE RESOLUTION 598

That Senate Joint Resolution 217 in the opinion of this House contravenes the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, and is an infringement of the privileges of this House, and that the said resolution be respectfully returned to the Senate with a message communicating this resolution.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. Will the gentleman explain the resolution?

Mr. McCORMACK. This resolution has the effect of sending back to the Senate the Senate resolution in relation to the sugar legislation. It states that the House respectfully declines to receive it on the ground that it involves revenue or affects revenue; and, under the Constitution, such legislation should originate in the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Without objection the House will stand in recess until 11 o'clock p.m.

There was no objection.

Thereupon (at 9 o'clock and 56 minutes p.m.) the House stood in recess until 11 o'clock p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 11 o'clock p.m.

AUTHORIZING ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN LANDS FOR ADDITION TO HARPERS FERRY NATIONAL MONUMENT

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill—H.R. 10831—to authorize the acquisition of certain lands for addition to Harpers Ferry National Monument, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. KYL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I read just four lines from the report:

H.R. 10831 limits the amount authorized to be appropriated for acquisition of the lands, interests in lands, and improvements covered by it to $300,000. The estimated investment to be made in roads, trails, buildings, utilities, and other facilities is $4,325,800.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That to further the commemorative purposes of the Act of June 30, 1944 (58 Stat. 645), by providing historic properties and administrative facilities, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to acquire, in the manner hereafter stated, the Storer College site, the original site of John Brown's "Fort" and the old Federal armory, comprising altogether approximately thirty acres, for addition to Harpers Ferry National Monument.

SEC. 2. (a) The Secretary of the Interior may accept the conveyance of all right, title, and interest of the trustees of Storer College in and to the lands and improvements in Harpers Ferry, West Virginia, granted to their predecessors for educational purposes pursuant to section 2 of the Act of December 15, 1868 (15 Stat. 266), upon payment to said trustees of not more than the current fair market value of the improvements located upon such lands. The Secretary may also purchase lands, interests therein, and improvements thereon, which lands were granted to the trustees of Storer College pursuant to such Act of 1868 and subsequently were alienated by the trustees: Provided, That he may pay not in excess of the amount paid therefor by the then owners plus the cost of existing improvements placed thereon by them, and, in no event may he pay more than the current fair market value. The Secretary may also purchase from the trustees of Storer College, at not more than their fair market value, other lands and interests in lands acquired by them or their predecessors as a part of the college site, together with any improvements thereon. In addition, up to seven acres of privately owned lands, interests therein, and improvements thereon, which are interspersed with the aforesaid college lands may be purchased by the Secretary. Lands and interests purchased under this subsection may be exchanged for other lands, and interests therein, of approximately equal value, which comprise the college and interspersed lands otherwise authorized herein for purchase.

(b) To facilitate the acquisition of the original site of the engine house known as John Brown's "Fort" and the old Federal arsenal, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to exchange therefor federally owned park lands or interests in lands of approximately equal value in the vicinity of Cumberland, Maryland, which he finds are no longer required for park purposes.

SEC. 3. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums, not to exceed $300,000, as may be necessary for the purchase of lands, interests therein, and improvements thereon pursuant to this Act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill—S. 2674—to authorize the acquisition of certain lands for addition to Harpers Ferry National Monument, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That to further the commemorative purposes of the Act of June 30, 1944 (58 Stat. 645), by providing historic properties and administrative facilities, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to acquire, in the manner hereafter stated, the Storer College site, the original site of John Brown's "Fort" and the old Federal armory, comprising altogether approximately thirty acres, for addition to Harpers Ferry National Monument.

AMENDING SECTION 3568 OF TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE

Mr. TOLL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill—S. 2932—to amend section 3568 of title 18, United States Code, to provide for reducing sentences of imprisonment imposed upon persons held in custody for want of bail while awaiting trial by the time so spent in custody.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 3568 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3568. Effective date of sentence; credit for time in custody awaiting trial.

"The sentence of imprisonment of any person convicted of an offense in a court of the United States shall commence to run from the date on which such person is received at the penitentiary, reformatory, or jail for service of said sentence: Provided, That the Attorney General shall give any such person credit toward service of his sentence for any days spent in custody for want of bail set for the offense under which sentence was imposed.

"If any such person shall be committed to a jail or other place of detention to await transportation to the place at which his sentence is to be served, his sentence shall commence to run from the date on which he is received at such jail or other place of detention.

"No sentence shall prescribe any other method of computing the term."

(b) Item 3568 of the analysis of chapter 227, immediately preceding section 3561 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"3568. Effective date of sentence; credit for time in custody awaiting trial."

SEC. 2. The amendments made by the first section of this Act shall be effective only with respect to persons sentenced to imprisonment on or after the thirtieth day after the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. TOLL. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows: Amendment offered by Mr. Toll. Page 1, line 3, strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 3568 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3568. Effective date of sentence; credit for time in custody prior to the imposition of sentence.

"The sentence of imprisonment of any person convicted of an offense in a court of the United States shall commence to run from the date on which such person is received at the penitentiary, reformatory, or jail for service of said sentence: Provided, That the Attorney General shall give any such person credit toward service of his sentence for any days spent in custody prior to the imposition of sentence by the sentencing court for wait of bail set for the offense under which sentence was imposed where the statute requires the imposition of a minimum mandatory sentence.

"If any such person shall be committed to a jail or other place of detention to await transportation to the place at which his sentence is to be served, his sentence shall commence to run from the date on which he is received at such jail or other place of detention.

"No sentence shall prescribe any other method of computing the term."

(b) Item 3568 of the analysis of chapter 227, immediately preceding section 3561 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"3568. Effective date of sentence; credit for time in custody trial prior to imposition of sentence."

SEC. 2. The amendments made by the first section of this Act shall be effective only with respect to persons sentenced to imprisonment on or after the thirtieth day after the date of enactment of this Act.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide for credit for service of sentence for time spent in custody for want of bail prior to the imposition of sentence by the sentencing court where the statute requires the imposition of a minimum mandatory sentence."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to provide for credit for service of sentence for time spent in custody for want of bail prior to the imposition of sentence by the sentencing court where the statute requires the imposition of a minimum mandatory sentence."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF LAND IN VAN BUREN COUNTY, IOWA

Mr. SCHWENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill—S. 3247—to amend the act of September 9, 1959, 73 Statute 473, to provide that payment for the lands covered by such act may be made on a deferred basis.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Act of September 9, 1959 (73 Stat. 473), is amended to read as follows: "That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to sell and convey to the city of Keosauqua, Iowa, by quitclaim deed, at the fair market value and under such terms and conditions, including deferred payments, as determined by him, and subject to all outstanding rights, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to that certain tract of land containing ninety-nine and fifty-seven one-hundredths acres, more or less, located in Van Buren County, Iowa, in and adjacent to the city of Keosauqua, conveyed to the United States by the Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of North Dakota by deed dated December 10, 1936, and recorded in Van Buren County in book 78 on page 303: Provided, That any deferred payments shall be made within a period of not more than twenty years with interest beginning with the date of conveyance, at a rate to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury by estimating the average yield to maturity, on the basis of daily closing market bid quotations or prices during the month preceding the month in which the conveyance is made, on all outstanding marketable obligations of the United States having a maturity date of ten or more years from the first day of such month."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TWO HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF CUMBERLAND COUNTY, MAINE

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a resolution commemorating the 200th anniversary of the incorporation of the county of Cumberland, Maine; and, I deem it appropriate to make a few short remarks in honor of this historic occasion.

The history of the region is a vital part of Maine tradition; and, I feel, should be recalled this year in which the residents observe the 200th anniversary of the county.

This county, as I am sure anyone who has had the good fortune to visit, during our balmy summers, is perhaps the most beautiful in the world. The Islands of Casco Bay—sometimes called the Calendar Islands because they number 365, are located within the boundary of the county and the adjoining county. Its people can be proud to boast of its white sand beaches, head land, cliffs, peninsulars, harbors, inlets, and lakes. But, the beauty of Cumberland County is not restricted to that found in its water environment. It extends to its rolling fields, its rugged mountains and its industrialized sections. And, it is peopled by proud, strong citizens of New England stock. Among these better known personages, we find the names of: Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, the poet; Publisher Cyrus N. K. Curtis; U.S. Senator William Pitt Fessenden; Commodore Edward Preble; Rear Adm. George Henry Preble; and Speaker Thomas B. Reed of the U.S. House of Representatives. I have named but a few of those notables who have made the county great over the past 200 years. There are more, many more and among those, I am sure, are the civic-minded citizens who are responsible for this centennial celebration for which I introduce the following resolution:

Whereas the year 1960 marks the two hundredth anniversary of the incorporation of the county of Cumberland, Maine; and

Whereas from the time of this first settlement, in the early seventeenth century, the people of Cumberland County have figured conspicuously in the fighting front and defense of this Nation; and

Whereas the observance of the bicentenary anniversary of Cumberland County will be celebrated June 19 through August 27, 1960, with impressive community ceremonies, large public parades and widespread participation of Maine citizens and visitors from other States and nations; and

Whereas Cumberland County is a beautiful region, rich in historic interest, well known for its patriotic contributions, noted for its many famous sons and daughters who distinguish themselves in many fields of endeavor and many facets of American civilization: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives extends its congratulations and felicitations to the people of Cumberland County, Maine, on the occasion of the two hundredth anniversary of its incorporation and the House of Representatives further expresses its appreciation for the splendid services rendered to the Nation by the citizens of Cumberland County during the past two hundred years.

CORRUPTION BETWEEN KEY OFFICIALS OF THE NATIONALIST CHINESE GOVERNMENT AND AN AMERICAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLIKEN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to correct an unfortunate impression which was circulated some weeks ago to the effect that there may have been corruption between key officials of the Nationalist Chinese Government and an American manufacturing company.

About a month ago the United Press International circulated a story which was published in newspapers in Pennsylvania, California, and Formosa, and possibly elsewhere, reporting charges by a Member of Congress that some key officials of the Formosan Government had corrupt relationships with Westinghouse Electric Corp., in the sale of a steam turbine generator by Westinghouse to the Taiwan Power Co. This story also indicated that the International Cooperation Administration—ICA— of the State Department was investigating these charges of corruption since this electrical equipment would be financed with U.S. foreign aid funds. Because a substantial portion of this electrical apparatus will be manufactured at the Westinghouse plant in my congressional district, I have taken an interest in this matter. Certainly I would not condone Westinghouse or any other company or individual who engaged in corrupt transactions. On the other hand, I would be seriously concerned if erroneous charges of corruption were to prevent Westinghouse or any other company in my district from obtaining business to which it is propertly entitled. I have inquired of officials of the State Department who have informed me that extensive investigation has revealed no evidence of corruption involving officials of the Chinese Nationalist Government or the Taiwan Power Co. with Westinghouse or any of its representatives. The State Department does not appear ready to publicize its findings that their investigation has not revealed any corruption in this matter, but the cloud of uncertainty can and should be lifted without further delay.

I have learned that the original charges of corruption were made by a representative of another electric company which was competing with Westinghouse for the sale of electrical apparatus to the Taiwan Power Co. I think it is unfortunate that unsubstantiated charges of this kind were resorted to by the company which failed to get the order for this apparatus. It also is unfortunate that the investigative processes of the Federal Government were permitted to be used in this battle between two competing companies. It would be still more unfortunate if the charges of corruption, which are without foundation, were to stand in the way of legitimate business transactions in Taiwan. I certainly do not want people who live in the congressional district which I represent to be denied employment which they badly need simply because unfounded charges of corruption were made and left pending, as has happened in this case. For this reason I have personally looked into this matter and I am announcing the results of my findings.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. STAGGERS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, more than a hundred years ago, the following bold and harsh words were spoken by Emerson:

> In our society there is a standing antagonism between the conservative and the democratic classes; between those who have made their fortunes, and the young and poor who have fortunes to make; between the interests of dead labor, that is, the labor of hands long ago still in the grave, which labor is now entombed in money stocks, or in lands and buildings owned by idle capitalists, and the interests of living labor, which seeks to possess itself of land and buildings, and money stocks. The first class is timid, selfish, illiberal, hating innovation, and continually losing numbers by death. The second class is selfish also, encroaching, bold, self-relying, always outnumbering the other and recruiting its number every hour by births. It desires to keep open every avenue to the competition of all, and to multiply avenues.

That antagonism still persists in our modern society, and some 25 years ago social security was devised to bridge the chasm between the conservative and democratic classes. In this day, which seems on the surface to be characterized by a very general prosperity and economic well-being, it is difficult to visualize how wide and deep the chasm was in the depression years. Millions of our fellow citizens were unemployed. The younger generation just finishing school and seeking a place for themselves in the working world hunted futilely for jobs. Despondency over the future was widespread. Marriage had to be postponed, and families declined in numbers. It was argued that the United States had become a static society, and that a maximum population of about 160 million would be reached by 1960, after which population would gradually decline.

The social security system was designed to open avenues for the competition of all by creating job opportunities for the young and eager workers. Men who had served their generation faithfully and well in industry and in commerce, and whose financial needs declined as their families grew up and assumed the responsibility for their own support, were permitted to retire without the menace of dire poverty in their remaining years. Those who had their fortunes to make rushed to fill the vacated jobs, and economic hope and opportunity was restored.

If it is hard to remember the despondency of the 1930's, it is equally hard to realize how successfully social security has bridged the gap. For it was not a case of robbing the conservative classes to pay the democratic classes, as many feared at the time it would be. With their names on the payroll, the new workers immediately entered the market for all kinds of goods and services. Sales picked up and started the wheels of industry spinning again to provide houses and furniture and automobiles and food and clothing for those who could now afford to pay for them. Meanwhile the retired workers still had money to spend for their diminished needs. Franklin D. Roosevelt entered the White House in 1933 with a consuming concern for the poor and the oppressed. He was condemned as a traitor to his own class, the rich and powerful. In the perspective of history, it may be conceded that Roosevelt was actually a greater benefactor to the conservatives than to the democratic masses he essayed to champion. While social security was not the only factor in industrial reactivation he inspired, it must be judged a highly important factor. No devastating depression has since gained a foothold in this country. We have had no recurrence of the spectacle of ruined capitalists jumping from their office windows. Social security has ensured jobs for oncoming generations of workers and a continuing demand for goods. Business has its ups and downs, but minor depressions have been bridged over without general distress.

Initial approach to social security was timid and hesitating. Workers in a few fields only, mostly industry, were insured. Within the last dozen years coverage has been extended to farmers, to the self-employed, and, most important of all, I am happy to say that in 1949 I was cosponsor and diligently worked for passage of the enabling act which extended social security coverage to the vast army of State and local government employees and to those who render service in homes and hospitals and other institutions. As a result, those who fill the demands for services as well as the demand for goods, the millions of schoolteachers, the typists and clerks in government offices, the policemen, and those who build and maintain our public roads, now enjoy the protection and security afforded by the system. Other improvements have been made from time to time. As living expenses have increased, slight increases have been made in benefits. But these are still inadequate to match the rising costs.

Nevertheless, the conservatives are slow to learn and hard to teach. They must be convinced over and over that their own continued prosperity depends on continuous effective demand for what they have to offer. Their carping complaints hinder further improvements in the system which our experience demonstrates are both needed and actuarially practical. At this time, three general areas for improvement might be considered.

The first of these is in the age for retirement. The initial Social Security Act set the somewhat arbitrary age of 65. Conditions in general justified agreement upon 65 as the average age. In some lines of employment, that age is no longer a realistic one. Some occupations entail more hazards and more emotional strains, and the workers age more rapidly. Among these occupations, the railroad and mining industries offer conspicuous examples. Furthermore, these industries require fewer and fewer employees as the years go by. Yet these industries are among the most vital in the Nation. We cannot afford to permit them to go unmanned because young workers are discouraged to enter them because of lack of prospect of early advancement. Both the need to enlist apprentices and the accelerated rate of aging might justify lowering the arbitrary age of 65 to 60 in certain industries. On the other hand, compulsory retirement at 65 may be unfair in situations where skilled workers are in short supply, and where their experience and ability are necessary in the complex world of today. Some flexibility in the age for retirement is needed if social security is to meet its total obligations to society.

Another area for improvement lies in the permitted earnings after retirement. The limitation of $1,200 per year is out of line with current requirements. Many individuals on reaching legal age for retirement do not wish to sit in a rocker for the remainder of their lives. They would be happy to embark on a newer and less exacting career, even with a lessened income. In some cases, they might prefer to continue in the old occupation, but with lessened responsibility and less pay. Their services may be essential to society and their continued activity may be for their own best interests. There is no longer a widespread condition of unemployment in practically every field of endeavor that provoked the original provision for complete retirement at 65. But the present limit of $1,200 per year eliminates the possibility of staying on and save the most puerile job. A retired man making $1,200 a year would need to spend more in holding the job than he would earn. Indefinite relaxation of the limitation is indicated.

A third area for improvement which has much public attention at the present time is health insurance. Here again it is the struggle against conservatism in the interest of democratic well-being. Medical costs, as we well know, are rising by the hour, perhaps justifiably. The savings of a lifetime are swallowed up in a single instance of illness. The skill and devotion of medical science today is well nigh unbelievable. Life itself is at the fingertips of the physician and surgeon, and life is worth any price, they say. But there should be some better way to meet the needs of both the ill and those who can serve the ill than current practices have provided. Private insurance organizations have an important and practical place in meeting those needs. But the interests of such groups should be subservient to the requirements of the medical profession for growth in skill and knowledge, and especially to the real and actual needs of those who are ill and helpless. Social security intervention in the field of health, in some practical form, is a definite demand of the age.

I presented these views to the committee when they were considering this legislation in the House, and I am presenting them again to the Senate committee which is now considering the legislation. It is my sincere hope that in their wisdom they will see fit to adopt these suggestions.

VETERANS LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to direct the attention of the Members to a speech yesterday by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DULSKI], regarding the national life insurance bill, H.R. 11405, which the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, asked to bring up by unanimous consent. It was objected to by the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH]. The gentleman from Texas was in error when he made the statement that the subcommittee handling that insurance bill had reported unanimously against it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DULSKI] was on that committee and made a statement of what he thought and knew happened. The subcommittee held the bill in abeyance. It was tabled, to be taken up at a later date. Mr. Speaker, I hope very much that the chairman of the committee will ask the Committee on Rules to grant a rule for it. Perhaps it might be brought up under suspension. The bill would provide that the national life insurance might be continued under certain conditions. It seems only just that that be done, because apparently there was a misunderstanding. The reason given for objecting to the bill I hear was because it was turned down by the subcommittee. The subcommittee never turned it down. The service organizations are very much in favor of it. I hope so much that it can pass. It performs a great service to those who let their insurance lapse.

LIMITATION OF DEBATE

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOODELL] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODELL. Mr. Speaker, this week a serious weakness in House procedures was once again demonstrated. Near the end of the debate on the Kitchin minimum wage substitute, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SMITH] wished to offer an amendment. Not being a member of the Education and Labor Committee, the gentleman was unable to offer his amendment until after a 20-minute limitation had been placed on debate. Since 20 Members wished to speak, 1 minute was allocated to each Member and that's all the time Mr. SMITH had to present his amendment. Other Members had no time to question or comment on the Smith amendment. The amendment was adopted. The next day we found it was not properly drawn and inadvertently eliminated 14 million workers from present minimum wage coverage.

When the Congress considered civil rights and the labor reform bills last year the same type of thing happened. Last week on the payola bill I was grieved to watch our respected colleague from North Carolina [Mr. JONAS] attempt to explain three important amendments in just 1 minute of total time. No one could adequately evaluate the proposals made by Mr. JONAS in such a short time. It was not fair to our distinguished colleague or to the House. Neither was it fair to Mr. SMITH to compel him to explain his important minimum wage amendment in 1 minute. It was certainly not fair to the country for the House either to reject or approve the amendment in such hasty fashion.

May I suggest that a way could be found to change our House rules to eliminate such circumstances without departing from the necessity of proceeding with expedition in this large body. As a relatively new Member, I shudder every time the House enters the toboggan slide that invariably occurs just before final House votes on important legislation.

A LESSON FOR TEACHERS

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOODELL] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODELL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the entire country was treated to a ridiculous spectacle when the Congress enacted a "mish-mash" of classified and postal pay raises over the President's veto.

Let me make it clear that I sincerely believe that many of our loyal postal workers deserved an increase. In many instances, they deserve two or three times the increase which was granted, over the President's objections, this year. Nonetheless, I state categorically that the pay raise legislation enacted this year is a shameful and expensive mess. It grants totally unjustified pay raises to many classified employees who are presently paid far above the private wage scale. And let no one mistake the fact that unjustified pay raises are enacted at the expense of the low-wage postal workers in the field. To put it simply, these postal workers find that for every $1 of needed pay raise for themselves, $100 goes to those who neither need nor deserve a raise. I have been told of one example where a husband and wife in the classified service in Washington, now receiving combined salaries of $28,000, will get a raise of $2,100. This type of inequity is repeated many times over under the new pay raise legislation.

Now, what is the lesson that we should learn from this episode? Aside from the obvious changes which should be made in our approach to Government pay scales, the whole affair should serve to shock some fuzzy thinkers who want the Federal Government to start paying teachers' salaries. Do you realize the implications of this kind of an episode if schoolteachers had been substituted for blue-shirted postal workers in the corridors and galleries of Congress? How would the Congress react to such petitioners? How would teachers respond to congressional opposition to pay raises for them? And how would teachers in Buffalo or New York City or Jamestown, N.Y., convince Congress that what is adequate pay in Biloxi, Miss., is grossly inadequate to meet the cost of living in New York State? The frustration of teachers under such circumstances would surely be reflected in the classroom. I hope that teachers, as the guardians of our children's future, will be spared such a negative political torsion upon their free views as citizens.

Let us not embark the Federal Government on any general program of Federal aid to education without clear and unmistakable justification. I respect those who think we can draw the line between Federal aid for school construction and Federal aid for teachers' salaries. Once the Federal Government moves substantially to aid school construction however, I seriously doubt that the teachers' pay bastion can long be defended against the crusading cries of national lobbyists for teachers.

The worst enemy of the teachers today is he who would commit the future of our teaching profession to the oppressive hands of the Federal Government. Federal guidance and Federal stimulus can be important to the growth and development of our schools, but Federal control will destroy the very diversity which has produced the finest educational system in the world today. I hope I never live to see the day that the fine teachers of this country must trail to Washington to present their case for pay raises.

If any teachers think they would like to do this, I urge that they walk across town to the post office and see what the postal employees think of Uncle Sam as a paymaster. Judging from the communications received in my office this year, they will not get many favorable replies from the postal workers.

CURRENCY LEGISLATION

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WESTLAND] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WESTLAND. Mr. Speaker, 3 years ago I introduced legislation which would save the taxpayers of this country more than $3 million each year. I again introduced this legislation in the form of H.R. 5691 last year. Recently, similar legislation, S. 3712, was introduced in the Senate, and I am happy to report that body has considered and passed this bill. S. 3712 has been referred to the House Committee on Banking and Currency.

This proposal would have the effect of improving the Treasury's cash position by $98.3 million, including $31.2 million in gold now held as security for outstanding gold certificates, $30 million in silver held as security for old silver certificates and $37.1 million to be received from the Federal Reserve banks to discharge their liability on account of the old large-size Federal Reserve notes.

The increase from these would enable the Treasury to decrease by corresponding amounts our outstanding interest-bearing marketable public-debt obligations with an annual saving in interest costs of $3 million to $4.5 million at current interest rates. This means that if the Congress had acted 3 years ago when I first introduced this legislation, we could have saved between $9 million and $13.5 million.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to give credit for this legislation coming before the Congress to a gentleman from Seattle, Wash., Mr. Charles E. Putnam. On January 12, 1957, he asked the Secretary of the Treasury for an analysis of outstanding paper currency carried to the books of the Treasury. From this analysis, he learned, from example, that it would take more than 1,000 years to cancel $1,143,198 in Treasury notes issued in 1890. During this time the Government would have to pay interest on the outstanding balance each year.

Mr. Putnam wrote me on May 16, 1957, and suggested I cooperate with the Treasury Department to determine the proper action to take. I talked with Treasury officials and learned that legislation was needed. It was through Mr. Putman's efforts, as you can see, that brought this situation to light.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that the Committee on Banking and Currency will favorably consider S. 3712 during the recess so that Members of this body will have the opportunity in August to take the action necessary to save the taxpayers of this country millions of dollars and at the same time improve the cash position of the Treasury.

PROGRAM TO ASSIST VISITING STUDENTS

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. WILSON] may extend his remarks at this time in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a concurrent resolution which reads as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President is hereby requested to appoint a special commission, whose members shall serve without compensation, to be comprised of Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, officers of the executive branch, and nongovernmental representatives, and whose duties shall be to determine the advisability of establishing a program administered by a private organization to assist visiting students in gaining a more complete understanding and appreciation of the significance of our national memorials, buildings, agencies, and institutions, both from the standpoint of their present significance and function, and from the standpoint of their place in our Nation's history, traditions, and principles.

During the 8 years that I have been a Member of the House of Representatives, I have viewed, as have all of my colleagues, the mass migration that begins at the first sign of spring, when students from all parts of the United States visit our Capital. I have gained the impression from speaking with many of these students and observing their actions that normal operating procedure of a visiting student is to first find himself a souvenir hat with a long colored feather in it, and then traipse from place to place and monument to monument, listening half-heartedly to brief comments by a guide or escort.

Many of these students want to know more about their Government—its traditions—its shrines—and the way it functions. But they go away with only fleeting glimpses and incomplete information on the subject.

Many in this Chamber have in the past few days viewed a film that depicted the unfortunate events which recently occurred in San Francisco when a committee of this House was subjected to a riotous, well-organized demonstration against its right to hold hearings. Included in the demonstrators were hundreds of college students who I am sure had no realization that they were being duped by Communist strategists. It is my contention, Mr. Speaker, that a little more understanding of our Government and subsequently more pride in this great country of ours would have prevented this demonstration by these students.

It is certainly not my intent at this time to infer in the slightest degree that these young people are not loyal Americans and responsible individuals. It is my intent to point out to this body that we can perform a substantial service to our country by providing an atmosphere that will allow them to gain an insight into all of the things that have made this country what it is today. My resolution would provide that medium.

DISPLAY OF FLAGS AT THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. WILSON] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, one of the most beautiful sights in Washington, in my opinion, is the display of 50 American flags encircling the base of the Washington Monument. On a breezy day, the 50 flags, one for each State, rippling in unison, are enough to make every American proud of his country and of his flag—and of the principles the red, white, and blue banners represent.

On July 4, the new 50-star flag becomes official and will be flown over Independence Hall in Philadelphia, over Fort McHenry, over our Capitol, over the Tomb of the Unknown Soldiers, and over shrines and monuments throughout the 50 States and around the world.

Mr. Speaker, it seems logical to me that some appropriate ceremony be made of the daily raising and lowering of the 50 flags surrounding the Washington Monument. Crowds today gather for similar ceremonies at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldiers and at the Marine's Iwo Jima Memorial nearby.

For that reason I have introduced a joint resolution that reads as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of Defense, after consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, shall arrange for appropriate ceremonies to be conducted in connection with the daily raising and lowering of the flags of the United States surrounding the Washington Monument in the District of Columbia, and shall assign contingents from the Armed Forces to conduct such ceremonies.

Under present circumstances, no ceremony is performed at the time the flags are raised and lowered. An employee of the Interior Department has the chore.

It seems appropriate to perform this task proudly and with a flourish. I can visualize a squad of soldiers, marines, sailors, or airmen smartly lowering the flags—accompanied by bugles and drums, perhaps with the playing of "Taps."

Visitors would gather on the broad grass-covered slopes around the monument to watch this ceremony—and every American would benefit from the feeling of national pride that would accompany such action.

I hope my colleagues will take speedy action on this legislation this year. The Defense Department can assign the responsibility to the different military departments on a rotating basis. The cost would be small—the results great in national patriotism and interest.

THE "WEEK IN WASHINGTON" PROGRAM

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HECHLER] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HECHLER. Mr. Speaker, coinciding with the recess of Congress today is the close of the second summer program which I conduct annually for high school students in my home district—West Virginia's Fourth Congressional District, along the industrially expanding Ohio River Valley.

The last of the twenty-three 11th-grade students, each of whom spent a week working in my office this summer, departed for home this morning. I am genuinely sorry that this program has come to an end for 1960. I am proud of this program and its great success is largely due to the keen students who make it so.

Coming into contact with these eager, inquisitive, intelligent young people is a really inspiring experience. If every Member of this House could share with me the thrill of working with them, I am sure that none would have any further doubts about the future of America's youth and the safety of our Nation in the hands of the next generation.

I would like to share with my colleagues here a brief description of what this program is, how it is operated, and some observations about it.

I decided at the start to confine the program to high school juniors. This has the advantage of bringing students to Washington at an age when they are eager to learn. It also insures that they will return to their schools next year to share their experiences and inspire their fellow students.

My staff and I begin preparing for the summer event as early as February. Application forms for all 11th-grade students in the district are printed and mailed to each school, and teachers and principals are advised about the contest. Many schools and teachers use the entry forms as the basis of a class assignment in English or social studies. However, independent applications outside of class groups are encouraged.

Students write a compact, one-page essay on the following subject: "Why I Would Like To Work in a Congressman's Office." Their application also includes a statement of academic and extracurricular activities and future career interests.

When the contest deadline arrives in mid-April, the exciting process of selecting the winners begins. One of the pillars of strength of this program is that the winners are chosen exclusively on the basis of merit without reference to political affiliation.

This year, I was very fortunate that the judges consisted of four very able and distinguished Members of the Congress, two from each House and two from each party. These were the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. MCGEE], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCHWENGEL], and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BRADEMAS]. These fine gentlemen, all with excellent training by virtue of both experience and academic background, kindly consented to judge the many entries which had poured into my office.

They did a really remarkable job in selecting the winners, 23 in all, from the 10 counties in my district plus two from the largest city in my district, Huntington. One boy and one girl were selected from each of these 11 jurisdictions, and my experience these past few weeks with such an outstanding group of winners is ample evidence that the judges did a superb job of selection. I hereby wish to thank them publicly, as I already have done privately.

As soon as the winners were selected, Paul Crabtree of my staff traveled throughout the district to notify the winners and the principals of their schools. He also briefed the young students on the nature of their work in Washington.

With the close of school in late May and early June, the winners began to arrive in Washington, coming in groups of three or four, as a general rule, each week. Last year we had only two students per week, but because of the early recess this year it was necessary to double up in order to give all the students an opportunity to be here prior to July.

It is difficult to describe the interest these young people have in the learning process, and the enthusiasm with which they greet the opportunity to learn more about our Government and how it functions. With almost no exceptions, the students arrive full of plans about things they want to see, and processes they wish to observe—and literally hundreds of questions.

The emphasis during the entire week is on work, education and observation. We have attempted to set up an agenda which distributes their time about equally between actually performing useful work in the office, visiting and observing various governmental bodies—particularly the House, Senate and its committees—in action, meeting and interviewing Government officials, and sightseeing and evening entertainment. Work in the congressional office is stressed, however, and a period of no more than 2 or 3 hours in the 14-hour schedule each day is generally set aside for purely tourist activities.

In the office, these students quickly and alertly mastered the concept of the general routine and flow of work. By week's end, many of them were able to handle routine correspondence like veteran Capitol Hill staff employees. They also quickly oriented themselves to the Capitol and its environs and were invaluable aids in running errands, guiding constituents who visit our office, answering the telephone, running the mimeograph machine, compiling lists, addressing, and stuffing envelopes, and performing other useful chores.

In interview sessions, of which there were at least two or three each week, the youngsters quickly learned the press-conference technique of drawing out the subject on his principal field of interest and tossing the redhot questions into the debate.

These interviews were among the most stimulating activities of the students, and the catalyst that made them so was the students' own vigor and enthusiasm.

Among the Senators and Members of the House and other officials who either met or were interviewed by these students were you, Mr. Speaker, the Vice President, Senators GORDON ALLOTT, ROBERT C. BYRD, JOHN SHERMAN COOPER, EVERETT DIRKSEN, BARRY GOLDWATER, HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, HENRY M. JACKSON, FRANK J. LAUSCHE, GALE MCGEE, MIKE MANSFIELD, A. S. MIKE MONRONEY, EDMUND S. MUSKIE, JENNINGS RANDOLPH, GEORGE SMATHERS, JOHN J. SPARKMAN, ALEXANDER WILEY, HARRISON WILLIAMS, JR., and RALPH YARBOROUGH, and Representatives CLEVELAND M. BAILEY, HALE BOGGS, RICHARD BOLLING, CHESTER BOWLES, JOHN BRADEMAS, CLARENCE BROWN, JEFFREY COHELAN, HENRY ALDOUS DIXON, GERALD T. FLYNN, JAMES G. FULTON, CHARLES A. HALLECK, DENVER D. HARGIS, AUGUST JOHANSEN, BYRON L.

JOHNSON, ROBERT W. KASTENMEIER, ELIZABETH KEE, DAVID S. KING, JOHN V. LINDSAY, JOHN W. MCCORMACK, CLEM MILLER, WILBUR D. MILLS, WALTER H. MOELLER, STANLEY A. PROKOP, JAMES ROOSEVELT, FRED SCHWENGEL, JOHN M. SLACK, JR., SAMUEL S. STRATTON, HARLEY O. STAGGERS, JAMES VAN ZANDT, and BASIL WHITENER.

In addition, the students met many officials of the Congress and from the executive branch, including Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare Arthur Flemming, as well as several members of the Washington press corps and other Capitol Hill personalities.

However, the facet of their tour which really seemed to interest them most was the proceedings of the House and Senate. You cannot imagine, Mr. Speaker, how thrilling the most mundane and ordinary of our duties must appear through the eyes of an intelligent young person. I can well remember the night when a group of five of our girls almost missed an outdoor musical program at Carter Barron Amphitheater because they had stolen away from the office late in the afternoon to listen in on another period of debate in the House Chamber. The students would recount to me each day a blow-by-blow account of their observations, asking for my comments on it.

We had not only these fine high school students in the office. There were also students from the University of North Carolina, Stephens College, West Virginia University, St. Albans School, Trinity College, as well as Steve Johnson, a law student at Georgetown University. During one hectic but thoroughly enjoyable week we had a total of 20 persons crowded into the 2 rooms of my office suite.

During 1959, when first I conducted this program, I had to bear the bulk of the cost myself. This year, however, through the cooperation and generosity of eight forward-minded industries in the Ohio Valley, contributions were made to cosponsor the trips for several of the students, and enabled the program to become even more successful than in 1959. These contributions were governed and supervised by the American Political Science Association, and I owe them a debt of thanks, as well as a huge expression of gratitude to the industries—Schurman Construction Co., of Huntington, Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Co., Celanese Chemicals Co., Vanadium Corp. of America, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway, Standard Ultramarine Co., and one anonymous cosponsor.

Through their aid, we were able to provide better coordinated housing for the students, more events and points of interest to visit, and generally better accommodations. However, the greatest credit for the success of this program belongs not to me, nor to my staff, nor to anyone else but the students themselves.

The interest and desire of the students to learn inspired and impressed every one of us who came into contact with them. I want the RECORD to show their names, for it was they more than anyone else who made the "1960 Week in Washington" program the exciting, memorable event that it was:

Mary Margaret Loemker, of Huntington; Brenda Courts, of Milton; Mary Lee Holland, of Ripley; Nadia Tabor of Yawkey; Natalie Waugh, of Point Pleasant; Betty Jo Winland, of St. Marys; Shirley Wall, of Winfield; Roylene Alberts, of Spencer; Linda Woodburn, of Alma; Joyce Lycan, of Fort Gay; Nancy Huggins, of Williamstown; Peter Bob Calhoun, of Huntington; Michael Sands Smith of Barboursville; Christopher Borrie, of Ravenswood; Jimmy Lee Robinson, of Ranger; Jerry Lawson, of Point Pleasant; John Burton Adkins and Tom Young, of St. Marys; D. Edward Bowman, of Winfield; Brice Abbott, of Walton; Darrell Moeck, of Sistersville; Max Belcher, of Wayne; Robert C. Finch, of Parkersburg.

Mr. Speaker, if I do nothing else in this Congress, I am proud of the contribution which this program has made toward inspiring young people to take an increasing interest in our great democracy. Young people are the greatest natural resource which West Virginia and the Nation possess. An investment in their education is the soundest investment anyone can make in the future security of our Nation.

PROGRAM FOR BALANCE OF THE DAY AND NEXT WEEK

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I take this time for the purpose of inquiring of the majority leader as to the program for the balance of the day and for next week.

Mr. MCCORMACK. We will have to adjourn over until Monday, and it is important that the Members be here. I cannot guarantee, but some important matters might come up. There might be some suspensions.

Mr. HALLECK. Can the gentleman tell us what suspensions we might anticipate on Monday?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Well, one is the equal time bill, and there may be something in connection with sugar legislation. I am unable to state.

Mr. HALLECK. I express the hope that we may have something in connection with sugar legislation.

Mr. MCCORMACK. I thoroughly agree.

Mr. HALLECK. And the other suspension is the one I understand the gentleman from Arkansas talked about earlier, the equal time bill.

Mr. MCCORMACK. And, of course, Monday is Consent Calendar day.

Mr. HALLECK. I would suggest to the gentleman, at least as far as I am concerned, having not anticipated that the Consent Calendar would be called on Monday——

Mr. MCCORMACK. I might say neither did I.

Mr. HALLECK. I doubt whether the objectors on our side would have the information about the bills that might be on the Consent Calendar that would be necessary for them to have if they were to intelligently act on the bills that might come up.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Ordinarily I am in a position where I can answer any question in that regard, because I anticipate and prepare the program, and usually consult with my friend from Indiana, as he knows.

Mr. HALLECK. I understand that.

Mr. MCCORMACK. I might make an inquiry, not a parliamentary inquiry but to inquire of the Speaker as to whether or not we are going to have any further recess this evening.

The SPEAKER. For a short while, I hope.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 13 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 2 o'clock and 35 minutes, a.m.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. McGown, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 5436. An act to provide for a register in the Department of Commerce in which shall be listed the names of certain persons who have had their motor vehicle operator's licenses revoked.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 12311. An act to extend for 1 year the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended.

The message also announced that the Senate insists on its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. LONG of Louisiana, Mr. ANDERSON, and Mr. BENNETT to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 299. An act for the relief of Dalworth C. Ebner and John Wessels; and

S. 3727. An act to authorize the bonding of persons engaging in the home improvement business, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate recedes from its amendments numbered 7, 8, 9, 14, and 17 to the bill (H.R. 12740) entitled "An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes."

The message further announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to Senate amendment No. 15 to the above-entitled bill.

SUGAR ACT OF 1948

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H.R. 12311) to extend for 1 year the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. BASS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like for the gentleman from North Carolina to advise the House what the major changes are in the Senate bill from the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. COOLEY. Well, I am sorry that I cannot give you accurate information.

Mr. BASS of Tennessee. The major changes.

Mr. COOLEY. I have not seen the bill, unfortunately, but I do understand that they have stricken out the section which we provided in our bill which would offer some hope to new areas and to new growers; that they have also stricken out the calendar year 1961, which would, under ordinary circumstances, require the Congress to rewrite the sugar bill at the short term in August; that they have also in line 15 on page 5 stricken out the word "may" in the sentence which reads "The balance, including any unfilled balances from allocations already provided shall be allocated to or purchased from foreign countries having quotas under section 202 (c)." The Senate proposes to strike the word "shall" and insert the word "may." I am sure that I do not have all of the Senate amendments before me, but I know that they have made some other changes which are very inconsequential, I think.

Mr. BASS of Tennessee. I would like to say to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture that I hope when the conferees get together he will insist on maintaining the word "shall" which was in the House bill, which I think is the key to the directions of the House Committee on Agriculture and also to the vote in the House.

Mr. COOLEY. I think I can say to my friend that the House conferees will insist on the position taken by the House on all phases of the bill passed by the House. I am not sure that we can bring back exactly what the gentleman from Tennessee wants.

Mr. BASS of Tennessee. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I personally hope that the words "shall be allocated" are not retained. The Senate, in effect, substituted for these words "may be purchased from." Unless this is done, if the President exercises the powers granted to him to cut Cuba, he would have to make a quota allocation to the various countries. Then if things straightened out in Cuba, certainly our desire will be to assist Cuba. We would be reluctant to take quotas away from the countries to which they had been allocated when the Cuban quota was cut. How are you going to satisfy both demands?

Mr. COOLEY. If the gentleman will permit me to say so, in an effort to compose differences in our committee—Secretary Dillon and his associates testifying—I suggested that we eliminate the word "shall" and insert the word "may"; but, unfortunately, our committee unanimously overruled me and retained the word "shall." Personally, I do not attach too much importance to the change, except that I do know that it is fraught with great danger if we exercise the powers unwisely. But it seems to me that the gentleman who is now addressing the House would be willing to trust his own President in the exercise of that power if the Congress is willing to grant the President that power.

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. You say that you are willing to trust the President; but the House language would direct him to allocate these quotas, and the language of the Senate would change this to say that it might be purchased without allocation.

Mr. COOLEY. The differences will have to be composed in conference.

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. It is unfortunate that we could not have had House hearings earlier in the session and worked this out in a proper manner and taken timely and considered action.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, it seems to me, from the brief words already said here tonight, that there certainly are still very difficult and complicated questions which the conference will have to work on and then come back and explain to the House. It is now 20 minutes to 3. I have a rather horrifying recollection of what happened in this House last Thursday when we tried to pass legislation of a technical nature without full consideration of it. This particular legislation could easily bring about an international situation that might mean war; and for us at this hour of the night to pass on this legislation without a thorough understanding would seem to me to be a very questionable procedure. While I certainly will not object to going to conference, I would hope that the leadership of the House will not act unseemingly in this very important matter; at least, we could come back here Monday and give some further consideration to the matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. COOLEY, POAGE, ALBERT, THOMPSON of Texas, HOEVEN, BELCHER, and MCINTIRE.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE PRESS

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unamious consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday of this week the Honorable GEORGE M. RHODES, distinguished member of our Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, from the great Keystone State of Pennsylvania, addressed the House and brought to the attention of the Members of Congress additional facts as to pressure tactics used by certain publications and the reasons for the recent attacks on the Members of Congress.

I wish to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his courage in documenting the facts from his own experience, exposing the kind of tactics used on him because he had proposed a limitation of mail subsidy on any one publication. The gentleman from Pennsylvania in his very able and outstanding speech supplements and amplifies what I endeavored to explain in my speech last week of what was involved in the kind and type of publicity by Life magazine and Knight newspapers. Such retaliation which the gentleman has again pointed out should cause concern because it amounts to intimidation of a public official for proposing legislation which he honestly and sincerely believes to be right.

Mr. Speaker, I realize full well that to criticize any segment of the press touches a most sensitive spot. I realize full well the importance of maintaining the freedom of speech and of the press as provided by the Constitution. I am firmly convinced that this was originally intended to be and is now one of the basic fundamentals of our democracy.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I fully realize the power of the press. It should have great influence in the lives of our people. Because of this power and influence, the press has a tremendous responsibility to be fair, honest, and objective, and I am proud as I know you are that most of the press of this Nation strives diligently to live up to its responsibility.

The press should investigate and report its findings with its objective news or wrongdoings, whether it is a public official or private individual, whether it is a matter of investigation or legislation.

I am thankful that a free or objective press of this country assumes such duty and responsibility.

It does not mean, however, that some prejudiced or biased newspaper or reporter is given the right to so slant a report to make it appear that some act was a terrible offense when it was not a fact or to include and show a picture of an official in connection with the report which is grossly in error and has nothing to do with it whatsoever. Neither does it give the right to smear with ridiculous charges in retaliation of exposing or proposing something which adversely affects the particular publication or newspaper.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RHODES] has served in this Congress for some time. He has distinguished himself as a Member of this great body. He is a hard worker and represents his district well, as, indeed, his State and our Nation. We do not agree on every question, but there is no one for whom I have greater respect and admiration. His district is fortunate to have the gentleman to represent it and we are fortunate to have him as a member of our great and distinguished Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 43 minutes a.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 5:39 a.m.

SUGAR ACT OF 1948

Mr. COOLEY submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 12311) to extend for 1 year the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2090)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12311) to extend for one year the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 10, and 12.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 9, 11, and 13; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That section 412 of the Sugar Act of 1948 (relating to termination of the powers of the Secretary under the Act) is amended (1) by striking out 'December 31, 1960' and inserting in lieu thereof 'March 31, 1961', (2) by inserting ', until March 31, 1961,' after 'power', and (3) by striking out 'the crop year 1960 and previous crop years' and inserting in lieu thereof 'any crop year beginning prior to March 31, 1961'"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. Sections 4501(c) and 6412(d) (relating to the termination and refund of taxes on sugar) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 are amended by striking out 'June 30, 1961' in each place it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof 'September 30, 1961'"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "SEC. 3."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment and on page 2, line 20, of the House bill strike out "December 31, 1961" and insert in lieu thereof "March 31, 1961"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert "and for the three-month period ending March 31, 1961"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "SEC. 4"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12311) to extend for 1 year the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The amendments made by the Senate had the effect of making two major changes in the House bill:

1. They limited the effect of the bill to the calendar year 1960, only; and

2. They changed from mandatory to permissive the directions contained in subparagraphs (i), (ii), and (iii) for foreign distribution of any reductions in Cuban quotas made pursuant to the bill.

The effect of the agreement reached by the conferees and embodied in the accompanying conference report—

1. Extend the Sugar Act and the authority conferred on the President by this bill through March 31, 1961.

2. Retain the mandatory character of the distribution to foreign countries of the House bill but provide that such distribution shall be by purchases from, rather than allocations to, such countries.

It is the intention of the conferees that in establishing quotas for the period January 1, 1961, through March 31, 1961, the Secretary of Agriculture will establish a quota for each area or country of one-fourth the quota which each country or area would have received had the act been extended in its present terms for 1 calendar year.

As part of the understanding reached by the conferees, it was agreed that the conferees on the part of the House would undertake to pass a sugar bill and transmit same to the Senate on the earliest possible date after the reconvening of the House in August.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H.R. 12311) to extend for 1 year the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and it is not my intention to object, but I would like to bring up a few matters in connection with this issue because of the grave implications that exist at this time and because we have not really had adequate time to go over the report or study the details that are going to be presented to us. I think in the field of economics we might readily admit here on the floor that we actually do need Cuban sugar. Of course, recognizing the things that have gone wrong in Cuba and the things that Castro and his administration have done that are not in line with our way of thinking, I sometimes wonder if there were not things that we might have done to help prevent this situation, but that is over with. What I am now concerned about is that we should not even to a minor degree permit a Russian-Hungarian situation or a comparable one to develop between us and Cuba. I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture if he believes that there is much chance that anything in this legislation could encourage or promote such a development.

Mr. COOLEY. I might say to my friend, as I said on the floor of the House during the debate on the bill, that I very reluctantly agreed to grant the President the power which is provided in this bill. I think that he should proceed with care and caution and he should exercise the power well and wisely.

I think that this power does have far-reaching implications. It could precipitate matters of great importance far beyond the allocation of sugar, but we must realize that the President of the United States handles the foreign policy of our Nation. He has asked for this power. He has assured us through the Secretary of State that it will be well and wisely used; that it will not be used in a way which will be calculated to provoke violence in any part of Cuba or elsewhere. I appreciate what the gentleman has said with reference to the source of supply. Cuba has been a reliable source of supply for American sugar for many years.

We have had a sugar program in operation for approximately 25 years. Cuba has participated in that program and has been faithful to its allocations.

Cuba has provided sugar for our markets in times of war when world market prices were substantially above our own domestic prices.

I think the sugar program is vital, as I said in the debate, not only to the domestic producer, but also to domestic consumers. I said also in the debate that our committee, realizing that it does have a very great responsibility in this area, will assure the Members of the House that we will give the necessary time and attention to this important measure. We will study it thoroughly. If it takes economists to assist us we will arrange to have that proper assistance and we will try to bring back to the House early in the next session another sugar bill which I hope will be just as acceptable as the sugar bill was when we presented it to the House on Thursday.

Mr. MEYER. I thank the gentleman. I would judge from his very fine answer that in a sense he is assuring us that he believes that this legislation will not help to lead to hasty action that we may regret. I would like to ask him about the matter of our good relationships in Latin America because economic pressure by us on Cuba might raise the old charge of economic imperialism against us in the minds of our good neighbors to the south.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MOTIONS TO SUSPEND THE RULES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that motions to suspend the rules, in order on August 15, be transferred to Monday, August 22.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT RESOLUTION

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate Concurrent Resolution 112 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses shall adjourn on Saturday, July 2, 1960, and that when they adjourn on said day they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Monday, August 8, 1960.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK: Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert: "That when the two Houses shall adjourn on Sunday, July 3, 1960, the Senate shall stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Monday, August 8, 1960, and the House of Representatives shall stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Monday, August 15, 1960."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HALLECK. We have just adopted the conference report on the sugar bill. I had made it known that I would not vote for a recess unless the sugar bill was enacted. My parliamentary inquiry is this: What assurance do we have at this point that the conference report that has just been adopted by the House of Representatives will be adopted by the other body, and hence that a sugar bill will be enacted into law subject to the approval of the President?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can only state that all of the members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate signed the conference report, and he assumes, therefore, that they would be able to get the Senate to accept the conference report.

Mr. HALLECK. A further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Would it be in order or possible for the vote on the pending motion of the majority leader to be deferred until action is had in the other body on the conference report?

The SPEAKER. No. The resolution is now pending before the House, and the previous question has been moved. It has not been adopted.

Mr. COOLEY. I would like to say to the minority leader that what the Speaker has said of course is true and accurate, that all the conferees signed and agreed to the report. I have not had a chance to say to the House that this report is somewhat of a compromise. The Senate took the position that at the short session we would have in August, when we returned from the conventions, the House should then and there attempt to rewrite a sugar bill opening up the quota provisions and having extensive hearings. The House conferees held to the idea it would not be wise for us to attempt so large a task in so short a session, in August when Members on both sides would be engaging in their campaigns. So as a compromise the Senate agreed that we would have January, February, and March of the next session within which to prepare and present a sugar bill. The House conferees assured the Senate conferees that we would do our best to present a well-considered sugar bill to the House within that 90-day period.

We further assured them that at the August session we would send another sugar bill to the Senate, maybe substantially the same bill we passed unanimously in the House on Thursday, but perhaps adding some other countries like Guatemala and some other sugar-producing areas, thereby originating legislation in the House which would enable them in the Senate to start hearings officially on legislation pertaining to sugar. So I think everything indicates that the Senate would accept the conference report.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry: In view of the fact that the resolution now before us has been amended after it came from the other body, would that amendment require affirmative action in the other body before it could be adopted?

The SPEAKER. The Senate must concur in the House amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I suggest that the reasonable assumption is that the adjournment resolution would not be acted on in the other body until the conference report had been acted on.

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BECKER. We understand we are going to vote on a motion to recess this House until August 8 or 15. Meanwhile we have no assurance that the Senate will adopt the conference report that we have adopted tonight.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BECKER. What will happen if it is not adopted?

The SPEAKER. We will stay in session until they do adopt it, and then the resolution will be acted upon.

Mr. GROSS. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. On the previous question?

Mr. GROSS. No.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The title was amended to read: "Concurrent resolution providing for the adjournment of the Senate from July 3, 1960, to August 8, 1960, and the adjournment of the House from July 3, 1960, to August 15, 1960."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTERIM AUTHORITY TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution—House Concurrent Resolution 712—and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That notwithstanding the adjournment of the two Houses until August the 8th and 15th, 1960, the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate be, and they are hereby, authorized to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and found truly enrolled.

The resolution was agreed to.

INTERIM AUTHORITY TO CLERK TO RECEIVE MESSAGES FROM SENATE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House until August 15, 1960, the Clerk be authorized to receive messages from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

INTERIM AUTHORITY TO SPEAKER TO ACCEPT RESIGNATIONS, ETC.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House until August 15, 1960, the Speaker be authorized to accept resignations and to appoint commissions, boards, and committees authorized by law or by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

INTERIM AUTHORITY TO CLERK TO PRINT DOCUMENTS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that reports filed with the Clerk following the adjournment of the House until August 15, 1960, by committees authorized by the House to conduct investigations, may be printed by the Clerk as reports of the 86th Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House until August 15, 1960, all Members of the House shall have the privilege to extend and revise their own remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on more than one subject, if they so desire, and also to include therein such short quotations as may be necessary to explain or complete such extension of remarks, but this order shall not apply to any subject matter which may have occurred or to any speech delivered subsequent to the adjournment of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

REPORTS OF THE COMPTROLLER GENERAL MADE TO CONGRESS DURING RECESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution—House Resolution 599—and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the reports of the Comptroller General of the United States made to the Congress pursuant to the Governmnt Corporation Control Act (31 U.S.C. 841 et seq.), during the recesses of the Eighty-sixth Congress, shall be printed during such recesses as House documents of the second session of the Eighty-sixth Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

TENTATIVE RÉSUMÉ OF APPROPRIATIONS, 86TH CONGRESS, 2D SESSION

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include statistics in reference to the appropriation bills for this session of the Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in conformity with the customary session-end procedure, I include statistical tabulations and related data summarizing the actions to date by the 2d session of the 86th Congress on the appropriation bills. The data is necessarily tentative and incomplete because several bills will not be finally disposed of until after the impending recess.

And the tabulation by bills is necessarily limited to those processed by the Committee on Appropriations through the annual appropriations process and does not therefore reflect action on those parts of the President's budget recommendations disposed of through revenue bills or the "back door" appropriation bills processed outside regular appropriation channels. Disposition of all these propositions and executive revision of revenue collection and disbursement estimates—all these factors will join with action on the regular appropriation bills to influence the final Treasury position and the January budget prediction of a $4.2 billion surplus for the fiscal year 1961 which began yesterday.

Authoritative data as to disposition of the record-breaking 1961 budget of the President cannot be assembled until after final adjournment.

ACTION IN APPROPRIATION BILLS, SECOND SESSION

Mr. Speaker, the House has processed 18 bills during the session. We have no more bills to report. Budget estimates of appropriations submitted to the House by the President in this session, and considered in bills from the Committee on Appropriations, totaled $73,546,694,390. These totals, Mr. Speaker, do not include the permanent appropriations recurring automatically under existing law without necessity of annual congressional action; the January budget estimate for these totaled $10,166,000,000 of which $9,500,000,000 was estimated for interest on our monstrous public debt. These latter amounts are likewise subject to some revision in the next several weeks based on information not presently available.

The Committee on Appropriations reduced the President's request for appropriations by $2,499,217,408, recommending a total of $71,047,476,982. With one major and one minor exception, every bill reported was below what the President asked us to appropriate in his record breaking budget. The defense bill, reported before Khrushchev wrecked the summit meeting, was only nominally above the budget. But the Congress has developed a special addiction to excessive appropriations in the Labor-HEW bill in consequence of which it was reported out nearly $184 million above the President's suggestions.

Contrary to committee recommendations, the House added back a total of $208,876,500, so the bills went to the Senate at an aggregate of $71,256,353,482—the substantial amount of $2,290,340,908 below the budget estimates considered on this side of the Capitol.

The Senate has passed 16 of the 18 bills. The mutual security bill is in Senate committee and the public works bill is on the Senate floor. Two bills are in conference—Labor-HEW and State-Justice-Judiciary. With disposition of the supplemental bill tonight, four bills remain to be concluded next month.

In the 16 bills adopted, the Senate, characteristically, went above the House totals by $3,067,598,842 and above the corresponding budget estimates by $1,341,206,760. They wanted $66,819,403,339 in those bills.

With the exception of some of the defense items and possibly a scattered handful of others, every Senate addition could have been dispensed with.

But at the conference tables, the other body was so insistent that we were compelled to yield substantial amounts beyond the House position. In classic tradition the Senate continues to violate the constitutional intent sponsored by Madison who insisted the Senate should participate in the appropriations process so as to act as a brake on an impulsive and extravagant House. But the situation operates in the reverse. They have sought by every means to preempt the exclusive appropriations prerogatives conferred on the House by the Constitution. They have never willingly conceded that the framers of the constitutional provisions were somewhat explicit about the matter, and in consequence they not only push the regular appropriation totals sky-high but as the House witnessed last year and the year before, they originated some 12 Treasury back door raiding measures totaling about $10 billion.

But under characteristic obduracy of the other side, Mr. Speaker, the 14 bills in final form as sent to the President total $60,720,613,628, a net decrease of $4,330,575 below corresponding budget requests. And the final totals will, I am now certain, be below the President's budget requests handled in the regular appropriations process. The Senate has hiked the Labor-HEW bill $465 million above the budget. We will bring that down considerably though not enough. This will, I feel certain, be more than offset by actions on the other bills, especially the foreign aid bill.

The outstanding item on the list of bills sent to the President is the $661 million increase in the defense bill. It is too high because, like the President's budget and past bills, it appropriates for obsolete and wasteful weapons and defense concepts. But it was also necessarily revised in some particulars in light of the situation following Khrushchev's wrecking of the summit conference. Nearly every other bill sent down is below the President's asking price.

So, Mr. Speaker, while we cannot for some weeks yet determine with precision the status of the budget because of the uncertainties involved, there are some salient statistics and data about which there are no uncertainties.

RECORDING-BREAKING BUDGETS

The law requires the President to make and submit the budget recommendations both as to taxes and appropriations. All fiscal recommendations start with the President. He makes the budget. Congress does not. It includes only what he urges, what he wants, what in his judgment is necessary. He is in complete command. He is the sole judge. He is by law at complete liberty—in fact, he is by law dutybound—to recommend cuts in appropriations of any magnitude he feels warranted and revisions of basic legislation to correspond. He is dutybound to recommend any charges in tax rates he believes justified—either up or down.

They do not—I repeat, they do not—have to recommend more and more spending—as in the current fiscal year 1961 budget and past budgets, nearly every one of which exceeded previous estimates. The pending budget is a recordbreaker. It proposed to take in $84 billion—the largest total ever requested, in war or peace.

They do not have to urge extension of war tax rates in time of peace—as in the 1961 budget and in every past budget from the administration. That one recommendation alone accounts for much of the January budget surplus estimate—and I emphasize it is only an estimate—of $4.2 billion.

When the Clerk read the President's budget message to the House last January, it was immediately apparent that the goals announced did not correspond to some features of the budget attached. And it disclosed beyond all challenge that this administration, after 8 years in office, has not and could not at such late date accomplish a single one of the laudable fiscal objectives promised in the 1952 and 1956 campaigns.

The January message urged restraint but in the same pages proposed to spend $1.4 billion more in 1961 than in 1960. Furthermore, the President had declared war on excessive spending. He was quoted this way:

I think every place we are spending too much money. * * * We must start right from the biggest and go right down to the smallest.

He decried what he termed "loose handling of our fiscal affairs." But the last budget submitted shortly thereafter proposed to spend more. And it also proposed increased appropriations, both large and small.

But, Mr. Speaker, so that there will be no doubt that the messages and pronouncements about economy and restraint on the one hand, and the budget estimates on the other hand, go in opposite directions, I will submit several sets of official figures. They need little or no explanation. They speak for themselves.

APPROPRIATION INCREASES REQUESTED BY THE PRESIDENT

Although administered by the present administration, the 1954 budget was prepared by the previous administration. The fiscal 1955 budget, submitted in January 1954, was the first budget prepared and submitted by the present administration. From that budget to this budget, they have urged higher and higher appropriations each year as the following published figures on Presidential budget estimates considered in the appropriation bills disclose:

	President's budget estimates
83d, 2d (fiscal 1955 and prior)	$57,422,327,386
84th, 1st (fiscal 1956 and prior)	62,030,092,195
84th, 2d (fiscal 1957 and prior)	68,587,724,820
85th, 1st (fiscal 1958 and prior)	73,113,555,340
85th, 2d (fiscal 1959 and prior)	81,737,060,999
86th, 1st (fiscal 1960 and prior)	83,452,687,259
86th, 2d (fiscal 1961 and prior)	[1] 83,830,041,759

[1] Includes $10,166,000,000 January budget estimate for permanent appropriations, which is subject to some later revision.

Mr. Speaker, these are significant and revealing figures. And they are staggering. Imagine asking appropriations more than $26 billion above those proposed in their first budget. It is incredible. And it is billions away from repeated pledges and promises.

SPENDING INCREASES

The regular appropriation bills no longer fully disclose what goes out of the Treasury. We now have the back-door bills and every other conceivable gimmick to get money out of the Treasury to avoid passing the acid test of annual appropriations review. The more fully informative and all-inclusive index to the trends are the amounts disbursed—whether from front-door, back-door, side-door, or trap-door appropriations. The ever-increasing amounts expended during the present administration are shocking. And the official Treasury figures are conclusive in the matter. Take the figures from July 1, 1953, the beginning of the fiscal year 1954, when they assumed full control of collecting and spending. Here they are, inescapable:

	Rounded amounts
Fiscal 1954 (from July 1953)	$67,800,000,000
Fiscal 1955	64,600,000,000
Fiscal 1956	66,500,000,000
Fiscal 1957	69,400,000,000
Fiscal 1958	71,900,000,000
Fiscal 1959	80,700,000,000
Fiscal 1960 (this is the estimate in 1961 budget; subject to revision)	[1] 78,400,000,000
Fiscal 1961 (this is the January estimate; subject to revision)	[1] 79,800,000,000

[1] The President's estimates; subject to revision, but these are his proposals. And for simplicity, expenditures from highway trust fund beginning with 1957 are excluded.

Mr. Speaker, can there be any dispute but that these figures unerringly disclose failure to deliver on the promise of a $60 billion budget? Can they contend that these figures of what they spent bear any resemblance to promised retrenchment?

DEFENSE AND NONDEFENSE SPENDING

There is the general tendency to explain these steadily increasing requests and phenomenal spending budgets as required by the necessities of national security and defense. But contrary to the general impression, the preponderance of increased spending is in the nondefense items, not the defense budgets. The following serves to prove the fact that nondefense items are the genesis of the matter:

[In billions of dollars]

	Major national security	All other	Total
Fiscal 1954	46.9	20.9	67.8
Fiscal 1955	40.6	24.0	64.6
Fiscal 1956	40.6	25.9	66.5
Fiscal 1957	43.3	26.1	69.4
Fiscal 1958	44.1	27.8	71.9
Fiscal 1959	46.4	34.3	80.7
Estimates in 1961 budget (subject to revision):
Fiscal 1960 (estimated)	45.6	32.8	78.4
Fiscal 1961 (estimated)	45.6	34.2	79.8

SEVEN-YEAR COMPARISONS

Mr. Speaker, it is timely to compare the condition of Treasury finances as administered in the last 14 years, 7 under the present administration—fiscal 1954 through fiscal 1960—and the immediately preceding 7 years—fiscal 1947 through fiscal 1953. The figures are official and, except for fiscal 1960, they are final; the 1960 figures are tentative and subject to slight revision, but close enough to the mark to suffice. In 3 of the 7 years under the previous administration, we were at war in Korea.

The present administration has taken more taxes from the people.

The present administration has spent more of the people's funds; they have spent everything they took in and borrowed billions besides and spent that.

The present administration has operated in the red. They have not lived within income.

The present administration has raised the public debt to the highest point in the history of the Nation.

In consequence, the cost of living reaches a new record high nearly every 30 days.

These official figures are submitted in substantiation:

7-year comparative figures on income spending, deficits or surpluses, and debt changes

[In billions or dollars]

7-year tax rate, net budget receipts:
Under present administration (fiscals 1954–60)	480.2
Under previous administration (fiscals 1947–53)	329.3
Present administration over previous	+150.9
7-year outgo, net budget expenditures:
Under present administration (fiscals 1954–60)	499.3
Under previous administration (fiscals 1947–53)	335.0
Present administration over previous	+164.3
7-year deficits:
Under present administration (fiscals 1954–60, all peacetime years)	−19.1
Under previous administration (fiscals 1947–53, of which 1951–53 were war years in Korea)	[1] −5.7
Present administration over previous	+13.4
7-year changes in Federal public debt:
Under present administration (July 1953 to July 1960—from $266.1 billion to $284.5 billion)	+18.4
Under previous administration (July 1946 to July 1953—from $269.4 billion to $266.1 billion)	−3.3
Present administration over previous	+21.7

[1] The net deficit during the Korean war years, fiscals 1951–53, was $9.9 billion. Thus the 4 peacetime years, fiscals 1947–50, showed a net surplus of $4.2 billions.

NOTES: For simplicity here and so as to tie directly to official "budget" figures, amounts applicable to the highway trust fund for fiscals 1957–60 have been omitted.

Amounts included for fiscal 1960, ending June 30, 1960, are estimated as shown in 1961 budget and are subject to slight revision.

THE PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. Speaker, the inevitable consequence of living beyond income is the monstrous national debt. It has been necessary to borrow from future generations to pay current expenses. When the present administration assumed full fiscal control, the debt was down $266,100 million from a World War II high of $279,213 million. But on last December 2 it reached the highest point since the Republic was founded—$292,707,614,012.11.

Four days ago—June 28, 1960—it was at $286,476,919,121.76, representing about $1,600 for every man, woman, and child in America. If State and local debt is included, the per capita figure approximates $2,000.

They have increased the debt by $18,400 million in 7 years, and that in a period of record-breaking tax takes. Spending more than income, the President has asked Congress, on seven successive occasions, to raise the old debt ceiling, including this year. Failure to live within income has forced step-by-step, piecemeal conversion of the so-called temporary ceilings into permanent status.

Here are the condensed figures:

The public debt—8 fiscal years

[In billions]

1. Actual increase, 6 fiscal years (1954–59):
July 1953	$266.1
July 1959	284.7
Increase in the 6 years	+18.6
2. Current budget estimate of change during current fiscal year 1960 (July 1959 to July 1960—from $284.7 to $284.5)	−0.2
3. Estimated increase in the 7 years	+18.4
4. Budget estimate of change during fiscal year 1961 (July 1960 to July 1961—from $284.5 to $280)	[1]−4.5
5. Total budget estimate of increase for the 8 years, July 1953 to July 1961	+13.9

NOTE.—Old statutory limit of $275 billion raised as follows:

For fiscal 1955 by $6 billion (temporary).
For fiscal 1956 by $6 billion (temporary).
For fiscal 1957 by $3 billion (temporary).
For fiscal 1958 by $5 billion (temporary).
For fiscal 1959 by $8 billion (permanently to $283 billion); $5 billion (temporarily to $288 billion).
For fiscal 1960 by $10 billion (permanently to $285 billion); $10 billion (temporarily to $295 billion).
For fiscal 1961 by $8 billion (temporarily to $293 billion).

[1] Highly tentative and subject to probable considerable revision downward.

With the inflationary pressures and decline in popularity of Government bonds attending the profligacy of living beyond income, the cost of borrowing and refinancing the debt has risen phenomenally. It is incredible but true that, without the Congress directly turning a hand, interest cost on the debt in fiscal 1960 was estimated $1,700 million above the actual fiscal 1959 cost. I include pertinent data—subject to some revision as to fiscal 1960 and more substantial revision as to fiscal 1961:

Interest on the public debt

1. The debt:	Billion
June 30, 1959	$284.7
June 30, 1960 (estimated in January budget)	284.5
June 30, 1961 (estimated in January budget)	280.0
2. Interest on the debt:	Million
Fiscal 1959	$7,592
Fiscal 1960 (estimate in January budget)	9,300
(Increase of $1,700 million, fiscal 1960 over fiscal 1959.)
Fiscal 1961 (estimate in January budget)	9,500

(Increase of $200 million, fiscal 1961 over fiscal 1960, although debt is estimated in the January budget to drop by some $4.5 billion. That is far from a certainty at the present time).

3. In the current fiscal year 1960, interest on the debt averages $25,479,400 every day, $1,061,000 every hour, $17,690 every minute.

4. In the current fiscal 1960, interest on the debt exceeds interest cost for fiscal 1959 by $4,657,000 every day, $194,000 every hour, $3,230 every minute.

5. In fiscal year 1961, interest on the debt is estimated in the January budget to average $26,027,300 every day, $1,084,400 every hour, $18,000 every minute.

COST OF LIVING INCREASES

The inevitable result of inflationary spending is to hike the cost of food, clothing, housing, and all other items. The official index has been registering new highs for the cost of living and new lows for the value of the dollar nearly every 30 days as the following chart shows:

RECORDBREAKERS

To summarize and highlight these documented facts, Mr. Speaker, every breakable record has been broken in the last 7 years.

The President's budget has set several records on tax take—this 1961 budget of $84 billion in revenues is the highest ever in war or peace. It tops them all.

The administration set a peacetime spending record in fiscal year 1959 when they dished out $80.7 billion.

They set a peacetime record last year when they asked for appropriations of $83.4 billion. They are breaking that record this year.

They set another record when the public debt reached the highest point ever attained—in war or peace—last December 2—$292.7 billion.

The cost-of-living index reached an all time high only 2 months ago, and every indication points to still further highwater marks.

The purchasing power of the dollar hit a new low 2 months ago—down to 47 cents.

Any way you measure the situation, any way you compare the record, the facts lead to the same inescapable conclusion: In the last 7 years, the laudable objectives, the promises and pledges have not been met, cannot be met, and will not be met.

THE OREGON DUNES IN PERSPECTIVE AND IN DETAIL—THE RECREATION CRISIS—AT THE SEASHORE AND ELSEWHERE

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, as a nation, as a people, the recreation problem has become one of our very big and important problems. The outdoor phase has reached such a stage that it has been officially recognized that it can no longer successfully and safely be left to work itself out.

Hence there was established, in 1958, the National Outdoor Recreation Resources Review Commission. That Commission is well financed and substantially staffed. Its report is scheduled for release in 1961.

We await that report with much interest. But we need not sit idly by until 1961 or later. There are recognized recreation problems, in Oregon and elsewhere, which demand our attention now. Though statistics are inadequate by themselves, there is a considerable body of pertinent information available.

Data in table 1 show, at the very least, a vast increase since 1950 in attendance at some public parks and recreation facilities:

In many instances present facilities are inadequate to accommodate present demand. We now can be sure of the general trend. An emerging crisis situation can be recognized. The needs of our fast-growing Nation require our attention now.

PROBABLE FUTURE DEMAND FOR RECREATIONAL FACILITIES

Present and future population is of course a vital consideration. Few developments in our national life have so completely amazed, not to say confused and confounded, most of our people, including the "experts" as our vast upsurge in population since the 1930's.

There are now many more of us to use recreational facilities than formerly. The population of the United States did not stabilize in the 1950's; instead it increased from 151,325,798 persons in 1950 to 179,500,000 in 1960. This is a net increase of more than 28 million in the decade, or about 18.5 percent in 10 years.

In Oregon the increase by preliminary count was 235,025, or from 1,521,341 in 1950 to 1,756,366 in 1960, or 15.45 percent in percentage terms. Some other parts of the West and Southwest increased even more rapidly during the decade—Arizona, for example, by 74.4 percent, and Nevada by 75.75 percent.

The present population has put pressure on existing facilities, but it is the future, near and distant, to which recreation planners must largely look. We know we can anticipate that there will be even more, many, many more of us seeking recreation in the future. No one knows exactly how rapidly the population of the United States will increase in the decades ahead. But it is highly probable, based on characteristics of existing population and trends now in evidence, that there will be a vast increase in the U.S. population in the years ahead.

A MILLION MORE OREGONIANS BY 1975

Some speak of a doubling by the year 2000—40 years hence. A shorter-term estimate, based on information available prior to the 1960 census, projected a U.S. total of 227 million persons in 1975—a short 15 years hence. The same study indicated an Oregon total of 2,865,000 in 1975, and other parts of our West also were very adequately represented.

It is a near certainty that we will have more time for recreation—the shorter workweek, longer vacations, earlier retirement of workers, and a general higher standard of living which will further emphasize the need and time for rest and recreation, rather than what we have considered the basic necessities. They will allow and encourage greater use of outdoor recreation facilities. Cheaper, more convenient, and faster transportation will encourage more and more people to visit periodically the outstanding natural scenery of even the more distant parts of our country.

Another pleasant anticipation is that most of us will have more money to spend, and more money to spend on recreation. Some experts have forecast a doubling of the gross national product by 1975 as compared with 1950; and a 40-percent increase in disposable income per capita. In any case, growth trends being what they presently are, it appears altogether likely that we shall have not only more total money for recreation but also that a larger fraction of the expenditures probably will be used in this broad field.

Information on present spending on recreation is incomplete and inexact. Estimates range between $8 billion and $20 billion per year. But that it is large, and growing, is something we all observe from day to day.

OUTDOOR RECREATION: A WAY OF LIFE

Not only will there be many more of us with much more leisure time and with more money to spend, but recreation, especially outdoor recreation is thoroughly established as a phase of the American way of life. It apparently is psychologically more desirable and physically necessary than when we were much less urbanized. Urbanization and suburbanization has cast a heavy shadow on our land. This is evidenced by the preliminary reports from the 1960 census. We have to expect more of it.

Whether it be a matter of nature education, relaxation from the stresses and strains of modern living, improved physical health based on sun, water, and fresh air, or the joys of psychic satisfaction, shorter and longer trips into the great outdoors on weekends and vacations have become socially highly acceptable uses of leisure time and of income not required for the bare necessities.

The consumer rules our land. The all important consumers' choice increasingly votes for recreation.

INDICATIONS OF INCREASED RECREATIONAL INTEREST

One report is to the effect that nearly 40 percent, two out of five, of all Americans over the age of 12 years are interested in boating. Recreational craft in use have risen to more than 7 million. Even more astounding it is estimated that the average owner spends about $150 per year on his boat—an amount which is not much less than the total income of the average family in some parts of the world.

Visitors to public outdoor recreation facilities of several sorts have multiplied in an astonishing fashion as shown in table 1. As we have said before, comprehensive data are none too plentiful but what we do have are astonishing.

Between 1950 and 1958, attendance at Corps of Engineers water resource projects increased by nearly 500 percent; National Park Service areas (excepting the National Capital Parks System) increased by more than 85 percent, State park visitors by 108 percent, national forest areas by 150 percent, and Bureau of Reclamation projects by an estimated 195 percent.

You will recognize the distinct possibility that facilities to take care of these basic needs of the public in some of the areas are now inadequate. Some report that this situation has held attendance well below what might otherwise have been the case. The National Parks became acutely aware of inadequate facilities to meet the outdoor rush of our fellow Americans about 5 years ago, hence the early, almost desperate expansion involved in the 10-year, Mission 66 program. Somewhat later, the Forest Service became aware that its much larger acreage also was increasingly heavily visited—hence Operation Outdoors.

Marion Clawson of Resources for the Future, Inc., an expert on recreation statistics, concludes:

> We Americans don't just want outdoor recreation; we need it. Moving from farms to cities and suburbs has not meant turning our backs on land and water and open sky. As a people, we don't feel right unless we can get back from time to time to the out of doors.
> If we should ever lose this urge, there will have been a profound change in the national character. Meanwhile, it is abundantly clear—even if not subject to statistical proof—that outdoor recreation is not just one alternative use of family income and leisure time that rises and falls automatically with changing costs and fashions. Meeting the demand for such recreation is a national problem of the first rank.[1]

OUTDOOR VERSUS INDOOR RECREATION

There is a point of view which accepts the probability of more leisure and all that goes with it, yet doubts the likelihood of a further great surge in outdoor recreation. It must be granted that we do not have any very comprehensive information on how much people spend on recreation, nor, more pertinent in this case, precisely what value an urban civilization does or may put on parks, seashore, and the great outdoors, in contrast with indoor, or so-called cultural recreation.

Clawson admits that there is a sad lack of reliable statistics. But he does say:

> Apparently between 5 and 8 percent of all family spending is for recreation. How much of this total is for outdoor recreation is anybody's guess, but such breakdowns as are available for large items like sports equipment and travel suggest a level of at least $4 to $5 billion. In any case, it is perfectly apparent that in many communities recreation has become a leading industry, sometimes the leading one.[2]

RECREATIONAL GROWTH IN CALIFORNIA

A recent official report of our neighboring State on the south substantiates the irrepressible trend to outdoor recreation:

> California's burst of population growth is placing continuing strain upon existing local, State, and National recreational resources. Competition for land in our developing metropolitan area is pricing recreation off the market as urban development consumes agricultural lands and open spaces so vital to relieving the growing congestion of these areas. With the reduction of areas available for outdoor recreation, additional pressure is being placed upon the great natural resource areas of California. All trends indicate that the pressures for outdoor recreation use will develop at a faster rate than population growth and with these pressures every suitable area containing reasonable recreation attraction will be used for recreation purposes irrespective of public development.
> Your committee is concerned that these pressures will result in such intensive use of our outdoor areas that their attractiveness for recreation use and their other multipurpose use, such as timber and water production, will be destroyed. We urge that the responsible local, State, and Federal agencies insist that adequate planning and necessary controls be instituted in these areas with standards related to the carrying capacity of the land and cover that will control the intensities of use.[3]

With such mounting pressure on the outdoors in California, can Oregon be far behind? It seems unlikely.

Outdoor recreation is likely to be increasingly and strongly emphasized. As we attract more and more people from overseas, they will come predominantly to see our unique natural areas—"pastoral" U.S.A. At present, only one foreign visitor comes for every 10 Americans who venture overseas. But in 1960, as many as 600,000 foreign tourists are expected here, an increase of 20 percent over the number for 1959. They will spend perhaps one-third of a billion dollars.

OUTDOOR RECREATION FACILITIES AND SURVEYS FOR FUTURE ADDITIONS

The problem of what areas should be provided for public recreation, in what magnitude, and when it should be done has been with us for some time. I quote; not from a modern Cassandra, but from a gentleman of foresight who spoke nearly 70 years ago:

> A wise foresight would provide a large area here for out-of-door rest and recreation, a pleasant reach of shorelands, where thousands of inland people might bathe and walk by the sea; but there is no park or common or public beach.
> Unless great areas here are made public holdings, free for the people's enjoyment forever, the time will come when the tired dwellers of the cities and in the vast interior of our country, who are driven by the heat of summer to find rest and a new life by the sea, will find the city over again, and be "cribbed, cabined, and confined in conditions very like those from which they are trying to escape.[4]

You will recognize that he was speaking of Cape Cod. He was right. The situation has deteriorated to the point where we fully anticipate that something now must be done about it—at a cost of many, many millions of dollars.

I would not have you think that we have been so slow all across the outdoor recreation front. There were many fine outdoor areas included in national forests and in national parks, especially in the early 1900's and again in the 1930's.

Fine forests and mountains are rather well represented in units open to the public. National forests are most extensive and they have, in this session of Congress, been officially declared multiple-use lands—the official legislative affirmation of existing practice. The wilderness aspect remains for legislative clarification. "Operation outdoors" has as its major purpose the provision of additional facilities for recreation in national forests.

The national parks comprise about one-tenth as much areas as is included in the national forests. Throughout their history they have emphasized scenic and recreational quality. About 5 years ago they initiated the "mission–66" program, which is directed toward more adequate provision for the greatly expanded army of visitors—of whom some 71 million are expected in 1960–61.

SEASHORE AND LAKE AREAS INADEQUATELY REPRESENTED

There are several proposals for additional parks, with primary emphasis on a relatively few areas involving sand and water. Seashore and lake areas are presently very inadequately represented in public recreation areas. The reasons for this situation are in themselves another story.

I have quoted to you the warning of Mr. Harrison in 1892. In the 1930's a comprehensive survey of the 3,700-mile Atlantic and gulf coasts pointed to the need for very prompt action on a substantial scale. Part of the Hatteras area was acquired. A resurvey of that coast in the 1950's might be called one of regrets and condolences. Little desirable shoreline remained for public development, except at enormous cost. Cape Cod illustrates an area where something will probably have to be done in spite of the very high cost. And we may yet get action on Padre Island on the Texas gulf coast before it is all gobbled up.

PACIFIC COAST RECREATION AREA SURVEY—1959

You have heard much more about the Pacific coast recreation area survey released in 1959. Over 1,700 miles of general tidal shoreline were surveyed. It was an inventory of underdeveloped seashore areas to select those areas that should be included in a well-rounded and adequate national park system; in other words, areas which should be preserved for the welfare of the general public because of their scenic, cultural, and scientific values, areas necessary to provide for active public recreation use and enjoyment by an expanding population.

Of the 1,448 miles of Pacific Ocean shoreline not in public ownership and therefore not available for public recreation, 74 acres constituting about one-third of the total miles were identified as possessing important remaining opportunities. Seven areas, 190 miles in total, were found to be of major significance, five of them of possible national significance.

PROPOSED OREGON SEASHORE AREA RATED "SUPERLATIVE"

Of these five, our suggested Oregon coast national seashore recreation area occupied a preeminent place with the notation:

> The many superlative values found here are of such high importance as to warrant permanent preservation for the Nation as a whole (p. 19).

The survey of the Great Lakes shoreline [5] also was released in 1959. All of these shoreline surveys were financed by an anonymous nongovernmental donor. The Great Lakes survey resulted in the recommendation that an overall percentage of 15 percent in public ownership should be considered an absolute minimum, whereas, in certain places, particularly around large centers of population, this figure should be 20 percent or more. Some 426 miles of shoreline, now in private ownership, were identified as possessing important remaining opportunities for recreation and other public benefits.

As regards provision made, and to be made for outdoor recreation, something like a doubling of present acreage devoted thereto should be achieved by the year 2000. We have a long way to go yet, in Oregon and elsewhere. It will cost less and be more satisfactory to almost everybody if the acquisition part of the program is pushed hard and soon.

ECONOMIC IMPACT OF OUTDOOR RECREATION

Each new development, each new park, is a new case. There certainly has been creditable observation and testimony with respect to some very favorable aspects of development at Cape Hatteras Seashore, in the Great Smokies National Park, at Yellowstone, and, of particular pertinence, the favorable outcome in the Jackson Hole National Monument-Grand Teton National Park area. There have been some forthright complaints about slow development in some other areas, notably, perhaps, the Olympic Park area. But there just are apparently no careful, unbiased, competent "before" and "after" studies to which we can tie.

Where then can we turn for helpful enlightment as to the probable economic impact of a new national park, such as the proposed Oregon Seashore Dunes? Admittedly it presents a complex problem which ideally might involve exploration and measurement of at least the following:

First. Expansion or restriction of multiple-use aspects.

Second. On-project and off-project benefits.

Third. Direct and indirect benefits to local and regional economic structure.

Fourth. Expanded demands on community services in relation to ability to support such services.

Whereas benefit-cost ratios have received intensive attention, governmental and academic, as regards water, few have attempted to measure recreation benefits.[6]

PIONEER STUDY OF ECONOMIC IMPACT

In the case of the proposed Oregon Dunes seashore, Dr. J. Granville Jensen fortunately undertook a pioneering study of the probable impact. The extensive details of his report have been published and only enough will be included here to indicate the approach and some of the results involved.

Essentially, Dr. Jensen utilized an Oregon tourist survey of 1957 as a base point for logical projection. While not attempting to evaluate total outdoor recreational needs, he utilized population estimates for Oregon of 1,521,341 for 1950—census—1,773,000 for 1958; 2,344,000 for 1975 and approximately 3 million in 1990.

Some 3,500,000 tourists are indicated as having visited Oregon in 1957 for a minimum of 3 days. These visitors are projected at 7,500,000 in 1990; travel by other out-of-State tourists plus resident tourists, it is estimated would bring the total tourist travel in Oregon to 12,500,000 by that year.

Some 1,500,000 of the 1957 tourists visiting Oregon for 3 or more days, visited some part of the Oregon coast; on that basis a total of 7 million tourists each year on the Oregon coast by 1990 was projected. From that point it is not too difficult to make some assumptions regarding probable economic impact.

At the same time we desire more adequate measurement of probable economic impact we should recognize that there is a point of view, perhaps you would call it an extreme point of view, though more and more people are accepting it, that the real value of the national park and wilderness system has nothing—or at least, little—to do with cost or returns. Instead, a growing number of responsible citizens maintain that the real value consists in the inherent worth of permanently preserving the best remnants of our country's natural scenic beauty for the spiritual, esthetic, and physical enjoyment of the American people for all time to come.

What about legislation pending before the House and the other body proposing the establishment of one or more national seashore recreation areas within the United States?

This type of legislation first was introduced at the beginning of the 86th Congress. The late Senator Richard L. Neuberger, of Oregon, was the leader in the move to preserve the Oregon seashore for present and future generations. The progress of the Congress to consider equitably the various proposals has been held up by the very agency of the Government which does in fact favor establishment of these proposed recreation areas in several of our States.

It has become plain that we will not be able to get any legislative action during the 86th Congress, even with the August session.

Informally I have conferred with National Park Service personnel and staff members of the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee to iron out legislative areas which work unnecessary hardships on those persons living within the proposed national seashore area in Oregon. I have proposed amendments to the legislation.

Among them:

First. Language to provide an in-lieu tax provision;

Second. Amending legislation to permit persons who owned property in the area prior to its park designation to build the homes they had planned to build;

Third. Legislation to establish a National Seashore Advisory Commission in Oregon to provide the closest possible cooperation between the community, the State, and the Federal Government;

Fourth. Legislation which would make sand dune stabilization by the Federal Government mandatory;

Fifth. Legislation making the Secretary of Interior's duties to enter cooperative agreements about hunting and fishing and to permit withdrawal of ground water mandatory instead of merely permissive.

Among the most important of these is the amendment granting to those property owners the right to build homes. This amendment reads as follows:

> "(b) As used in this Act, the term 'improved property' shall mean (1) a private noncommercial dwelling, including the land on which it is situated, whose construction was begun before September 1, 1959, or which has been intended by the owner, continuously since September 1, 1959, to begin and was begun before a date three years after the date of enactment of this Act, and structures accessory thereto (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as 'dwelling'), together with such amount and locus of the property adjoining and in the same ownership as such dwelling as the Secretary designates to be reasonably necessary for the enjoyment of such dwelling for the sole purpose of noncommercial residential use and occupancy; or (2) any land, not exceeding such amount and locus in a single ownership as the Secretary designates to be reasonably necessary for the enjoyment of a noncommercial dwelling, on which construction of a private noncommercial dwelling has been intended by the owner continuously since September 1, 1959, which land is acquired by the Secretary before construction begins, but not later than three years after the date of enactment of this Act. In making such designations the Secretary shall take into account the manner of noncommercial residential use and occupancy in which the constructed or proposed dwelling and such adjoining property has usually been or would be reasonably expected to be enjoyed by its owner or occupant. The amount of such adjoining property to be so designated by the Secretary shall in no case be less than three acres in area, or all of such lesser amount as there may be, except that the Secretary may exclude from the amount of adjoining property so designated any beach or waters, together with so much of the land adjoining such beach or waters as the Secretary may deem necessary for public access thereto."

It specifically amends line 25, page 22, through line 20, page 23 of the bill H.R. 11842 introduced by my colleague, Representative JOHN SAYLOR of Pennsylvania, as that bill refers to Oregon Dunes.

Reports on legislation proposing establishment of single park areas have been held up. On May 25 Assistant Secretary Ernst of the Interior Department wrote to Chairman WAYNE ASPINALL of the House Insular Affairs Committee as follows:

> We have received what we believe to be constructive suggestions from individuals, organizations, and officials of the State of Oregon which will cause us to make changes in our proposed report on this legislation.

Secretary Ernst referred to my bill H.R. 11204, introduced March 16, 1960.

Without reports on individual bills, the House committee has not acted. Chairman ASPINALL and the Public Lands Subcommittee chairman, GRACIE PFOST, and members of her committee are aware of the value of the proposed seashore areas. Chairman ASPINALL tells me early hearings will be held on the proposed seashore legislation next year.

Westerner WAYNE ASPINALL, of Colorado, is aware of the distress this delay causes. He realizes the hardship the delay works on the landowners involved, just as I and other Members concerned do.

Certainly the Congress has acted promptly to resolve the matter. The missing pieces to this puzzle must come from the administration.

The delays, however occurred, have created temporarily both economic and mental hardships. In my opinion this can be ironed out. I will be conferring again with residents in the proposed area soon. Nobody will be forced to abandon their homes.

While I am home, I hope to have the proposed legislation discussed widely. Through discussion I believe that this legislation can be written so almost everybody will support it, thereby assuring for Oregon a national seashore park of prime recreational and economic value.

SOME PROS AND CONS OF THE PROPOSED OREGON DUNES SEASHORE

Let me review what seems to be the more important arguments on each side of this proposal.

And I would reemphasize that there has been a wholehearted willingness to go the extra mile, to look at the other fellow's point of view, to somehow compromise the matter in dispute and get along with the project. The Park Service officials have been very helpful on the several occasions when their expert testimony was needed. They have, I am sure, answered questions to the best of their ability about a proposal which in the very nature of the circumstances could not at that time be fully formulated. Bills have been drafted, then redrafted, to take account of most, though hardly all of the objections which have been raised.

DEMOCRATIC PROCESSES HAVE PREVAILED

Two extensive hearings have been held, by the appropriate subcommittees of both branches of Congress, and many local persons have been heard. The Governor and his people have been consulted at length and repeatedly. I mention all of this to indicate that democratic processes have prevailed throughout.

This is not, has not been, and will not be, a Federal bulldozer overriding and plowing under the loyal opposition. But there comes a time when all have been heard, their points considered and we must stand up and be counted. That is the essence of our system.

MAIN POINTS IN DISPUTE

What are the main points in dispute?

1. SAND, POLITICS, AND ROUGH WEATHER; IS THE AREA OF NATIONAL PARK QUALITY?

I would be the first to grant anybody the right to his or her own opinion. But it just never had occurred to me that anybody, least of all those who choose to live here, might entertain serious doubts about the unique beauty of our coastal dunes, might fear our breezes or regard the seashore dunes and the fresh water lakes and forests as unworthy of national park status.

I hope my fellow Oregonians do not acquire the bragging characteristics prevalent in some other areas. But I simply cannot give serious weight to some of the testimony presented. These dunes are unique, not just worthless piles of sand, nor mere attractive nuisances. Our beaches and lakes are gems to most of us, not uncommonly dangerous, nor unusable, except in the best of weather. Neither gales, nor quicksand, nor spruce chimneys are of such an order and prevalence to keep us or others away from the area.

When I become depressed with the apparent lack of appreciation some have for our fine area I turn to the inspiring words of an unbiased student of the area.

Dr. William S. Cooper is a distinguished botanist, who is also a geologist of parts; he was for many years a renowned professor at the University of Minnesota; he is now retired and living in Colorado.

As long ago as 1919 he undertook, for reasons of pure science, a comprehensive study of the sand dunes of the Pacific coast of North America. Even the financing of his work, insofar as it was not self-financed, was by scientific and educational organizations not located in Oregon. He not only studied the dunes of North America, but has studied the world's literature on dunes. He has testified that he did fieldwork on the Oregon Dunes in 1925, 1928, 1933, 1940, and 1941, and that the portion of the coast included in the proposed National Seashore Park received the most intensive study. His latest product is a technical monograph: "The Coastal Sand Dunes of Oregon and Washington," Geological Society of America, memoir 72, 1958, 169 pages.

His statement to the committee describing the unique beauty and scientific merit of the area is quoted in part below:

> Three features are arranged zonally, parallel to the shores; beach, dunes, lakes, each uniquely beautiful. The gently curved beach, unbroken by a single rock outcrop, and by only two major rivers, is 55 miles long. Behind it is a system of dunes equally long, varying in character from place to place. * * * In one sector are the most impressive and, in appearance, the highest (550 feet above the beach) of all the coastal dunes of North America, and possibly in the world. An interrupted inner strip was stabilized centuries ago and today supports forest. The lakes owe their origin to damming of river valleys by dunes. Several are of considerable size and have long slender branches, which add to their picturesque beauty.
> The supreme and unique natural beauty of the area is unquestioned. It has by far the longest stretch of unbroken beach on the Pacific coast of the United States. Its dunes surpass all others, including both coasts, in size and beauty.
> The area to be included * * * "between the Siuslaw and Umpqua Rivers in Lane and Douglas Counties" * * * contains very fine dunes with some special features, but the area south of the Umpqua River, extending to Ten-Mile Creek, contains the most impressive and beautiful coastal dunes on the North American Continent. * * * Moreover, the dominant type of dune here, the "oblique ridge," is best developed in this area and so far as I know is unique among coastal dunes.
> * * * * *
> I feel that certain lakes should be included, since they provide different types of recreation supplementing those of beach and dunes.
>
> While the prime objective in establishing the Oregon Dunes National Seashore is recreation, the features of scientific significance are so important that they must be carefully considered both in establishing boundaries and in management after establishment. One of these features is the extensive development of the transverse-ridge pattern; the greatest expanse of this type is just south of the Siuslaw River. * * * Opportunity is provided here for fundamental research on this type of dune, which is widespread in deserts but uncommon on coasts. * * * Another feature of scientific importance is the presence of the "oblique ridge" pattern * * * best developed in the area south of the Umpqua River. * * * Study of this area has apparently furnished the key to the origin of great systems of longitudinal dunes in the Sahara Desert and in central Australia (Geological Society of America, Memoir 72, pp. 49–64). Investigations here have also yielded valuable data pertaining to rate of dune movement, the effects of vegetation (both important in practical ways) and the history of coastal changes in late glacial and postglacial time.[7]

2. IS AN OREGON NATIONAL SEASHORE RECREATION AREA REALLY NEEDED?

There are several forms in which this question arises, all of them reasonable and sincere.

First. With so much public land in Oregon and the West, what possible need can there be for another national park?

[7] Hearing on Oregon Dunes National Seashore, Senate Subcommittee on Public Lands, Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, 86th Cong., 1st sess. pp. 70–72.

Those who raise the question and especially those who believe that such a park is not needed point out the fact that about 51 percent of the total acreage of Oregon is owned by the Federal Government, as well as even larger fractions of some other Western States—that is, 87 percent of Nevada.

It is true that much public land in some degree supports recreation. Yet public land as such, even though people may walk or ride, or hunt over it, does not provide and is not prepared to provide the outstanding features nor the organized services of the national parks. They are definitely in the recreation-education business. By its very selection the park must have met the ultimate test of being, of its kind, so unique, or supreme in its outstanding scenic, scientific or historic quality that its preservation and dedication for the benefit and enjoyment of all the people is truly in the national interest.

Once it has passed that test, provision is made, through care and organization, that it may be used and enjoyed by many individuals, regardless of residence, because of its outstanding merit in its class, as well as preserved for future generations. We have had creditable testimony that the proposed area does indeed have such quality, that the population upsurge will provide many visitors and that the outstanding scientific and educational values can best be utilized and enjoyed in an organized program with other sorts of recreation.

Second. Some say that Oregon already has one national park which is not now overused. It may be pointed out that Washington contains 68,192 square miles and that it now has two large national parks with another sometimes seriously proposed. The State of Idaho has one large park; Montana has one; Wyoming has two; California has nine; Nevada, none; Oregon, nearly half again as large as Washington, has one small national park. But regardless of number or size the quality and the uniqueness of the dunes area speaks loudest for park status.

John B. Oakes has recounted that when the bill to create Glacier National Park was introduced 50 years ago by Representative C. N. Pray, his colleagues argued:

> There certainly was no need for another park in Montana because Yellowstone already existed on the State's southern borders, and creation of such a park would mean a perpetual drain on the Federal Treasury.

WINNING OF THE WEST

Glacier fortunately was given park status. Last year nearly three-quarters of a million visitors are estimated to have spent some $18 million in Montana.

ANSWERS TO GOOD QUESTIONS

Third. Some ask why, with the shore itself belonging to the State, with a fine small State park in the area, with much of the dunes and near coastal area under Forest Service control, and some other Government programs active in the area there is any really good reason to set up a national seashore park. The answer to this is first of all the unique quality of the area. It makes it eligible for national park status, plus some other practical operational factors.

Only by conversion to park status, apparently, can the full recreational values of the area be made available to a wide public. In part this is a matter of money; Honeyman State Park is a very fine one of its type, but the State of Oregon is admittedly not prepared to undertake the larger job which needs to be done here. Even more, it is a matter of primary purpose, direction and organization.

The Forest Service does hold much land in this area; it does make some camping sites available; but its primary purpose has been and must continue to be a strong orientation toward increased production and efficient harvesting of forest products, especially timber.

Moreover, and most important, the national forest holdings cannot be expanded so as to include additional territory and the fresh water lakes needed to provide a balanced recreational and scientific unit of national interest.

3. WOULD SUCH A PARK BE FAIR TO THE PEOPLE OF THE AREA?

This fundamental question has arisen in a multitude of lesser questions. Many of the modifications and compromises which have been made over the months in proposed bills as they have been redrafted were with the purpose of meeting criticisms in this category. This aspect will be developed in a later section which presents an analysis of the latest bill.

One much noted and discussed aspect relates to the proposed purchase for inclusion in the park of a goodly number of tracts now privately held, a considerable number of which has been developed and are in seasonal or year around residential use. These are in most instances the homes of the people concerned. They have lived there, some for long periods. They love their homes, the general area, the lakes on which they front. What can be done about it?

First of all, one must note, in all fairness, that this is not exactly an unusual situation. It happens in somewhat the same form every year in most or all of the States. In rather the same form it has arisen lately with the proposal that the Congress take over for future use two blocks on Capitol Hill in Washington. A protest meeting was reported as having been attended by 200 persons.

But here and elsewhere the acquisition by the Government of private property for public use is an old, old privilege which we call eminent domain. It is older than our Government and not at all un-American. It is utilized regularly in the States as the occasion arises in land acquisition for roads, public utilities, and so forth. The main requirements are that be by due process, for a public purpose, and that just compensation be given. In this case, as now drafted, the proposal would go the extra mile and permit residents to continue to live in the Park area for many years under what most people would consider liberal provisions.

Another aspect of fairness which is almost inevitably raised has to do with taxes. Will the acquisition by the Federal Government of additional acreage now in private ownership deplete the tax base available to local and State government?

IN LIEU OF TAXES PROVISION

For the short run, for the first few years, I was afraid that it might. Hence it appeared that an adjustment might be necessary to be fair to local people, school districts and other governmental subdivisions dependent on the local tax base. Hence an "in lieu of taxes" provision has been included, in spite of the fact that such a provision is not generally favored by the park service and actually has been very rarely used.

For the longer run we think the almost overwhelming weight of the evidence points to much expanded economic activity in the general area. The development would afford enlarged work opportunities, much capital investment, and a substantially enlarged tax base.

The previously mentioned Jensen report, by cautious projection, estimated that if the park should be established as contemplated, the result a short 30 years hence (1990) would be 5,100,000 visitor-days, with a total gross annual income to the area from recreational use of about $26,500,000, of which about one-half would be paid out for labor and materials.

On the other hand, if the present program were continued, it was estimated that the 1958 recreational attendance of 400,000 would increase to only 1,500,000 persons, giving a gross annual income to the area from recreation of about $8 million. It appears that the proposed development would very adequately take care of the tax problem and labor opportunity.

Other aspects of "fairness" which have been raised relate to the possible withdrawal and conveyance of water outside the park area, continuance of the right to hunt and fish, whether establishment of a national park would discourage some sorts of possible industry from locating in the general area, who pays if road location becomes necessary, and others. I can report to you that it has been possible to make reasonable provision for most of these points. Even in regard to such a basic point of divergent philosophy as is illustrated by progressive timber harvest of the Forest Service and the private tree farms versus the rather strict emphasis by the Park Service on recreational use only, we must not forget that growing timber in national parks is not lost, but is a potential lumber reserve if serious need should arise.

The additional Federal money to be spent in developing the area and the expenditures of many more tourists to be taken care of in and near the area should go a long, long way in counterbalancing any residual unfairness.

4. SHOULD THE UNITED STATES MAKE SUCH AN INVESTMENT IN OREGON?

The question is fair. It can be answered.

First. What is the justification, some ask, for additional Federal expenditures when the national debt already is high?

I will discuss this question in more detail a bit later. Let me just point out at this time that the Jensen report indicates by 1990 a recreational use of $26 million as compared to only $8 million if present development trends continue. This indicates an excellent use of capital for the area and a profitable investment for the Government with a return in taxes and use charges.

Second. What is the justification for Federal ownership when the State owns and preserves the shore?

Present State ownership and preservation of the beach, desirable as it is, does not provide an adequate or satisfactory working unit from the standpoint of recreation or science. Coast, new dunes, old dunes, forest, and fresh water lakes must all be included and fully represented in a well-planned and coordinated program.

Third. What is the justification for Federal ownership when the Government already owns a substantial part of the area, including multiple-use national Forest lands?

Tracts owned by the Forest Service will, of course, not be an additional cost to the Government. The Forest Service, though highly professional in its primary work, is not really here and now prepared to give problems such as recreation and science the emphasis they deserve. Nor is the Forest Service in any position to expand their present holdings so as to have a unit more fully representative of the wonders nature has provided in Oregon and in other prospective seashore areas.

Fourth. What is the justification for Federal ownership when a heavily patronized State park is near at hand?

Honeyman State Park is excellent and well patronized, but it has not been, and apparently will not be, able to provide the more extensive and comprehensive facilities now needed:

> Since our funds for State parks comes entirely out of State highway revenues, we have no funds sufficient for the proper development of these natural wonders. We are overtaxed now with maintaining 168 State parks with a budget of $1,800,000 a year." [8]

The Jensen report I referred to earlier estimated the probable cost of private property in the proposed area at something like $4 million. Development costs to the Federal Government, including roads, trails, and parking areas were estimated at $3,525,000; forestry and dune stabilization were set at $440,000. A possible, but far from definite, relocation of a State highway was estimated at $8,100,000. This gives a total investment cost to the Federal Government estimated at a minimum of about $7 million and a maximum of about $16 million.

In addition, it is estimated that probable non-Federal investment in trades and services would exceed $14 million.

All of this investment in park and facilities, according to Dr. Jensen would, by 1990, increase the total gross annual income of the area from recreational use to more than $26 million as compared with only $8 million per year if present trends of development continue. This then appears to be an extremely profitable use of capital for the area, providing an annual differential in gross income more than enough to repay the total estimated maximum Federal capital investment. Here, indeed, is a highly profitable investment for society. The Federal Government would recoup part of it in taxes if not by use charges.

ECONOMIC ARGUMENT—CON NOT PERSUASIVE

The economic argument, good as it is, is not the most persuasive one. Neither private, nor State, nor Forest Service development has been able to do the job which needs to be done here. This proposed park area is one of our finest resources, it has irreplaceable values for all of us.

It has economic value, for which we should all pay, but only as a part of or incidental to its inspirational values. It has potential for physical benefits as well as capacity for giving lasting pleasure. We can afford it, but we cannot have it, now or in the long future, unless we do something about it now—or in the very near future. It is a job for the National Park Service of the United States. I join our Secretary of the Interior in his firm belief that appropriate action on this problem is of transcendent importance, to us, to our children, and to our children's children.

ANALYSIS OF THE MOST RECENT OREGON SEACOAST DUNES PARK BILL (H.R. 11842, WITH PROPOSED AMENDMENTS)

As I explained to the House on June 8, 1960, (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 12163–12164, it seems highly desirable that legislative consideration of the Oregon Dunes Seashore Park proposal be expedited before this Congress. That being the case I decided at that time to propose amendments to the Saylor bill (H.R. 11842), instead of waiting on a report from the Department of the Interior on my H.R. 11204, which, on the Senate side is the Mansfield-Kuchel bill. The Saylor bill, as applied to the Oregon Dunes area, and my proposed amendments thereto I shall consider with you now.

First. The title would be slightly, but I think significantly, revised to emphasize that the proposal is for the purpose of development as well as to save and to preserve this underdeveloped area.

Second. My amendments would call for the new park to be named the Richard L. Neuberger National Seashore, instead of Oregon Dunes National Seashore as carried by H.R. 11842 unamended. This legislation is a monument to Dick, most of which he built himself. Though this is a personal point, it is one which I support, as an appropriate memorial to our wonderful Senator and my good friend for his great services to conservation and to Oregon.

Third. The boundaries, described in detail in section 2 of the bill, have not been amended. It is my understanding that these are the result of careful field study and some little compromise. While they are perhaps still subject to minor modification for good reason, they should be regarded as something more than a first approximation. They are, at least, semifinal.

The provision on page 15 of the bill is retained which would permit the addition at some future date of the Sea Lion Caves by Executive order of the President after consultation with and consideration of the recommendation of the Governor of Oregon.

Also retained is the provision that if the Secretary of the Interior finds any parcel in the Tahkenitch Lake unit is not being used in its entirety primarily for the growth and harvesting of timber on a sustained-yield basis, the boundaries of the seashore may be extended to include such parcel by publishing notice in the Federal Register.

However, amendment 6 would provide reassurance on the boundary worry by requiring that there shall be no extension beyond the limits provided in the act, except by act of Congress.

Section 3 authorizes the Secretary to acquire, in any of several possible ways, the real estate or any interest therein of the proposed park area; transfer, donation, purchase, condemnation, and exchange are provided for. Property owned by a State or a political subdivision thereof may be acquired only with the concurrence of such owner. Some Federal property may, with concurrence of the custodial agency, be transferred without consideration. There can, however, be no exchange of timberlands, I am told. More questions have arisen regarding condemnation—eminent domain—and the rather wide latitude authorized with respect to exchange than the others, but both have been retained. The Secretary is authorized to pay the fair market value of acquisitions, a matter for his determination, for which he may utilize an independent appraisal.

Section 4 provides for establishment of the area as a national seashore as soon as the act is approved by Congress and the President. I have been assured by the Park Service that it considers the Federal acreage of the area involved sufficient to term a national seashore. This means that the park can get under way after passage of the act and prior to the completion of the almost inevitably slower acquisition process with respect to private property.

Section 5 is one which goes a long, long way in making tolerable the acquisition of private residential property within the park boundaries. Section 5 (a) provides that owners of improved property may elect to retain the right of use and occupancy for noncommercial residential purposes for a term not to exceed 25 years, or for a term ending at the death of the owner, his spouse, or the day his last surviving child reaches the age of 21, whichever is the latest. Such retained rights may be conveyed or leased, in whole but not in part. The fair market value paid shall of course take account of the value of rights retained.

Section 5 (b) and (c) of the Saylor bill would be deleted by amendment, as having been pertinent to another area. But a new section 5(b) would be added as a modification of the old section 5(d) in what to me seems to be a highly desirable, though difficult and complicated attempt to provide retention of use and occupancy rights for those who have bought and held land in the area with the firm intention of using it for the construction of a private noncommercial dwelling but for one reason or another were not able to commence such construction before September 1, 1959.

They would be given 3 years after the enactment to proceed with their earlier building intentions, and may hold also such adjoining land as the Secretary designates as reasonably necessary to the enjoyment of the dwelling, but excluding such beach or waters together with adjoining land deemed necessary for public access to the beach.

Section 5(e), section 6, and section 7 are deleted as not pertinent. Section 8 becomes a new section 6 which provides that the proposed park be administered by the Secretary in accordance with the several national park laws, and that he may utilize authority otherwise available for the conservation and management of natural resources. This would appear to give the Secretary adequate authority within broad guidelines.

Old section 8(e) becomes new section 6(b) and is amended to make mandatory that the Secretary enter into cooperative agreements with the State of Oregon regarding hunting and fishing rules and fish, game, and wildlife management programs for the park area, such rules, and programs not to materially impair the scenic, scientific, and recreational features of the seashore park.

Again, this would seem to represent a sensible compromise of contending forces.

ADVISORY COMMISSION NEEDED

The Advisory Commission which would be established by old section 9, new section 7, as amended, would exist for 10 years, would have 9 members appointed by the Secretary for 2-year terms, four of whom—one from each congressional district of the State—would be appointed from recommendations made by the State committee on natural resources, or, if no such committee exists, by the Governor of the State, two from recommendations of the Governor of Oregon, one member designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and ex officio, the mayors of the cities of Florence and Reedsport. The Chairman would be designated by the Secretary. They shall serve without compensation, other than reasonable expenses.

Its functions would be advisory of a rather wide-ranging sort; the Secretary would consult them on matters pertaining to development and operation of the park and would be required to have the advice of the Commission before issuing any permit for the commercial or industrial use of property within the seashore area.

Section 8(a)—new—would amend old section 10 to make it mandatory on the Secretary of the Interior that he permit the investigation for and the withdrawal of water from the sand dunes, and conveyance outside of either surface or subsurface water for beneficial use, provided, in his judgment, the scenic, scientific, and recreational features of the seashore would not be materially impaired.

Section 8(b)—new—makes much the same provisions for permitting the transportation and disposal of domestic and industrial wastes within or through the seashore if same will not result in material impairment of the primary functions of the area. This section should go a long way in reassuring those who fear that the seashore park would block industrial development because of water supply or waste disposal.

Section 9—new—amends old section 11 to make mandatory on the Secretary necessary sand-dune stabilization and erosion-control programs and that he shall secure the advice and assistance of other Federal and State agencies to accomplish these purposes. This should lessen some fears that the National Park people might not pursue existing programs.

New section 10 is old section 12, which maintains the existing authority or responsibility of the several agencies with respect to the several aspects of public highways, except as the Secretary may acquire jurisdiction by agreement with the administering agency. Probably more important in relation to questions which have been raised, costs of reconstruction or relocation of any highway resulting from recommendations of the Secretary would be borne by funds available to him. This should effectively take care of fears that the State might be saddled with millions of dollars of costs should an existing State highway in and near the seashore area be relocated in the future. I believe it fair that the Government pay for work which will benefit everyone, visitors from all areas.

Section 11 becomes the new "Authorization of appropriation" section. The amount is purposely not set at this time.

COMPENSATION FOR TAX LOSSES

My amendment 15 is a new section 12 which would provide for compensation for tax losses sustained by local taxing authorities as a result of acquisitions of private property in creating the seashore. The details are provided in my amendment 16, new section 13 which stipulates that payment in lieu of taxes in the year of acquisition shall be proportionate to the number of days of the year remaining after acquisition. For the 2 succeeding years the full amount of such tax assessed in the year of acquisition shall be paid. But no such payment is to be made on any acquired real estate for which the Government has acquired less than a fee simple absolute.

There is further provision that such payments are to be computed and paid to the taxing authorities as soon as practicable after real estate taxes have been assessed. There is also a cutoff date making it inapplicable to any property acquired by the Secretary after December 31 of the 25th year following enactment of the act.

This would seem to provide a modest compromise of a most difficult problem; that is, how hard will local taxing authorities be hit in the short run, if at all. This is an effort to enable them to be supported in their accustomed style during a not so very long transition period, which because the acquisitions will not be completed all in 1 year, will cover several years.

Section 14 of the Saylor bill (H.R. 11842) is not changed. It is nothing more than the usual mopup provision providing that invalidity of any provision shall not affect the remainder of the act.

I hope this analysis of the proposed Oregon National Seashore and the accompanying examination of its worth will help clarify the issues involved. The writing of the legislation is not finished. I welcome suggestions for improvement.

We build for the future as our Nation's forefathers of 1776 did. It is not always easy to look both at today and tomorrow. Only through patient and careful analysis by persons of good will can such projects grow from dreams to realities.

Here is a tremendous opportunity for Oregon and the Nation to preserve and to develop our unique recreational resources.

H.R. 12896—A BILL TO AMEND THE NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH ACT

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD, and to include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, on June 30, 1960, I introduced in the House of Representatives H.R. 12896, a bill to amend the National School Lunch Act.

Since the School Lunch Act became effective on July 1, 1946, millions of children have benefited, until today more than 14 million children are served lunches or milk at school each school day. The Federal Government has supplied funds, as well as surplus commodities, and local school districts have cooperated wonderfully in every way. In the local schools, parent-teacher associations and other civic groups often take an active part in the program. All of us acquainted with this program know that, in some of the slum areas of the cities and in places where persons are unemployed through no fault of their own, children receive the best meal of the day at school.

In recent years, the formula under the act has increasingly needed adjustment. This bill, H.R. 12896, Mr. Speaker, is intended to remove the inequities in that formula. Some schools presently receive only 3 cents or even less of Federal funds for each complete lunch; others receive as much as 9 cents of Federal funds for each similar lunch. States that have taken full advantage of the program are penalized under the formula, while those that have not taken full advantage receive larger amounts per lunch. In other words, diligence is penalized by the present formula.

The bill, H.R. 12896, will correct these inequities. It establishes a new formula based on participation and on economic ability and eliminates the injustices of uneven distribution of Federal funds.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has been the subject of study since 1957. There have been consultations with the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the American School Food Service Association, the American Parents Committee, and the Congress of Parents and Teachers, the National Education Association, and the Council of Chief State School Officers. This bill has the support of these groups and organizations, as well as others.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on General Education of the House Committee on Education and Labor, it is my plan to hold hearings on this legislation during the current session of the Congress, and I trust that it will receive early enactment in the next Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to include as part of my remarks the text of the National School Lunch Act as it would be amended by H.R. 12896. The proposed law follows:

THE NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH ACT

(As it would read after including the proposed amendments)

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "National School Lunch Act".

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress, as a measure of national security, to safeguard the health and well-being of the Nation's children and to encourage the domestic consumption of nutritious agricultural commodities and other food, by assisting the States, through grants-in-aid and other means, in providing an adequate supply of foods and other facilities for the establishment, maintenance, operation, and expansion of nonprofit school-lunch programs.

APPROPRIATIONS AUTHORIZED

SEC. 3. For each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as "the Secretary") to carry out the provisions of this Act.

APPORTIONMENTS TO STATES

SEC. 4. (a) The sums appropriated for any fiscal year pursuant to the authorization contained in section 3 of this Act, excluding the sum specified in section 5, shall be available to the Secretary for supplying, during such fiscal year, agricultural commodities and other foods for the school-lunch program in accordance with the provisions of this Act. The Secretary shall apportion among the States during each fiscal year not less than 75 per centum of the aforesaid funds made available for such year for supplying agricultural commodities and other foods under the provisions of this Act, except that the total of such apportionments of funds for use in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands shall not exceed 3 per centum of the funds appropriated for agricultural commodities or other foods for the school-lunch program.

(b) Subject to adjustments under subsection (c), apportionment among the States shall be made on the basis of two factors: (1) the participation rate for the State and (2) the need for assistance in the State as indicated by the relation of the average annual per capita income in the United States for the preceding three years to the average annual per capita income in the State for the preceding three years. Subject to such adjustments (if any) as result from the application of subsection (c), the amount of the initial apportionment to any State shall be determined by the following method: First, determine an index for the State by multiplying factors (1) and (2); second, divide this index by the sum of the indices for all the States; and, finally, apply the figure thus obtained to the total funds to be apportioned.

(c) If the apportionment to any State under subsection (b) is more than the amount obtained by multiplying the participation rate for the State by 9 cents, the State's apportionment shall be decreased to such amount. The total of such decreases shall be apportioned among the remaining States by proportionately increasing the amount apportioned to each under subsection (b), but with such adjustments as may be necessary to prevent the apportionment of any such remaining States from being thereby increased to more than the product of the State's participation rate and 9 cents. If the apportionment to any State under subsection (b), after any adjustments resulting from the application of the preceding sentence, is less than the amount obtained by multiplying the participation rate for the State by 5 cents, the State's apportionment shall be increased to such amount. The total of the increases required by the preceding sentence shall be derived by proportionately reducing the amount so apportioned to each of the remaining States, but with such adjustments as may be necessary to prevent the apportionment of any such remaining States from being thereby reduced to less than the product of the State's participation rate and 5 cents. If the requirements of the formula herein provided cannot be met from the funds available, allotments to the respective States shall be reduced pro-rata. If any State cannot utilize all funds so apportioned to it, or if additional funds are available under this Act for apportionment among the States, the Secretary shall make further apportionments to the remaining States in the same manner.

(d) For purposes of this Act—

(1) the participation rate shall be the number of Type A school lunches served in the preceding fiscal year in connection with which reimbursements were made under this Act,

(2) the per capita income figures used shall be the latest figures certified by the Department of Commerce,

(3) "school" means any public or nonprofit private school of high school grade or under and, with respect to Puerto Rico, shall also include nonprofit child-care centers certified as such by the Governor of Puerto Rico.

SEC. 5. Of the sums appropriated for any fiscal year pursuant to the authorization contained in section 3 of this Act, $10,000,000 shall be available to the Secretary for the purpose of providing, during such fiscal year, nonfood assistance for the school-lunch program pursuant to the provisions of this Act. The Secretary shall apportion among the States during each fiscal year the aforesaid sum of $10,000,000, and such apportionment among the States shall be on the basis of the factors, and in accordance with the standards, set forth in section 4 with respect to the apportionment for agricultural commodities and other foods. The total of such funds apportioned for nonfood assistance for use in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam and the Virgin Islands shall not exceed 3 per centum of the funds appropriated for nonfood assistance in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

DIRECT FEDERAL EXPENDITURES

SEC. 6. (a) The funds appropriated for any fiscal year for carrying out the provisions of this Act, less not to exceed 3½ per centum thereof hereby made available to the Secretary for use as provided in subsection (b), and less the amount apportioned by him pursuant to sections 4, 5, and 10, shall be available to the Secretary during such year for direct expenditure by him for agricultural commodities and other foods to be distributed among the States and schools participating in the school-lunch program under this Act in accordance with the needs as determined by the local school authorities. The provisions of law contained in the proviso of the Act of June 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 323), facilitating operations with respect to the purchase and disposition of surplus agricultural commodities under section 32 of the Act approved August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 774), as amended, shall, to the extent not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, also be applicable to expenditures of funds by the Secretary under this Act.

(b) Two-sevenths of the funds made available for use as provided in this subsection may be granted by the Secretary to State educational agencies which request such funds for use by such agencies in meeting necessary additional administrative expenses for the improvement of their school-lunch programs. The amount which may be granted a State educational agency under this subsection may not exceed an amount which bears the same ratio to the total funds available for distribution under this subsection as that State's apportionment under section 4 for the year bears to the total funds apportioned. The remainder of such funds may be used by the Secretary for his administrative expenses.

PAYMENTS TO STATES

SEC. 7. Funds apportioned to any State pursuant to section 4 or 5 during any fiscal year shall be available for payment to such State for disbursement by the State educational agency, in accordance with such agreements not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, as may be entered into by the Secretary and such State educational agency, for the purpose of assisting schools of that State during such fiscal year, in supplying (1) agricultural commodities and other foods for consumption by children and (2) nonfood assistance in furtherance of the school-lunch program authorized under this Act. Such payments to any State in any fiscal year during the period 1947 to 1950, inclusive, shall be made upon condition that each dollar thereof will be matched during such year by $1 from sources within the State determined by the Secretary to have been expended in connection with the school-lunch program under this Act. Such payments in any fiscal year during the period 1951 to 1955, inclusive, shall be made upon condition that each dollar thereof will be so matched by one and one-half dollars; and for any fiscal year thereafter, such payments shall be made upon condition that each dollar will be so matched by $3. In the case of any State whose per capita income is less than the per capita income of the United States, the matching required for any fiscal year shall be decreased by the percentage which the State per capita income is below the per capita income of the United States. For the purpose of determining whether the matching requirements of this section and section 10, respectively, have been met, the reasonable value of donated services, supplies, facilities, and equipment, as certified, respectively, by the State educational agency and, in case of schools receiving funds pursuant to section 10, by such schools (but not the cost or value of land, of the acquisition, construction, or alteration of buildings of commodities donated by the Secretary, or of Federal contributions), may be regarded as funds from sources within the State expended in connection with the school-lunch program. The Secretary shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time the amounts to be paid to any State under this section and the time or times such amounts are to be paid; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the State at the time or times fixed by the Secretary the amounts so certified.

STATE DISBURSEMENT TO SCHOOLS

SEC. 8. Funds paid to any State during any fiscal year pursuant to section 4 or 5 shall be disbursed by the State educational agency, in accordance with such agreements approved by the Secretary as may be entered into by such State agency and the schools in the State, to those schools in the State which the State educational agency, taking into account need and attendance, determines are eligible to participate in the school-lunch program. Such disbursement to any school shall be made only for the purpose of reimbursing it for the cost of obtaining agricultural commodities and other foods for consumption by children in the school-lunch program and nonfood assistance in connection with such program. Such food costs may include, in addition to the purchase price of agricultural commodities and other foods, the cost of processing, distributing, transporting, storing, or handling thereof. In no event shall such disbursement for food to any school for any fiscal year exceed an amount determined by multiplying the number of lunches served in the school in the school-lunch program under this act during such year by the maximum Federal food-cost contribution rate for the State, for the type of lunch served, as prescribed by the Secretary.

NUTRITIONAL AND OTHER PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 9. Lunches served by schools participating in the school-lunch program for which reimbursements are paid under this Act shall meet minimum nutritional requirements prescribed by the Secretary for Type A lunches on the basis of tested nutritional research. Such meals shall be served without cost or at a reduced cost to children who are determined by local school authorities to be unable to pay the full cost of the lunch. No physical segregation of or other discrimination against any child shall be made by the school because of his inability to pay. School-lunch programs under this Act shall be operated on a nonprofit basis. Each school shall, insofar as practicable, utilize in its lunch program commodities designated from time to time by the Secretary as being in abundance, either nationally or in the school area, or commodities donated by the Secretary. Commodities purchased under the authority of section 32 of the Act of August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 774) as amended, may be donated by the Secretary to schools, in accordance with the needs as determined by local school authorities, for utilization in the school-lunch program under this Act as well as to other schools carrying out nonprofit school-lunch programs and institutions authorized to receive such commodities.

SEC. 10. If, in any State, the State educational agency is not permitted by law to disburse the funds paid to it under this Act to nonprofit private schools in the State, or is not permitted by law to match Federal funds made available for use by such nonprofit private schools, the Secretary shall withhold from the funds apportioned to any such State under sections 4 and 5 of this Act the same proportion of the funds as the participation rate for all nonprofit private schools within the State is of the participation rate for the State. The Secretary shall disburse the funds so withheld directly to the nonprofit private schools within said State for the same purposes and subject to the same conditions as are authorized or required with respect to the disbursements to schools within the State by the State educational agency, including the requirement that any such payment or payments shall be matched, in the proportion specified in section 7 for such State, by funds from sources within the State expended by nonprofit private schools within the State participating in the school-lunch program under this Act. Such funds shall not be considered a part of the funds constituting the matching funds under the terms of section 7.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS AND DEFINITIONS

SEC. 11. (a) States, State educational agencies, and schools participating in the school-lunch program under this Act shall keep such accounts and records as may be necessary to enable the Secretary to determine whether the provisions of this Act are being complied with. Such accounts and records shall at all times be available for inspection and audit by representatives of the Secretary and shall be preserved for such period of time, not in excess of 5 years, as the Secretary determines is necessary.

(b) The Secretary shall incorporate, in his agreements with the State educational agencies, the express requirements under this Act with respect to the operation of the school-lunch program under this Act insofar as they may be applicable and such other provisions as in his opinion are reasonably necessary or appropriate to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

(c) In carrying out the provisions of this Act, neither the Secretary nor the State shall impose any requirement with respect to teaching personnel, curriculum, instruction, methods of instruction, and materials of instruction on any State educational agency or in any school. If a State maintains separate schools for minority and for majority races, no funds made available pursuant to this Act shall be paid or disbursed to it unless a just and equitable distribution is made within the State, for the benefit of such minority races, of funds paid to it under this Act.

(d) For the purposes of this Act—

(1) "State" includes any of the fifty States and the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam and the Virgin Islands.

(2) "State educational agency" means, as the State legislature may determine, (a) the chief State school officer (such as the State superintendent of public instruction, commissioner of education, or similar officer), or (b) a board of education controlling the State department of education; except that in the District of Columbia it shall mean the Board of Education, and except that for the period ending June 30, 1948, "State educational agency" may mean any agency or agencies within the State designated by the Governor to carry out the functions herein required of a State educational agency.

(3) "Nonprofit private school" means any private school exempt from income tax under section 101(6) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended.

(4) "Nonfood assistance" means equipment used on school premises in storing, preparing, or serving food for schoolchildren.

HOME LOAN BANK BOARD AGAINST LONG BEACH FEDERAL SAVINGS

Mr. HOSMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOSMER. Mr. Speaker, in a previous statement I pointed out the unenviable position of the Home Loan Bank Board regarding its seizure of the Long Beach Federal Savings & Loan Association. In testimony before the Government Operations Subcommittee investigating the seizure I detailed my complaints and objections. I particularly emphasized the duty of the Board's agent in charge to pay dividends to the remaining depositor-shareholders of the institution if profits justifying the dividends were earned. This has come to pass and the Board's agent has paid a dividend at the rate of 4½ percent. The Board to this point has failed to bring forth facts and circumstances justifying its seizure. This is discussed in the following editorial from a recent edition of the Long Beach Press Telegram newspaper, which circulates in the area in which Long Beach Federal is located:

WE ARE CURIOUS, TOO

Complaints have been received that news dispatches from Washington have told only one side of the controversy between the Long Beach Federal Savings & Loan Association, and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

We can but reiterate a point indicated by the dispatches, themselves. The Home Loan Board has not seen fit to make a case for itself before the congressional committee which investigated the Board's seizure of the Long Beach Loan Association headed by Thomas A. Gregory.

Perhaps the Federal Board is correct in claiming privilege not to testify, since the same evidence will be at issue in a later judicial review. That does not mean, however, that the press must refrain from reporting the activities of the investigating committee and the statements submitted to it by persons other than spokesmen of the Home Loan Board. It is a reporter's duty to report what does take place, but he certainly should not be held responsible for things that don't happen.

We certainly don't know if the Home Loan Board is justified in the drastic action it has taken and if it can substantiate the general charges of unsound management it has made. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be said that the association representatives and the critics of the Home Loan Board have made what appears to be an impressive case, and it may be that some legislative action is in order. But opinion on all such matters should be reserved until full testimony from both sides has been heard.

Meanwhile, we are just as eager as anybody else to find out what the Home Loan Board has to say in explanation of its charges and its seizure of the Long Beach Federal Savings & Loan Association.

In light of the report just issued by the Government Operations Subcommittee and the continued silence of the Board, unless it has something of real substance to say regarding its actions, it should recede from its position and restore the institution to its management. Otherwise it will be subject to additional charges of delay, procrastination and ineptness.

THE NATIONAL SPACE PROGRAM AND AERONAUTICAL RESEARCH

Mr. BROOKS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, in some quarters, from time to time, the suggestion is made that the national space program and aeronautical research should be put under a joint committee of the Congress. While the suggestion may seem belated, it is persistent enough to call for a reply.

Proposals for a joint space committee were carefully considered by the 85th Congress, but rejected. In fact, the bill creating the National Aeronautics and Space Administration—H.R. 12575—as reported to the House by the Select Committee on Astronautics and Space Exploration, of which I was the ranking majority member, provided for a Joint Committee on Aeronautics and Outer Space. This provision was eliminated on the House floor. In the following month, separate standing committees were established in the two Houses.

Time has justified the action of the House and the wisdom of the Speaker in preferring separate committees to a single joint committee. In their year and a half of life, both committees have made impressive records of accomplishment. To speak only of the House committee, of which I am chairman, it has successfully handled a tremendous volume of work, involving a number of difficult and often technical subjects. During the 86th Congress, the House Committee, in addition to legislation, has conducted 57 investigations, issued 45 reports, and held 262 days of hearings. Without exception, I believe, its work has been both worthwhile and constructive. This is a record of which the Committee and the Congress can be proud.

Joint legislative committees are sometimes considered as running counter to the bicameral system. In a bicameral legislature, it is certainly difficult to coordinate the work of a joint committee with the order of legislative business in the two Houses.

An even greater difficulty arises from the fact that the House Committee on Science and Astronautics and the corresponding committee in the other body differ in their jurisdictions. That is, the House committee is responsible not only for astronautics and aeronautical research but for science scholarships and for scientific research and development; and it oversees not only the National Aeronautics and Space Administration but the Bureau of Standards and the National Science Foundation. To say the least, it would be difficult to combine such different jurisdictions.

House Resolution 580 of the 85th Congress, establishing the Committee on Science and Astronautics, was a clear recognition of the unity of science and its all-pervading effect on modern life. Today, 2 years later, I believe the record shows that the committee has effectively coordinated scientific activities, particularly basic research and development, as well as the national space program. Broad consideration by Congress of science programs was recognized as a pressing need 2 years ago; today, it is more vital than ever.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 59 minutes a.m.) the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 8 o'clock and 50 minutes a.m.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. McGown, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12311) entitled "An act to extend for 1 year the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a concurrent resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S. Con. Res. 112. Concurrent resolution providing for an adjournment of the two Houses from July 2, 1960, to August 8, 1960.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 712. Concurrent resolution authorizing the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate to sign enrolled bills.

BILLS APPROVED AFTER ADJOURNMENT

The President of the United States, subsequent to the adjournment of the House of Representatives until August 15, 1960, transmitted to the Clerk of the House a list of House bills disapproved, together with his reasons for such actions, as follows:

On July 6, 1960:

JUAN D. QUINTOS ET AL.

H.R. 1516. I am withholding my approval from H.R. 1516, for the relief of Juan D. Quintos, Jaime Hernandez, Delfin Buencamino, Soledad Gomez, Nieves G. Argonza, Felididad G. Sarayba, Carmen Vda de Gomez, Perfecta B. Quintos, and Bienvenida San Agustin.

The bill would waive the applicable statute of limitations and confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear the claims of these individuals for losses of jewelry, coins, relics, and currency which were somehow included in one of four large wooden boxes delivered to the United States High Commissioner to the Philippines by the Philippine National Bank in response to the Commissioner's direction, in December 1941, that the bank deliver to him "all cash reserves, bullion, negotiable securities, and other negotiable papers held by your bank, or held by you in trust for others." The purpose of the directive was to prevent such items from falling into the hands of the enemy who, at that moment, was invading the islands. When the property of these claimants was discovered, it was turned over to a representative of the Philippine Government, who rejected suggestions of United States Army officers that it be sent out on an American submarine. Instead, he voluntarily placed the property in a safe at Corregidor where it was confiscated by the Japanese. From these facts it is apparent that the possibility of a valid claim against the United States is very remote.

More importantly, these claimants had ample opportunity to present their claims in a timely manner. Under the applicable statute of limitations, they had until December 1947—2 years after the end of the war—to file suit in the Court of Claims. They had 5 months after the Treasury Department, on July 25, 1947, advised that there was no statute or appropriation permitting the administrative settlement of such claims. They waited, however, for 4 years, until 1951, before petitioning the Court of Claims.

Nothing in the record justifies special treatment for these claimants, particularly when it is remembered that many others filed suit against the United States in the Court of Claims for damages arising out of incidents in the Philippines during the war years and had their cases dismissed because of the expiration of the statute of limitations.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 6, 1960.

On July 7, 1960:

SAM J. BUZZANCA

H.R. 6712. I am withholding my approval from H.R. 6712, a bill "For the relief of Sam J. Buzzanca."

Mr. Buzzanca, at a Federal tax sale in 1954, purchased certain real estate which had an estimated market value of $21,000, but which was subject to a mortgage prior in time to the Federal tax lien. It was announced at the tax sale that principal and interest in the amount of $8,320 was due under this prior mortgage. The real estate was sold to Mr. Buzzanca for $8,100—far less than the amount of the Federal tax lien which exceeded the market value of the property.

Two months later the holder of the first mortgage, who also had acquired whatever rights the heirs of the delinquent taxpayer and former owner had in the property, successfully sued Mr. Buzzanca to obtain possession of the property. Although the United States was not a party to this action, the District Director for the area did render informal assistance to Mr. Buzzanca. On appeal, the Supreme Court of Alabama affirmed.

Mr. Buzzanca's claim for relief appears to rest on the contention that the first mortgagee obtained a judgment for possession of the property because the tax sale to Mr. Buzzanca was defective and did not convey to Mr. Buzzanca the former owner's interest.

Internal Revenue Service records reveal no defect in the seizure and sale. This being so, Mr. Buzzanca has no ground for complaint against the United States. Because the existence of the first mortgage was made known at the time, the tax sale did not purport to convey rights superior to a valid first mortgage.

The United States cannot and does not attempt to warrant or defend title to property seized and sold under the internal revenue laws. No warranty is available to a purchaser at a tax sale and a deed is not a warranty of the title conveyed. The right, title, and interest conveyed is derivative, and the purchaser acquires only the interest of the delinquent taxpayer. To compel the United States to warrant and defend the title to all property sold by it for taxes would be costly and inadvisable.

For these reasons I cannot, on the facts at hand, approve this bill for it would create a precedent that would encourage dissatisfied purchasers at Federal tax sales to ask Congress to underwrite their losses and guarantee their titles.

Were Mr. Buzzanca, however, to adduce direct evidence establishing incontrovertibly that the tax deed in question was defective, I would of course be willing to sign a similar bill subsequently enacted.

On July 14, 1960:

MARGARET P. COPIN

H.R. 4546. I am withholding my approval from H.R. 4546, for the relief of Margaret P. Copin.

This bill would direct that its beneficiary be credited with a 20-year service period for purposes of civil service retirement annuity, payable commencing October 1, 1959.

This claimant, during three periods beginning in August 1920 and ending in June 1949, was on the employment rolls of the Treasury Department for a total time of 20 years and 29 days. This included, however, 7 months and 21 days of leave without pay in calendar year 1922. Her actual service therefore, totals only 19 years, 5 months and 8 days. Nevertheless, in computing Mrs. Copin's length of service for retirement annuity purposes, the normal rules of the law were applied; namely, free credit of 6 months of leave without pay taken in 1932 and exclusion of the excess amount.

Despite the credit of 6 months, the claimant still lacks 22 days of the 20 years of creditable service which would have given her the right to an immediate reduced annuity beginning October 1, 1958, when disability annuity payments theretofore received were terminated pursuant to a finding that she was reemployable. Instead, her status is that of a deferred annuitant, and retirement annuity will not be payable until March 1, 1964, after she has attained 62 years of age. The difference in the total value of the two annuities, based on life expectancy, is $4,200, which would be, in effect, a gratuity from the Federal Government.

The record on H.R. 4546 discloses no valid justification for the favored position the bill would accord this claimant. To confer such a preferential advantage on one individual participant in the retirement program would be highly discriminatory and contrary to the principles of fair play and equality of treatment which are basic to sound personnel administration.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 14, 1960.

On July 14, 1960:

BERNALILLO COUNTY, N. MEX.

H.R. 11545. I am withholding my approval from H.R. 11545, to amend the act of October 31, 1949, with respect to payments to Bernalillo County, N. Mex., for furnishing hospital care for certain Indians.

A 1949 law authorized the Government to contribute $1,500,000 toward construction of a hospital in Bernalillo County upon Government donated land. In return, the county must make available, when required, at least 100 beds for the care of eligible Indians. Further, the cost of caring for Indians admitted to the hospital was to be paid by the United States and, as an experiment, the Government undertook to guarantee the county a payment at least equal to the cost of operating 80 percent of the beds reserved for Indians irrespective of the number actually hospitalized.

The minimum guaranty provision, previously twice extended and now expired as of June 30, 1960, would be extended for still another year under H.R. 11545.

Ordinarily in such cases the United States pays for Indian care on the basis of actual hospitalization. Accordingly, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, in reporting to the Congress in 1957 pursuant to the original law, recommended that the experimental 80 percent minimum guaranty be permitted to expire. The Congress nevertheless extended the guaranty provision for another 3 years.

Funds for contract hospital care should be available for expenditure wherever the health needs of Indian patients so require, and no portion of them should be mandatorily tied to a single contract facility without regard to actual need or use. Moreover, because other Government service contracts for Indian care do not include a minimum payment guaranty, it would be highly inequitable to continue this provision solely for the Bernalillo County Hospital.

Finally, the completion of other facilities now under construction will in all likelihood reduce the number of Indian patients at Bernalillo Hospital and the bill would thus mean unnecessary expense to the Government and without any corresponding advantage, either to the Government or to this program.

For these reasons, I am unable to approve this bill.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 14, 1960.

STATEMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT

The President of the United States, subsequent to the adjournment of the House of Representatives until August 15, 1960, transmitted to the Clerk of the House the following statements:

On July 12, 1960:

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION, 1961

I have today approved H.R. 11776, the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1961.

In enacting this law the Congress refused to provide recommended funds which would have enabled the General Services Administration, at small cost, to include fallout shelters in certain appropriate new and existing Federal buildings. In fact, by a general provision, the law actually precludes the construction of fallout shelters in Government-owned or leased buildings unless specifically authorized.

It is an aspect of the Federal Government's policy in this area to provide leadership by example. The incorporation of fallout shelters in appropriate new and existing Federal buildings is intended to stimulate State and local governments and the public to undertake shelter projects on their own initiative.

State Governors attending a recent White House meeting on civil defense unanimously agreed that providing protection from fallout was an essential requirement of national policy. Last year, in Puerto Rico, and again this year in Montana, the Governors' Conference reached the same conclusion.

The Congress accordingly should appropriate the omitted funds when it convenes again in August. Such positive action would be in the best interests of our national security.

On July 14, 1960:

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ALIENS

I have today approved House Joint Resolution 397, to enable the United States to participate in the resettlement of certain refugees, and for other purposes, because of its general merit and the urgent need to accomplish the purposes of the measure. Under this provision, the special authority of the Attorney General to parole into the United States certain refugees could be terminated upon the adoption of a simple resolution to that effect by either House of Congress. The Attorney General has advised me that there is a serious question as to whether this provision is constitutional. Nevertheless, in view of the short period for which this power is given and the improbability that the issue will arise, it is believed that it would be better to defer a determination of the effect of such possible action until it is taken.

OATH OF OFFICE

The oath of office required by the sixth article of the Constitution of the United States, and as provided by section 2 of the act of May 13, 1884 (23 Stat. 22), to be administered to Members and Delegates of the House of Representatives, the text of which is carried in section 1757 of title XIX of the Revised Statutes of the United States and being as follows:

"I, A B, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter. So help me God."

has been subscribed to in person and filed in duplicate with the Clerk of the House of Representatives by the following Member of the 86th Congress, pursuant to Public Law 412 of the 80th Congress entitled "An act to amend section 30 of the Revised Statutes of the United States" (U.S.C., title 2, sec. 25), approved February 18, 1948: ROY A. TAYLOR, 12th District, North Carolina.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Baseball Under Antitrust Laws

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DENNIS CHAVEZ
OF NEW MEXICO
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter written by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] together with a letter from former Senator Edwin C. Johnson, pertaining to the Kefauver baseball bill.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 25, 1960.

The Honorable DENNIS CHAVEZ,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR DENNIS: Like you, last week I received a telegram from Mr. Ford Frick, commissioner of the two major baseball leagues, and a few days later received from him a letter accompanied by a brief in which he urges the Senate to support the present major league baseball monopoly by defeating the Kefauver bill, which would place baseball under the antitrust laws.

May I take the liberty of writing you this letter to indicate the reasons why I deeply feel that Mr. Frick is terribly mistaken and that the Congress should now seize the opportunity of turning baseball back to the Nation.

When a motion was made in the Judiciary Committee to strike out title II of the bill and put "baseball" in title I it was defeated by a substantial vote because a large majority of the committee realized that if such a policy were followed it would be a recognition by the Senate of the monopolistic conditions which the owners of the 16 major league teams now maintain in this country. It seems strange to me that Mr. Frick should urge this policy, because two of the National League teams under his jurisdiction, namely the Brooklyn Dodgers and the New York Giants, moved 2 years ago to Los Angeles and San Francisco, where they found extraordinary support from the baseball fans of the West and from the people of Los Angeles and San Francisco. By making this move the Brooklyn and New York teams demonstrated that the people of the Nation, who have never had major league teams within their areas, were eagerly awaiting the opportunity to support one. This is the situation that exists in the United States now outside of the comparatively narrow area in which the present major leagues had been operating.

By voting for the Kefauver bill the Senate can extend the opportunity to the people of the United States to establish major league baseball from coast to coast and from north to south.

The concept of Mr. Frick and his associates in the 16 major league teams that they can restrict major league baseball to the States and cities that they choose is in my judgment utterly wrong. The right to establish major league teams belongs to free independent owners who have money to invest and cities whose fans will support new major league teams with modern stadiums like those at Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Minor baseball leagues are not, as Mr. Frick would have us believe, beneficiaries of the major league monopoly. They are its victims, and so, also, are the baseball players who are held on farm teams or on major league benches until the present baseball monopolists are willing to release them.

I remember well the time when the old National League, like the present two major leagues, tried to prevent the organization of the American League because of their false concept that the whole Nation was not baseball minded. Ban Johnson had to fight with skill and courage to bring the American League into existence. We have a larger nation now than we had then. Our population has expanded; there are more baseball fans than there were then. Let us give them the opportunity to attend major league games personally.

To repeat, let us give major league baseball back to the Nation by supporting the Kefauver bill.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY.

EDWIN C. JOHNSON,
Washington, D.C., June 27, 1960.

Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR DENNY: I am sorry to bother you again about the team-sports bill but there is so much confusion regarding what this bill will and will not do that I feel obligated to do so. Title I of the bill deals with football, basketball and hockey and title II with baseball. Under Supreme Court decisions baseball has a different status from the others and its vast empire of minor leagues requires a different approach from other team sports.

In football a new league has no difficulty getting under way. That is positively not true of baseball. In football enough talented players to man a new league graduate from the Nation's colleges each year. In baseball practically all the professional baseball players are under contract to the two major leagues, directly or indirectly.

The purpose of title II is to make it possible for additional American communities to have major league baseball if they want it. But it is practically impossible for another baseball league to materialize without legislation unless it goes "outlaw." Many American cities are no longer satisfied with minor league ball. They want topflight baseball and they could have it if it were not for the present monopoly in baseball talent.

The Judiciary Committees of the House and Senate have held numerous hearings on this situation. Previously the House acted, but the Senate has not. The latest hearing was held in the Senate Judiciary Antitrust Subcommittee on S. 3483, the Kefauver bill, on May 19–20, 1960.

President Cronin of the American League and President Giles of the National League with their staffs of attorneys were present and their commissioner testified against the Kefauver bill. It was an excellent hearing and many points were clarified In an effort to compose differences, the subcommittee rewrote title II. This revised bill is before you and it is a good, sound bill.

To clarify various provisions of the first and second versions of the Kefauver bill, it would be well to review the Frick testimony, point by point:

"Mr. FRICK. Under this bill (the first version of the Kefauver bill) limiting us to 60 players * * * we could support only 9 minor leagues. Yet gentlemen, in order to operate three major leagues, experience has shown us and figures prove that you need 36 minor leagues to accomplish that end" (p. 94, hearings, May 19–20, 1960).

The Judiciary Subcommittee followed Mr. Frick's prudent advice and struck from the bill the limitation of 60 players. Please note what Mr. Frick says about needing 36 minor leagues when the Continental Major League gets under way. At present the existing majors have 21 leagues and the Continental has the West Carolina league, but they will need 14 more minor leagues. That evidence makes the argument that the Continental League will destroy the minor leagues ridiculous.

"Mr. FRICK. I cite section 203(2). This section provides—'In the event a player is drafted by more than one major league club, the election as to which club the drafted player's contract shall be assigned shall remain and be vested in the drafted player' " (p. 98, hearings, May 19–20, 1960).

This provision was inserted in the bill by Senator KEFAUVER to protect a player drafted from one of the existing major leagues by the Continental League if he didn't want to play in the Continental League. But Mr. Frick said this would defeat the basic purpose of the draft rule and the Judiciary Subcommittee struck it from the bill.

"Mr. FRICK. I agree more with what Mr. Rickey said about the unrestricted draft than I do with Senator JOHNSON on the player limitation. The player limitation, I think, is harmful. But I go back again that I want to emphasize and reemphasize that the worst part of that bill is not that. It is 204" (p. 126, hearings, May 19–20, 1960).

The Judiciary Subcommittee thereupon very wisely struck both the player limitation and section 204 from the bill as urged by Mr. Frick.

"Mr. FRICK. I have never fought the unrestricted draft on my record before this Congress. I have recommended it. I am not fighting that. I didn't say we had it now. I said I would favor an unrestricted draft. That is not the part of the bill I am objecting to" (p. 125, hearings, May 19–20, 1960).

"Mr. DIXON. Would you be content with this bill if the limitation were limited solely to 40 ballplayers and an unrestricted draft of all other ballplayers every year?"

"Mr. FRICK. Yes" (p. 126, hearings, May 19–20, 1960).

"Mr. DIXON. "Wouldn't this be beneficial to a team like Washington if we had something like you suggested, and I assume that is the reason you have recommended it, that there be an absolute unrestricted draft every year?"

"Mr. FRICK. Yes, I think it would help a lot of clubs. I think it would help all clubs.

"Mr. DIXON. I can readily see why it would make the game more competitive" (p. 130, hearings, May 19–20, 1960).

The Judiciary Subcommittee accepted Mr. Frick's views and inserted in the bill the unrestricted draft of all players controlled directly or indirectly by the major leagues except the 40 players on the roster of each major league club.

The presidents of the National and American Leagues and their counsel were in the hearing room and heard the Frick testimony and did not take exception to any of it. This was a complete victory for Mr. Frick and the bill was greatly improved by the suggestions he voiced. Nevertheless, Mr. Frick is still fighting title II of S. 3483.

The bill revised by the Judiciary Subcommittee also includes the Senator Hart amendment reading:

"That the unrestricted draft shall not apply to any player directly or indirectly owned or controlled by any major league baseball club at the time of passage of this Act until such player has completed 4 years in organized professional baseball."

That provision makes it doubly certain that no violence be done to the present major league clubs' property rights in player contracts. The Judiciary Committee has done everything possible to make S. 3483 absolutely fair to the two existing major leagues and the minor leagues.

"Mr. DIXON. I assume you would welcome exemption, as to the reserve clause, which is granted in section 203?

"Mr. FRICK. That is right.

"Mr. DIXON. You think that would be highly desirable?

"Mr. FRICK. That is right" (p. 114, hearings, May 19–20, 1960).

It seems to me that the Frick testimony and the action by the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee in response to it should be specifically called to the attention of every Senator. America wants and should have more major league baseball. If there is more major league baseball, there must be more minor league baseball, as Mr. Frick has stated I am authorized to pledge to you that when the Continental League gets into operation as a major league, it will sponsor one-third of the burden of providing minor league baseball.

Most sincerely,

ED C. JOHNSON.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE H. MAHON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 12326, the public works appropriation bill for fiscal year 1961, recently approved by the House, permits a modest increase in the sum allowed for maintenance of Federal gravesites in the Congressional Cemetery and, since many of the present Members may not be informed as to the Federal interest in this cemetery which prompts this annual appropriation, I would like to take this occasion to furnish a brief statement of the pertinent facts.

EARLY BEGINNINGS OF THE CEMETERY

In 1795, before the Federal City came into being, the Maryland Legislature authorized the establishment of Washington Parish whereupon the Christ Church Washington Parish was incorporated, vestrymen elected, and a rector appointed. In those early days, the transportation of the remains of deceased persons more than a short distance was not feasible and the need for a place of burial in the new Capital for Senators and Representatives who might pass away while attending sessions of the Congress was early recognized. Certain influential members of the new church undertook to acquire an appropriate tract of ground subject to an agreement that when the graveyard, with its improvements, shall be unencumbered of debt, they would assign over all the right and title of said ground not subscribed for to the vestry of Washington Parish. By March 24, 1812, the cemetery was free of debt and at a meeting held by the vestry Easter Monday, March 30, 1812, the vestry accepted the said burial ground, with the deed, plan, list of subscribers, proceedings, accounts, and transfer of ground.

GRAVES RESERVED FOR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

Shortly thereafter, the vestry reserved for the interment of Members of Congress 100 sites. In 1820, this reservation was extended to include heads of Departments of the General Government or their families, or the families of Members of the Congress.

Thereafter, until the establishment of the Arlington National Cemetery, additional sites in Congressional Cemetery were, from time to time, reserved for Government use and, in return, the Government appropriated moneys, labor, and material toward the upkeep and improvement of the cemetery property. For instance, the act of May 31, 1832 (4 Stat. L. 520), appropriated $1,500 toward the erection of a keeper's house, for planting trees, boundary stones, and otherwise improving the burial ground allotted to the interment of Members of Congress and other officers of the General Government; the act of August 10, 1846 (9 Stat. L. 93), appropriated $500 for repairs to congressional burying ground, rendered necessary by the late freshet, and so forth.

FURTHER LEGISLATIVE ACTION

The act of July 25, 1848, authorized the Commissioner of Public Buildings of the city of Washington to sell so much of Hospital Square not exceeding 6 acres as the vestry might choose to purchase for an addition to the cemetery and provided further that the Government of the United States shall be entitled to purchase from said vestry, and to occupy as a burial ground, for Members of Congress and such other members of the U.S. Government as the President shall deem it expedient and proper to allow, a portion of the land hereinbefore authorized to be sold.

It is not surprising that this cemetery has been known almost from its establishment as Congressional Cemetery and is usually so designated in acts of Congress and by the public generally. It is often referred to as our first national cemetery and is perhaps our only true national cemetery due to the fact that Arlington and all other so-called national cemeteries are dedicated primarily for interment of the remains of those who have served in our Armed Forces, whereas Congressional Cemetery is primarily civilian.

PRESIDENTS INTERRED IN CEMETERY

From the time of its establishment until the close of the War Between the States, the remains of 3 Presidents, at least 2 Vice Presidents, possibly 75 Members of the Senate and House of Representatives were carried to and interred at Congressional, as well as those of many high-ranking administrative and military officers of the Government.

The three Presidents who died in Washington during this period were William Henry Harrison, Zachary Taylor, and John Quincy Adams, although Adams was a Member of the House at the time of his death in the Capitol, February 23, 1848. The remains of these Presidents and of a number of Senators and Representatives were later removed to home cemeteries, as were those of Dolly Madison, but there still remain in Congressional the remains of 14 Senators and 42 Members of the House of Representatives, including those of Vice President Elbridge Gerry (who also served as a Delegate and a Representative from Massachusetts) and Senator James Burrill, Jr., of Rhode Island, great-grandfather of Senator THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN, now representing the same State.

GRAVE MARKINGS

It early became the custom for the Congress to erect on these graves imposing sandstone "cenotaphs" according to a design said to have been created by Federal Architect Latrobe (whose child's remains are in Congressional) and many of these were erected in memory of Senators and Representatives whose remains were not interred at Congressional or were interred there only briefly. This custom terminated pursuant to criticism of these sandstone memorials by Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, with the act of May 23, 1876 (ch. 103, 19 Stat. 54; 2 U.S.C. 51), directing the Sergeant at Arms of each House to have a monument erected "of granite" only "whenever any deceased Senator or Member * * * shall be actually interred in the Congressional Cemetery." Since that time, there have been only three such interments, Representative Roach, of Maryland, in 1902, Senator Thurston, of Nebraska, in 1916, and Represenative Tilman B. Parks, of Arkansas, in 1950. It may eventually be found desirable to remove all of these sandstone memorials and (a) replace those over actual remains with more pleasing granite memorials, and (b) substitute for those that are merely honorary a single suitable memorial of modest proportions in memory of all Senators and Representatives who died in office.

TEXANS INTERRED IN CEMETERY

As a Texan I have been interested to note the following further information about the cemetery.

In January 1851 the remains of Representative David S. Kauffman, one of the original Texas Representatives in the Congress, were interred in Congressional but were removed to Austin in March 1932. In July 1857, upon the death of Senator Thomas Rusk of Texas, a cenotaph was erected and still stands at Congressional in his honor; and in June 1858 the remains of Senator James Pinckney Henderson, who served as the first Governor of Texas and succeeded Senator Rusk, were interred in Congressional and removed to Austin in 1930.

LISTING OF CERTAIN GRAVES

I am appending hereto a list of all Senators and Representatives and of a few of the other official personnel whose remains are interred in this historic cemetery, showing in most cases the location of the grave and the date of death:

Captive Nations Week

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUGH J. ADDONIZIO
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. ADDONIZIO. Mr. Speaker, at the end of the last war calamities and tragedies on a scale unprecedented followed each other in quick succession. Even before the victory of democracies over Axis totalitarianism was assured, Communist totalitarianism had already shown its grasping and greedy hands by occupying and annexing a number of hitherto independent countries in Europe and thus enslaving their inhabitants.

As the result of the Soviet Union's treacherously aggressive policy there are today nine nations which are captives of the Soviet Union, and a part of another nation shares the same fate. These countries, between the Bay of Finland and the Black Sea, include Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, East Germany, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Bulgaria, Albania, and Rumania. Peoples in some of these countries have been suffering under Communist totalitarian dictatorships, imposed by the Kremlin and maintained with the aid of the Red army, for two decades. Thus Estonians, Latvians, and Lithuanians have endured the oppressive Communist rule longer than peoples in other countries in Eastern Europe. Their countries have been annexed to the Soviet Union, and as far as the Soviet Union is concerned there are no such independent and sovereign entities as Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania.

The other countries, including East Germany, are called—mistakenly—independent and sovereign. In the West these countries are denominated as Soviet satellites, but actually they may be best described as captive countries, and their inhabitants captive nations. In their foreign and domestic policies, also in their political, economic, educational, and social structure, the governments of these countries and their helpless subjects are compelled to follow the Kremlin line. No deviation from that Communist line is tolerated or permitted, and any infraction on the part of any government is severely punished. Thus, the peoples and governments in the Baltic countries, in East Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Albania, Bulgaria, and Rumania are captives of the Kremlin in the real sense of the word. They have been sealed off from the free West by the Iron Curtain deliberately and most effectively imposed by the Kremlin between East and West. The peoples of these countries, the Germans in 1953, the Hungarians and the Poles in 1956, tried to free themselves from the clutches of Communist tyranny, or at least to loosen its grip, but unfortunately by themselves their valiant efforts did not succeed and could not have succeeded against the almost unequalled might of the ruthless Red army.

The people of this country and their Government have always shown utmost sympathy with the lot of these unhappy and unfortunate peoples, the captive nations. Their fate has been, and continues to be, a serious concern of our Government, Then, too, these captive nations feel that they have a claim upon us, upon our sympathy and humanitarian feelings. We are fully aware of our sacred moral responsibilities toward these peoples. As proof of that awareness, last year a joint resolution was enacted in Congress for the establishment of a Captive Nations Week, as an annual observance. The Presidential proclamation issued on July 17 designated that the third week of July of each year should be set aside as the Captive Nations Week. In making this sincere move the Congress and the President were not only carrying out the wishes, and the mandate, of the people of this country, but they were also following the firm and forthright policy of this country in championing the cause of freedom and justice. We have always felt and still feel that the cause of the captive nations is a righteous cause and a just cause, one of freedom and humanity. I am indeed glad that the Captive Nations Week was made a national observance week and of course am delighted to join hands with all friends in observing it.

Lassie Leaguers, Inc.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HARRY FLOOD BYRD
OF VIRGINIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement made by me in regard to Lassie Leaguers, Inc.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LASSIE LEAGUERS, INC.

(By Senator HARRY F. BYRD, of Virginia)

I have noted that in the past few days, the Senator from Massachusetts, Senator SALTONSTALL, and the Senator from Pennsylvania, Senator CLARK, have been complimentary to the fine work of Lassie Leaguers, Inc.

This is an organization to help provide wholesome recreation for girls between the ages of 10 and 15 years. The organization was originated in Pennsylvania, and it now has its headquarters in Massachusetts.

I should like to join the Senators from those States in their support of this organization. It is franchised in Virginia, and I have been informed that the Lassie League activities mean much to the respective communities. I hope the league will grow.

The league is most widely known for its promotion of a new game called "lassieball," which I understand to be a game similar to baseball but modified for participation by girls 10 to 15 years of age.

Wholesome activities such as this for our young people is a project worthy of national support.

House Resolution 366

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES G. FULTON
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the House I am calling to the attention of my colleagues House Resolution 366 which I introduced August 27, 1959:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives of the United States that:

(1) The House Office Building, commonly known as the Old House Office Building, be renamed for and dedicated to the Honorable Joseph Gurney Cannon of Illinois, who served as Speaker of the House of Representatives when the building was constructed under authority of the Act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat. 1083, 1113);

(2) The new House of Representatives Office Building, commonly known as the New House Office Building, be renamed for and dedicated to the Honorable Nicholas Longworth of Ohio, who served as Speaker of the House of Representatives when the building was constructed under authority of the Act of January 10, 1929 (45 Stat. 1071); and

(3) The Additional House Office Building, commonly known as the Third House Office Building, be named for and dedicated to the Honorable SAM RAYBURN of Texas, who is serving as Speaker of the House of Representatives while its construction is in progress under authority of the Additional House Office Building Act of 1955 (69 Stat. 41).

Keenotes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ELIZABETH KEE
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mrs. KEE. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I include a copy of my newsletter released today.

KEENOTES

(By Representative ELIZABETH KEE)

The other day I had the unique experience of voting against a proposal which earlier I had endorsed and fully expected to support.

The legislation in question authorized the United States to invest almost $400 million in the International Development Association—a new international agency designed to make investment capital available to the underdeveloped areas of the world.

In effect, this is a "distressed areas" bill on a worldwide scale. It may be a sound approach to the urgent need for providing capital for new nations to use in building necessary business and industrial facilities.

I voted against it because it is part of a growing trend which seems to establish a "double standard." We seem to be willing to undertake programs abroad which are turned down at home.

The President vetoed economic redevelopment legislation that is urgently needed in West Virginia and other States. But the President put the full influence of his administration behind the new international agency to do the same thing on a worldwide scale.

I felt compelled to vote against IDA as a protest against this "double standard."

VETERANS' HOME LOAN PROGRAM EXTENDED

I voted for legislation to extend for 2 years a program for guaranteed and direct home loans for veterans. The direct loans are urgently needed in small towns and rural areas where guaranteed loans are simply not available.

The legislation makes $300 million available during the 2 years for loans to veterans. This will meet only a part of the anticipated need. The hope is that during the next 2 years mortgage money will become available at interest rates veterans can afford and thus will do away with the need of legislation such as this.

COAL RESEARCH LEGISLATION CLEARS SENATE

The Senate approved legislation setting up a new coal research program in the Department of the Interior. Earlier in the session the House passed similar legislation.

The bill has been rewritten to meet objections raised last year when the President vetoed a research bill along the same lines. There would be absolutely no justification for the President refusing to sign this bill.

We need urgently to develop new uses for coal and to make coal more competitive with other fuels. Research is an indispensable tool in this campaign. The petroleum industry spends about $360 million a year on research. Only $17 million goes into coal research.

It is significant that all segments of the industry carried on a united and determined campaign in favor of this legislation.

RECESS CATCHES EVERYONE BY SURPRISE

The announcement that Congress would recess and reconvene in August, after the conventions, was a big surprise to just about everyone in Washington. We had been making good progress on a large backlog of bills. But the leadership felt some of the bills, highly controversial in nature, should have more deliberate consideration than they could possibly receive in the closing hours of this session. So a recess will be taken. I hope that the people of the country will benefit by this action.

Views on Milk Marketing

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT E. COOK
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, at an open public meeting on June 10, 1960, a group of milk producers presented their views on Federal milk marketing orders to Congressman ROBERT W. LEVERING, 17th District of Ohio, and myself. The meeting was held at the Ashtabula County Court House at Jefferson, Ohio. There were approximately 120 people in attendance, including milk producers, farm machinery dealers, retailers of dairy products, and contract haulers of milk.

It was the general conclusion of those present that milk marketing orders serve a useful purpose in the dairy industry. However, the view was expressed that certain changes should be made in existing law to better carry out the original intent of the legislation. Some of the suggested changes in the existing law are as follows:

First. Abolition of "bloc voting" on amendments to the Federal order. The practice of producer cooperatives to vote their total membership for or against an amendment was criticized as being an undemocratic method of voting. Because of this method, the views of nonmembers have little opportunity to prevail.

Second. Abolition of marketwide pool. Producers said this type of marketing allows out-of-State producers to share in a high-class, one-utilization pool, thereby lowering the price to producers within the market area.

Third. Revision of the pricing formula used under milk marketing orders. It was stated the procurer price is arrived at by a complicated manner which he cannot follow or understand. The view was further expressed that the information used by the administration in arriving at the minimum price for milk in a marketing area should be made available to the participating producers upon request.

Fourth. Revision of the milk marketing order to permit farmers to produce milk by class of utilization. It was the consensus of opinion of the farmers present that a new plan be devised whereby the producer would produce milk to be priced and sold by class rather than the present plan of permitting the needs of procurers determine the class of farmers' milk and the subsequent price received by the producer. One producer pointed out that with only one cow he could still be shipping milk classed as surplus or class three. Most producers favor a production quota system which would stabilize supply to processors.

Fifth. Revision of the order to permit rejection of an amendment to the order without rejection of the entire order.

Sixth. Amend or repeal the milk marketing law so that the producer through cooperatives has the right to bargain collectively for fair prices for dairy products. A producer introduced a chart showing that during the period 1952–60 the corporate earning of the processors increased while the prices paid to the producer has decreased.

A retail sales outlet owner who has sold over 2 million quarts of milk stated that, since 1953, the price of milk to him has increased 4 cents per quart and the price paid to producers has decreased 64 cents per hundredweight.

A producer stated that as an operator of a family-type farm, he had doubled the size of his herd, thinking that this was the solution to lower prices. In his words, he stated, "I found out I was wrong in my thinking."

In the opinion of Congressman LEVERING and myself, this meeting was a very worthwhile event in that it gave the individual farmer-producer of dairy products an opportunity to give his views to his Congressman and, in addition, to a member of the House of Representatives Agricultural Committee and the Subcommittee on Dairy and Poultry. It is sincerely felt that this type of grassroots opinion will be of assistance to the Members of Congress in enacting future needed farm legislation.

Captive Nations Week

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DOMINICK V. DANIELS
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Union's rise to the status of a great world power is the most striking phenomenon in contemporary world history, and its treacherous acts, committed in the name of world communism, constitutes one of the blackest pages in all history. One of these acts was the capture and enslavement of nearly 100 million innocent and helpless people in Eastern Europe. Since the end of the last war, under the guise of people's democracies, the Soviet Union has made captives all peoples between the Baltic and Black Seas. They have been sealed off from the free world by the Iron Curtain imposed upon them. And all efforts on the part of the West to see these peoples freed from Communist dictatorship have been of no avail. No government in the West will relinquish the hope of seeing these peoples freed. The people of this country will continue their efforts to that end, and the observance of the Captive Nations Week, as enacted by Congress and proclaimed by the President, is an eloquent testimony of their desire to see justice done to these millions of innocent and helpless people.

The Tariff Commission's Cotton Report

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. HUGH Q. ALEXANDER

OF NORTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the decision of the Tariff Commission this week refusing to invoke the safeguards of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act is further evidence of the policy of this administration and the Department of State to sacrifice the American textile workers and cotton farmers to foreign textile mills which continue to flood this country with cheap textiles which are swamping the American markets.

The failure of this administration to properly safeguard the American textile industry is reflected in the fact that in the past 10 years over 700 mills have been liquidated in this country and some 325,000 workers have lost their jobs because of the competition of foreign manufactured products entering the United States.

The imports of cotton goods are so large in volume that in 1959 they were equivalent to some 350,000 bales of raw cotton.

It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, in view of the recent rebuff of our President at the hands of the Japanese, and the failure of the Tariff Commission and the administration to protect American industry, the time is fast approaching when the Congress must take the initiative and enact legislation which will assure protection of our American industry.

When the Congress reconvenes I shall join with other of my colleagues who are interested in this problem in the hope that effective legislation may be enacted which will put a stopgap to the sacrifice of the textile and other American industries.

THE TARIFF COMMISSION'S COTTON REPORT

The cottongrowers of the United States and the American textile industry which serves them were shocked and dismayed by the report of the Tariff Commission released on the afternoon of June 27 with a majority finding—by a vote of 4 to 2—that the rapidly increasing imports of cotton products were having no adverse effect on the cotton export subsidy program. The majority opinion concluded that there was no basis for favorable recommendation of relief under section 22 against these imports.

It seems incredible that there could be any possible theory upon which the record of these accelerating and damaging imports could be reviewed without arriving at an immediate conviction that the Department of Agriculture programs for the protection of cotton and cottongrowers were being completely frustrated and destroyed.

However, the most shocking and dismaying feature of the report is the disclosure by the majority opinion that such majority considered the Commission was prevented, by Presidential directive, from considering the whole cotton program. The majority concluded that they were limited to a consideration of the cotton export subsidy program and could not even treat it as a part of the total program to which it is so intimately and closely related.

This limitation was the basis for the conclusion that imports of cotton articles could adversely affect the cotton export program only if such imports reduced the exports of American raw cotton. Examining that question, in the light of the limitation, the Commission concluded that the more foreign made cotton goods imported into the United States, the greater would be the consumption of cotton in the foreign mills, and the greater the potential market for American cotton exported to those foreign mills. In other words the Commission in effect said that if all cotton goods consumed in the United States were to be imported and the domestic cotton textile industry would close all its mills and dismantle all its machinery, the cotton export subsidy program would be helped and not rendered ineffective or interfered with.

Clearly this conclusion is in utter disregard of the effect of imports upon the cotton program as a whole or upon the cotton export program as an integral part of the whole.

The Commission said:

> We are limited by Presidential directive (p. 10 of the report).

This limitation by Presidential directive is something new in section 22 proceedings. It is one more step in administrative circumvention of the intent of Congress as expressed in the law of the land.

In 1939 when section 22 was first invoked for the protection of the cotton programs against increasing imports of both cotton and cotton products, the then President found no necessity for limiting the scope of the investigation or attempting to predetermine the maximum remedy that might be recommended.

In 1939 an almost identical situation was presented. There was a cotton export subsidy program in effect then, as now. Its purpose then, as now, was to reduce the accumulated surpluses of cotton in the hands of the Government. Imports of cotton, as well as cotton products, were showing substantial increases, although less then than now. Two investigations were instituted by the Commission pursuant to the Presidential directives of 1939. Investigation No. 1 related to cotton; investigation No. 2 related to cotton products. Priority was given to the first investigation. The President's letter went to the Commission on July 26, 1939. The investigation was instituted by the Tariff Commission, a hearing was held and a proclamation establishing import quotas on raw cotton was issued effective September 20, a total elapsed time of less than 2 months.

The corresponding investigation on cotton products was instituted simultaneously. However, by the time the first investigation had been completed, World War I had begun and the need for limitation of imports disappeared. Had it not been for the intervention of the war, quotas on imports of cotton products would have been established at that time for the protection of the cotton program just as quotas on flour were later established for the protection of the wheat programs.

Never before in any of the 21 investigations previously instituted under section 22 has there ever been any such studied and deliberate attempt on the part of the President to limit the scope of the investigation. The limitation in the present proceeding, as construed by the majority of the Commission, is such that it is now clear that there was no opportunity whatever, from the beginning of the investigation, no matter what the facts might be, to obtain a favorable recommendation for section 22 relief against imports of these products. The intent and objective of Congress with respect to the protection of agricultural programs against imports have been frustrated. The section 22 procedure set up by Congress has been rendered impotent.

The majority opinion concludes with the recommendation to cotton products manufacturers that they should seek relief through section 7, the escape clause procedure. That road has already been traveled to its dead end. Several such investigations instituted in 1956 ended without one iota of relief against imports. The section 22 proceeding was instituted on recommendation of the Department of Agriculture and the industry held high hopes that it would at least be the beginning of effective action to stem the rising tide of imports. Now the cycle of the familiar runaround has been completed.

And all this has happened against the background of continually increasing and rapidly accelerating imports.

McCulloch's Schedule of Conferences in the Fourth District of Ohio

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. WILLIAM M. McCULLOCH

OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, I believe that a Congressman should be in his district to confer and visit with his constituents whenever official duties do not require him to be in Washington.

When Congress recesses, I expect to return home and to be available for conferences and visits with residents of the Fourth District in the courthouse of each county seat between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m., in accordance with the following schedule:

Allen County, Lima: Tuesday, July 19, and Wednesday, July 20.

Auglaize County, Wapakoneta: Thursday, July 21.

Darke County, Greenville: Monday, August 1.

Mercer County, Celina: Tuesday, August 2.

Miami County, Troy: Wednesday, August 3.

Preble County, Eaton: Thursday, August 4.

Shelby County, Sidney: Thursday, August 11.

No appointments will be necessary. Any problem with, or opinion concerning, the Federal Government will be proper subject for conference.

Of course, I will be glad to see residents of the district, in my Piqua office, any time that Congress is not in session, except on the days scheduled above.

Why in the World Is It That There Are No [Labeling] Standards on Shoes?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES O. PORTER
OF OREGON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, on June 23 a subcommittee of the other body held a hearing to consider a bill proposing the establishment of a Department of Consumers. During the course of the hearing before the Subcommittee on Reorganization and International Organization Senator HUBERT HUMPHREY and Federal Trade Commission Chairman Earl W. Kintner discussed the labeling of shoes.

In the course of the colloquy Chairman Kintner was asked by Senator HUMPHREY, "Why in the world is it that there are no standards on shoes?"

The ensuing discussion, made at this public hearing, points up, I believe, the need for full hearings, as promised for next year by the subcommittee chairman, on the shoe labeling legislation I have introduced—H.R. 1320.

Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a portion of the colloquy between Senator HUMPHREY and Chairman Kintner:

FROM THE COLLOQUY OF EARL W. KINTNER, CHAIRMAN, FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, WITH SENATOR HUBERT HUMPHREY, FOLLOWING THE STATEMENT OF CHAIRMAN KINTNER

Senator HUMPHREY. I surely feel that there has been a decided step-up in activity along the lines that you have indicated.

My response to you is one of appreciation for what you do. It is a lot of hard work. It is a tremendous economy to attempt to have an overall surveillance, and we surely do not want government in every aspect of our economic life.

We have to work with the private, the voluntary, the citizen groups seeking law observance, as well as applying law enforcement. I know that has been your philosophy.

I have been interested in one other matter. This is way off on the side.

I was talking to my shoe repair man the other day. Why in the world is it that there are no standards on shoes?

Mr. KINTNER. You mean labeling standards?

Senator HUMPHREY. Labeling standards. Isn't there some way that you can prevent people selling shoes for $15 made out of cardboard?

Mr. KINTNER. We have an investigation under way to determine what abuses, if any, exist there.

Senator HUMPHREY. I can send you to a shoe repair man that showed me six pairs of shoes, gave me the prices of these shoes, the closest he could identify them, and pointed out to me just exactly what kind of material was being used, and nothing but paper in some of the most high-priced shoes.

He said, "This is just outright unbelievable misuse of the word 'leather.' "

For example, they would have a leather piece in the shoe, and on that piece they would have the word "leather," and the rest of the shoe would be made out of paper or plastic.

Of course, the plastic is quite observable, you can see what you have. But you can take paper and make it look very much like leather. You would have a little piece in the instep, for example, of the shoe which wouldn't be any bigger than, let's say, an inch long, or an inch wide, and that would be the total amount of leather. The rest of it would be cardboard.

Mr. KINTNER. We have an inquiry going on in that area, and I understand there is pending legislation for shoe labeling.

Senator HUMPHREY. Yes.

Mr. KINTNER. I would imagine that eventually these facts will be brought out in connection with that legislation.

Senator HUMPHREY. I wish they had done it before my wife and daughter bought so many of those cardboard shoes.

Mr. KINTNER. I think they would rather have something that looks a little better, with plastic and other froufrous on it, than solid leather.

Senator HUMPHREY. The thing that gets me is:

You go to a good, plain responsible, hard-working man like the man out on McKinley Street who repairs my shoes, and he tells me all about this. I can't understand why it is such a secret from Government. He is a very honest man who works long hours, knows what is going on, repairs these shoes, opens them up and shows me nothing but paper.

I remember when I was a kid we used to get a hole in our shoes once in a while and we would wad up some paper, but I never thought they would make a business out of it.

Mr. KINTNER. It raises a very difficult problem.

Senator HUMPHREY. Is there any authority that you have over that?

Mr. KINTNER. We have authorities where deception of consumers, of the public, can be indicated by the practice.

Senator HUMPHREY. Maybe you ought to look into it.

Mr. KINTNER. We are. We have an investigation.

Senator HUMPHREY. A good shoemaker who really puts out a leather product gets a raw deal if you can have a substitute product where the word "leather" appears on a very small item on the shoe and indicates to the unsuspecting consumer that this may be a leather product.

Mr. KINTNER. You have just made a very important point there, because the thrust of our law not only is a protection of the public generally, but the protection of the honest businessman.

Senator HUMPHREY. Exactly.

Well, I got my shoestore fixed up. You see, I have to have these occasions to remind myself that there are some of these things that I haven't taken care of. I promised my shoemaker that I would do something about this, and I hadn't gotten around to it.

Mr. KINTNER. You take care of these points very effectively, if I may say so.

Auto U.S.A.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FRANK J. BECKER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Speaker, I am inserting in the RECORD the following article entitled "Auto U.S.A." Everyone in America is vitally concerned about the number of deaths and fatal accidents on our highways today. This article tells about a film which proves that many communities can help with the traffic congestion and elimination of accidents.

The toll of deaths on the Nation's highways over the Fourth of July weekend, and the fantastic traffic jams in which motorists found themselves trapped brings home with dramatic impact our fast growing urban traffic problems. A method by which communities throughout the country can decrease their accident and traffic statistics and increase their safety quotient was demonstrated here recently:

On June 15, a group of some 125 experts in traffic safety, Government and automotive fields met to watch the premiere of a new motion picture on traffic and safety. The film "Auto U.S.A." was premiered under the auspices of the Automotive Safety Foundation and the Institute of Traffic Engineers. Its purpose—to demonstrate to individuals and community groups how they could initiate action to develop their own traffic control systems. The film dramatically points out the demoralizing effect traffic congestion has on the economic and social life of many communities and, at the same time, shows how many communities, faced with such a problem, have effectively solved these traffic and safety problems.

At the end of the film the experts, some of the Nation's leading industrial and Government experts on traffic, safety and the auto in general, gave the producer of the film, Dynamic Films, of New York, a resounding burst of applause and an equal round of applause for the Perfect Circle Corp. of Hagerstown, Ind., which provided a special public service grant for the production of the film. The public service effort these organizations have made is indeed a worthy one.

The message this film gives is important. Its story I think should be made available to every community in the country faced with the problem of constricting traffic congestion. It should bring home to communities the fact that they have a stake in their own cities and towns and this film gives them the information necessary to help them help themselves.

We are continually faced with the bugaboo of traffic congestion and accidents and our communities are constantly on the lookout for methods that will help solve these problems before they become too drastic. I think this film will be of interest to all these communities and will help simplify the planning of traffic programs for future years to come.

Traffic is nobody's fault but it should be everybody's business.

Responsibility for the free flow of goods and services and the pleasurable use of the auto rests with all of us, with every individual and corporate citizen. Solutions for traffic problems which often threaten business, industrial and civic growth can be and have been found.

That is why "Auto U.S.A." is such an important film. It is a how-to-do-it package. And Americans who are almost congenitally inclined toward finding practical ways to solve problems will respond once they see it. In 28 minutes, this film proves that many communities already started dissolving traffic congestion through the serious application of existent know-how.

We Can't Afford To Waste a Good Defense Plant

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM J. RANDALL
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, to present certain facts which I think are material to the further consideration of locations or plant availability for the Department of Defense, I think it is important that something be inserted in the RECORD to pinpoint or document a situation which calls for immediate attention before it becomes too late.

Last February, at Kansas City, Mo., the Navy Department canceled their contract with Westinghouse Electric Corp. for the production of J–34–WE–48 jet engines. Shortly thereafter, the Bureau of Naval Weapons stated they had no requirements for this Naval Industrial Reserve Aircraft plant in connection with any other Bureau program, and that they would not continue the operation of the plant. They further stated that it was possible there would be a move to declare these facilities as excess as soon as the contractor—Westinghouse—released them. It is announced that if there was no defense requirement for the plant, it would be reported to General Services Administration for disposal after congressional approval had been obtained.

Now it is my understanding that the General Services Administration has the authority to make the determination as to whether or not other Government departments or agencies might have a requirement for the facilities.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my appearance on the floor of the House today is to again bring into focus or perspective the great value of this plant as well as its trained personnel which may soon be lost and scattered away from the area. Here is a plant in a perfect state of maintenance with an estimated value, including land, building, and equipment, of $90 million. The contract recently provided employment for more than 2,000 men and women civilians, with a payroll of close to $18 million a year. I have asked the Navy Department for an itemization of this equipment, which was necessary only to be completely accurate, because I have visited this plant and gone through every corner of it. I have seen these huge machines in operation and also the very fine laboratories and testing units. I shall not take your time to make a detailed inventory, but there are nearly 200 boring machines, about 350 huge lathes, 200 milling machines, 400 grinders, about 400 shapers and polishing machines, a large number of bending and forming machines, 20 drop hammers, over 100 hydraulic or mechanical punches, including presses, shears, and hammers.

It is a plant which is fully equipped with cranes, furnaces, and every type of testing apparatus. Here is a plant that is fitted up, tooled up and, with only a minimum of modification, ready to go into the production of almost any defense item. You can realize it must have a large space area because it was large enough to accommodate all this equipment and over 3,000 employees. Here is a plant that is ready made and ready for immediate use. It is a plant of which any area would be proud.

The real issue here is whether this plant should be, in effect, wasted or whether it should be put to good use in the manufacture of other items of defense. Another collateral, but an important consideration, is that at present there is trained personnel which may soon be dispersed and scattered over wide areas. At the present time they remain in the Kansas City area, and if some new defense use could be determined, this trained personnel would stand by to be available.

As of now, it appears there will be, for some considerable time, large defense requirements. This is not the way that many of us would wish it, but these are the hard facts. The cold war is not now so cold as it was before the collapse of the summit.

Accordingly, I feel immediate attention should be given in determining the feasibility of continuing production in this modern plant, equipped with modern tooling machines.

The theme of my remarks here today, Mr. Speaker, is that proper officials in the Navy Department, or the Department of Defense, as well as those Members on the Armed Services Committee of this House, should conduct a most thorough survey of this valuable and expensive equipment, and carefully check this fine plant, worth $90 million, which is now—or soon can be, available for use. I am confident they will reach the conclusion that it could—and should be—utilized at once in order to regain the valuable services of these already trained personnel, and to save the taxpayers millions of dollars by avoiding the enormous expense of constructing a new building elsewhere and purchasing all new equipment.

Re Cuban Situation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUGH Q. ALEXANDER
OF NORTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, it is my belief that the United States, through our State Department, should take a new look at Cuba.

Only 90 miles from our shores we find this small country with less than 6 million people who not only figuratively, but literally, through its dictator, Fidel Castro, thumbs its nose at us.

America has shed blood to win freedom for Cuba, and throughout history has played the role of big brother, giving bountifully of friendship and aid. At the expense of the American taxpayer we have consistently stabilized the price of their sugar, paying more for it than any other country.

While I am of the opinion that the Cuban people generally, are still friendly toward the United States, the diplomatic sins of its leaders are legion. In my judgment it is foolish to declare Castro a mere tool of the Communists, and not recognize him as a practicing Communist.

Without any compensation at all he has taken over properties belonging to the United States, his warships in peacetime have fired against American ships, and he has physically mistreated and deported U.S. citizens, including members of our foreign service. He has endangered the security of the entire hemisphere by entering into pacts with the Communist States, thereby establishing a beachhead for Russia in Latin America. Red dictatorship is now in full control in Cuba, making it criminal to make statements unfavorable to communism or to the Government.

Russia has appointed Sergei M. Kudryavtsev as Ambassador to Cuba. This is the Communist who headed a Soviet espionage ring in Canada early in the 1940's. Premier Khrushchev, has of course, already accepted an invitation to visit Cuba. It is likely that he may be followed by Communist Chinese Premier Chou En-lai. And worse still, it has been reported that Cuba is preparing to establish diplomatic relations with Peiping. This would be a bitter blow to the United States.

Among Castro's closest advisers is Maj. Ernesto "Che" Guevara, who is Communist trained. He has written a book telling Latin Americans how to overthrow their governments and take power. Another who is very close to Castro is his brother, Raul, who is first in line of succession, and also Communist trained. And there is also Antonio Junez Jimenez who heads the National Institute of Agrarian Reform, and is known as a Communist.

These men and others are waging a vicious hate-America campaign on our very doorsteps. Day after day they hurl vitriolic tirades against us and employ calumny in order to degrade the United States.

Castro is not content to turn only Cuba against the United States, as alarming and distressing as that is. His ambition is to extend the Red dominance to include all of Latin America, converting to communism a group of countries that traditionally have been friendly to us. Therefore, his fellow Communists are active in Cuban embassies all through Latin America.

And so while Soviet influence increases in Cuba, our position there is greatly deteriorating, economically as well as diplomatically. Just the other day Cuba confiscated the Texaco Oil Co. there because the crude oil is not bought from the Communists.

I firmly believe that it is imperative that this must be stopped. We must not sit idly by and vainly hope that Castro will hang himself if given enough time and rope.

The State Department has failed to follow through with its protests. Our security is at stake. The influence of our administrative leaders is already being questioned through the world. Their ability to cope with the situation is doubted. A change in policy should be adopted. We must let Castro and his henchmen know in no uncertain terms just where we stand and exactly what our policy is, then, if necessary, take action to protect our sovereignty, guard our prestige, and maintain our good name.

The hour is late.

A National Fuels Policy Is One of America's Most Urgent Items of Unfinished Business

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, yesterday the National Coal Policy Conference issued a statement noting that recent developments in the international competition between America and the Soviet Union are warnings that the Congress of the United States should immediately undertake a study of the overall fuels situation in this country.

I agree with this conference representing coal producers, the United Mine Workers of America, coal-carrying railroads, coal-burning electric utilities, and mine-equipment manufacturers, that a national fuels policy is one of America's most urgent items of unfinished business. It is a matter of real concern that legislation pending in this Congress which would cause a joint committee to be formed to inquire into the question of whether or not such a fuels policy is indicated has been subjected to most unfortunate exaggeration and a propaganda barrage of abuse.

A few days ago, the National Coal Policy Conference noted in a memorandum that I was joined by 42 Senators in sponsoring Senate Concurrent Resolution 73, while 30 Members of the House introduced similar resolutions—all of which would authorize Congress to inquire into the need for a national fuels policy.

Recently, the American Legion called for such a policy as being vital to national security. More recently, Labor's Economic Review, an oracle of the 13½-million member AFL–CIO, declared for "a progressive, integrated, national fuel policy." This publication noted a prerequisite to such a policy would be a far-reaching national energy survey which should provide the foundations for an integrated national policy comprising first, abundant supplies at lowest possible cost; second, protection of consumer and public against monopolistic practices; third, Federal leadership, and cooperation by States, localities and the private sector of the economy; fourth, employment of research and technology to solve major energy problems; and fifth, integration of a national energy policy with a national resources policy.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD two significant paragraphs from the article in the latest issue of Labor's Economic Review.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Labor's stakes in such a policy are immediate and vital. Increased productivity, maximum employment, and rising living standards of workers, all are dependent upon future supplies of energy in abundance and at the lowest possible cost.

Less than a quarter of a century ahead looms the problem of how to provide a steady and expanding stimulus for economic growth to secure job opportunities for millions more Americans who will be entering the labor market.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, Joseph E. Moody, president of the National Coal Policy Conference, pointed out in the conference statement yesterday that the anti-American demonstrations in Japan, the imminent invasion of Soviet oil into American-owned Cuban refineries, and other symptoms of international disorder and trade pressures as evidence that the United States urgently needs a fuels policy as an essential ingredient of national security.

In connection with the NCPC statement there was released a booklet by that group entitled "A National Fuels Policy: One of America's Most Urgent Needs." This publication examines the serious problems plaguing all three basic domestic fuels industries—oil, coal, and natural gas.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed further in the Appendix of the RECORD, extracts from the booklet to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the extracts were ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The world glut of oil is causing serious concern among domestic American petroleum producers as prices are slashed and high costs make new exploration and drilling in the continental United States unprofitable. The natural gas industry, hampered by rigid controls, rising pipeline construction costs, and the swelling importation of gas from Canada is facing an uncertain future. And coal, America's most abundant fuel and her main dependence for the tremendous growth expected in electric power and industrial capacity, is existing today at little more than a standby production level—a level that is dangerous to national security and threatens our future industrial growth.

All of these facts point to the very critical need for development of a sound national fuels policy, a need that must be met at once if America's essential domestic fuels industries are to prosper and continue to serve the Nation in the critical months ahead as well as the years of the future. * * *

The present unhappy situation of domestic fuels can be traced to the lack of a single, integrated policy to guide the energy industries. It should also be pointed out that many agencies of government—Federal, State, and even local, have developed literally hundreds of separate policies dealing with separate energy industries in separate, limited ways. * * *

Sometimes these policies overlap, sometimes they conflict, sometimes they leave large and important areas completely uncovered. As long as this situation goes unchanged, our Nation's energy industries will be in trouble—perennially faced with the problem of basing their operations on the ever-shifting foundations of bureaucratic whim. * * *

If the United States is to protect itself, if it is to insure its continued strength, if it is to be able to meet any demands placed on it in peace or war, it is absolutely essential that a single, integrated, overall policy be adopted to guide the future of our vital energy resources.

If this basic segment of our economy is allowed to languish unattended the United States will be placing itself in very real jeopardy—an action which the Congress cannot and must not countenance.

Price of Sugar Versus National Security

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN H. DENT
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, although this discussion taking place here today is limited and restricted, there can be no doubt as to its grave importance on the world scene.

Forgetting for the moment the overall picture of sugar quotas, their desirability and even if needs be—their necessity—one cannot help but comment on the impact of our action today upon the world leaders, both pro- and anti-United States.

Insofar as I can ascertain from the report of the committee and from the history of this legislation, there appears to be a fixation in this Nation as to what is required from us as members of the world society to be allowed to stay free and secure in our rights.

It seems that we may have become the world's chief scapegoat under the all-embracing, high-sounding title of "World Savior" aided and abetted by our own national desires for physical security in our homeland.

You wonder what the price of sugar has to do with national security and anyone sometimes wonders the same thing. Nevertheless, it is true that we pay about twice as much for sugar as any other nation on earth. We do so, some say for the simple reason of safeguarding our breadbasket by assuring our people's supplies for domestic consumption from year to year.

This means that we allocate to each sugar producing country a quota of sugar purchases at a price about double the world market price. Of course, this does guarantee us the first claim of the sugar crop and also as our planners have it figured, it buys us friendship and helps our neighbors economically.

All of this may be true, but the time is coming when we must face the realities of life.

Our barrel is finally getting near bottom in both gold and friendship.

Too many of our friends are so used to being paid for being our friends that like some personal friends, they are beginning to take unwarranted privileges with both our national security and our international reputation. This, in turn, causes our true friends to wonder whether it is better to kiss us or to kick us.

This is not the time to discuss the right or the wrong of our policy of world sugar subsidy since the whole question of subsidies is one of our gravest national problems and our economic sickness and will compel us to either change prescriptions or get a new doctor in the foreseeable future.

Until that day comes, it is useless to beat your head against a stonewall of old ideas, old customs, new slogans and half-explained formulas.

Sufficient to say that this Congress will pass the sugar bill, it will play politics with the Cuban issue and in a few days about 90 percent of the American people will be fed a line of logic through the press, radio and television and the Congress will go back to arguing about other things.

In the meantime, the "little King of Cuba, Castro" will make hay in the propaganda market screaming about American imperialism, economic aggression while at the same time confiscating billions of dollars worth of American enterprise which has contributed more to Cuban economic well-being than any other single factor since its emergence as a nation. Of course, he can do this with impregnability so long as the American taxpayer pays him 6 cents a pound for sugar and buys most of his crop while he demoralizes the world market by selling to all comers at 3 cents a pound.

In plain words, the Congress is giving Castro millions of extra dollars to create in our hemisphere a festering sore that may grow into a Latin bloc of cancer and the victim can well be the very good neighbor—one United States of America.

It would be foolish to try to cut off our sugar quotas without a reasonable adjustment but to say that we can never get away from our policy of dependency upon Cuba's sugar supply is to admit that we are failures.

We have thousands of sugar acres lying idle; we can bring in the world market as much sugar as Cuba supplies us with from friendly Latin American countries who have surplus and need our business and appreciate our friendship.

Our aim is not to strangle Cuba's economy—it is to make it healthy again by cutting out the venomous poison that is being fed into its bloodstream by a self-centered, misguided leader. I tried to get action on a three-point program but lacking both seniority and prestige, and the one is dependent entirely upon the other, my suggestions were almost completely ignored.

For the benefit of those who are critical of the Congress of the United States, I at least want to place on the RECORD the suggestions that I believe are reasonable and logical in this crazy, mixed-up sugar festival.

One June 27 I called upon the House of Representatives to give serious consideration to the three-point program in the sugar allotment quota as it affects Castro's Cuba.

I suggested a three-amendment approach:

First, cut out all sugar quota as of the end of this year, or sooner; if the House deems it advisable, give to the President of the United States the right and the power to restore all or part of the quota as he finds it to be in the best interest of the people.

Second, reduce the sugar quota by the amount of sugar sold to Russia or Communist satellites at any price less than the subsidized price paid by the United States on the sugar program.

Third, put the difference between the U.S. price and the world market price into certain escrowed funds to be paid to any American enterprise injured by the Castro policies of expropriation or confiscation. I pointed out that there would not be a deficiency in sugar because every sugar producing area in the world practically has a surplus, notably our friends in Mexico with over a million tons and our friendly Latin American countries and the Philippines.

The Castro Cuban Government recently sold Russia sugar under a 5-year program at a price which is about one-half charged to the United States. This is an outright subsidy to Russia out of the kitchen money of American housewives.

This is a program based upon common sense and sound logic without any feelings of reprisal or economic straitjacketing, but rather a measure to bring back some similarity of sanity and economic soundness.

I still believe the approach to be one consistent with American needs for both sugar and prestige.

On Adjournment

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. FRED SCHWENGEL

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. SCHWENGEL. Mr. Speaker, it seems advisable for some one to speak about a situation that prevails here in Congress this year. It is distressing to note the obvious admission on the part of the leadership of majority in the Congress that it has done a poor job with respect to handling the business before us during this session.

On Wednesday it was announced that the session would be recessed and reconvened in August. This means that we will just have time to get home and it will be necessary to come back to complete work on legislation which should have been completed a long time ago.

It is especially distressing when you thumb through the pages in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and note the number of legislative days which have been lost through the operation of the "Tuesday Through Thursday" club and for other reasons when the leadership did not program any business even though the club members were here.

When you check the activity of the other body, you wonder if the business of legislating in the national interest has been relegated to a position of secondary importance while the matter of politics occupies the attention of the leadership. With so many aspirants for President in the other body, the establishment of national images and the writing of personal platforms has made the Senate little more than a launching pad for personal ambition.

We Representatives from the great breadbasket of the world are particularly upset about the fact that we have had no legislation dealing with one of the most pressing domestic problems of our time—the enactment of legislation which will provide for a sound farm program.

At the very outset of this session, the President made it clear that he would approve any "constructive solution which the Congress wishes to develop."

We have had some weak attempts to come forward with legislation in this area, but they certainly did not qualify according to the President's definition of "constructive." This failure is understandable when we come face to face with the fact that our Committees on Agriculture in the Senate and House are dominated by Members from the South where cotton, peanuts, and tobacco receive the most attention.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, there is sufficient cause for wonder about the purposes for which the Congress is convened when we go through 6 months of a session and come up with so little to justify our being here. Suddenly it is realized that all of the necessary work cannot be done, even though the first national political convention is more than 10 days away. So, we recess and arrange to come back in August.

That means "we ain't seen nothin' yet." If politics has been the malady which has prevented us from buckling down to the task at hand, we are in for a relapse when we come back here after the conventions and head into that supercharged atmosphere where politics will have reached epidemic proportions.

I feel that we should stay on the job—work day and night if necessary; get out the necessary legislation and then adjourn for the conventions. Then, we will be fulfilling our major responsibility of serving in the public interest.

Problems of Safety in the Electric Utility Industry

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS L. ASHLEY
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Speaker, the matter of industrial safety is one which affects the livelihood, well-being and happiness of most American families. It is a matter to which this Congress has directed considerable attention in the past and it is a matter which requires our continued concern and consideration. Nothing could be more clear than that safety standards and regulations which may be adequate today will be rendered obsolete by the technology of tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, this is particularly true in the electric utility field. The responsibility for safety in this area is extraordinary in that accident hazard is inherent in the duties and service performed by utility workers. An employee of an electric utility company must be concerned not only for his own life, but for the safety of his coworkers and the general public as well. Making this triple responsibility even more demanding is the serious handicap under which the utility worker must perform his work as a result of inadequate safety measures and outdated safety equipment.

In the electric utility industry, it is essential that limitations be placed on the number of consecutive hours worked, that certain procedures be established and followed in deenergizing electrical conductors or equipment for maintenance purposes, and that safety requirements be established for work within contact distance or for equipment energized at a high voltage. This giant industry, while striving to satisfy the increasing demands of its consumers by expanding the systems of distribution and modernizing the techniques of generating power, has failed for budgetary or other reasons to demonstrate a proportionate concern for the safety of its employees. Thus, voltage limitations are designed for the lower primary voltages of a bygone era and enclosures of modern high speed generators and turbines do not provide adequate protection from moving parts.

The neglect of the electric utility industry in this area becomes clear from a study of safety records—which, when available, are far from complete. For example, the Accident Prevention Committee of the Edison Electric Institute published a summary report of fatalities which listed 136 fatalities for 1955. This figure, while alarmingly high, includes only members of the Edison Electric Institute. What about the fatalities of the nonmembers—independents, municipalities, REA and other cooperatives? Figures for these utility companies are not readily available but one can easily imagine the impact their statistics would have on the overall picture.

The number of fatal injuries reflects only a part of the disturbing accident figures. Included in this grim picture must be the accidents which leave victims either totally or partially disabled. In 1958, 7.1 percent of the disabling injuries in the private electric light and power utility industry resulted in permanent impairment. This was a higher permanent impairment ratio than occurred in any other section of the transportation and public utility industry, the contract construction industry and, with few exceptions, the mining industry. The average time length of disability per injury was 226 days.

In my opinion, the accident rate itself is compelling reason for consideration of legislation to establish a uniform code of safety regulations for the electric utility industry. But the tragic accident record has equally discouraging collateral aspects which must also be considered. Economic loss to the worker, his family, the company and the community is staggering. The accident record of one Ohio company—the Columbus & Southern Ohio Electric Co.—affords an example of how great this wage-time loss is in terms of lost purchasing power and diminished consumer demand.

Statistics for the Columbus district for 1955 show a loss of 6,263 days, based on an average hourly wage rate of $2.09, amounting to a total wage loss to injured employees of $104,717.36. In 1956, the wage loss rose to $153,410.32 when injured employees lost 8,837 workdays. Again, these are only one company's figures. And, of course, there are no statistics, figures, reports or records by which we can measure the discomfort and insecurity of a worker and his family during the days lost, nor is there any way to ease the pain when a family loses its breadwinner completely.

Several recommendations have been put forth for remedial legislation by Congress which would improve safety requirements and conditions in the utility industry. At this point, it might be well to recall that it was not too many years ago that mine workers were urgently pleading for better safety regulations and that the 77th Congress saw fit to enact legislation resulting in vastly improved working conditions.

As a first step, uniform minimum safety standards should be established. The present safety record and the miserable failure of many companies to follow adequate safety procedures are evidence enough of the need for industrywide safety regulations. Such regulations could be either statutory requirements or regulations prescribed by a Government agency. The statutory requirements might be used for certain basic rules, such as limitation on the number of consecutive hours worked, materials used for protection of wires, and so forth, but the establishment of a safety agency would appear to offer several advantages. Such an agency, composed of persons familiar with the field of industrial safety and in particular with the problems of the electric utility industry would be competent to establish effective safety regulations and because of its continuing responsibility in the field would be able to modify and streamline safety requirements to keep pace with technical innovations.

Closely related to the establishment of a code of minimum safety regulations is the necessity for adequate inspection. Inspection of safety equipment to determine whether it meets standards established by the safety agency, and appropriate approval stamps issued to the equipment manufacturer should be required. Inspections should be made of electric utility plants to determine existence and degree of danger. In cases of immediate hazard the agency should be empowered to order the removal of workers from the area as well as require corrective action. Inspection would be an essential tool in the enforcement of minimum safety regulations.

Accident reporting would be a third arm of the projected safety program for electric utility industry. Included within the statutory framework of the safety agency should be authority to require that all accidents be immediately reported and a uniform method of accident recording should be established for this purpose. Although most States require a report of accidents and fatalities, the time lapse between occurrence of the accident and filing of the report varies with each jurisdiction. In addition, the accident records of the State utility commissions are often incomplete and not readily available.

The effectiveness of any safety program depends in large measure upon the expertness with which accident and other investigations are conducted. Far too many accidents are now attributed simply to that nebulous cause—human error. The challenge is to determine what factors cause or contribute to this human error and to define areas of accident potential. Investigation of every fatal mishap and spot checks of other less serious accidents by trained personnel are needed to track down accident causes and furnish vital accident prevention information.

These, then, are a few of the possible approaches to improving the safety record of electric utility companies. Perhaps the most serious problem in initiating a safety program is to determine just where the responsibility lies. Voluntary action by individual companies has, to date, been inadequate and unsatisfactory. Employee-company safety committees are desirable but hardly the answer to a nationwide problem. It would appear, therefore, that the existing accident record in the electric utility industry calls for responsible Government action. In the absence of an effective industry program, it is only at the Government level that safety standards can be instituted and enforced. Creation of a new Government regulatory agency or additional authority delegated to an existing agency is necessary for the performance of the functions which I have suggested. Provision could thus be made for both a safety agency and for a board of review to be staffed by company and worker representatives.

There is ample precedent for authority to regulate within the utility industry. The Federal Coal Mine Inspection Act of 1941 and the 1952 Federal Coal Mine Safety Act are similar legislative actions which have been taken in another industry. Although the electric utility worker is not faced with the kind of accident that reach the catastrophic proportions of the major mine disasters, the overall record of deaths and disabling accidents is great enough to warrant consideration of the advisability of legislation in this important field.

Annual Official Tour of the Fourth Indiana District

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. E. ROSS ADAIR
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, during the recess of this session of the 86th Congress, I plan to conduct my annual official tour of the Fourth Indiana District. This will enable me to meet personally with constituents and discuss the legislative actions of this Congress. Furthermore, we can take a look at the issues they feel will be important when the new Congress convenes, following the elections this fall.

In looking back over the many problems which were before the 86th Congress, I believe that the greatest were related to maintaining peace, and preserving the Nation's strength and security. It is significant that at the same time, however, the Nation has continued to prosper and now enjoys its highest level of employment and income in our history.

During both sessions of this Congress, I supported legislation which would curb excessive Government spending and help to keep the budget in balance as requested by the President.

Along with a number of other Members, I introduced a bill providing for long-range tax reform, as I believe that the taxpayers and the economy ultimately must have tax relief and a reappraisal of our present tax policies. This bill did not pass, but some such measure must be considered in the future. We must encourage thrift and at the same time eliminate burdensome taxes to permit more money to be channeled into the development and expansion of our economy. Such a program of incentive would stimulate national growth and increase employment rather than putting tax dollars into the Washington bureaucracy and needless Federal projects.

I also introduced a bill which would have raised the present limitation on earnings of those who are receiving social security, but this likewise did not come to a vote in the House.

In voting against foreign aid, as I have in the past, I felt that our Nation could better our relationships and help the free world and our own people by using a substantial portion of such funds for domestic purposes. The gigantic expenditures we have made for foreign aid in the past have not won and retained for us friends throughout the world, as we had hoped. Person-to-person contacts are most helpful in maintaining world friendships.

I have supported all efforts to ease world tensions and halt the Communist conspiracy in its tracks. It is now apparent that we must speak up most firmly to the Communist leaders. Never will we stop the evil menace of communism by failing to recognize it for the atheistic menace it is. We must be tough on Communists and expose their every effort to take over the world.

As we are entering an entirely new era of space exploration, which calls upon us to further our scientific knowledge and research, I have favored proper action and expenditures in this field. We need to keep ahead of the world in utilizing our ingenuity and experience in this space age to see that we advance in the direction of peaceful and constructive uses of these new developments rather than letting some other nation pervert them to weapons of destruction and fear.

I have also worked for a strong national defense program with concentration on modern weapons and military supremacy for our protection from any would-be aggressor.

In fact, I feel that the general conservative approach to our national problems has been sound and one which merits the confidence and approval of our people generally and particularly of those in the Fourth District of Indiana whom I am privileged to represent.

This official tour which I make annually through the eight counties of the district—Allen, Adams, Whitley, Noble, De Kalb, Steuben, Lagrange, and Wells—has always afforded an excellent opportunity of talking over our national problems. It enables us to get firsthand views and information from the folks in the district as to their attitude on these matters and how I may best serve them and contribute to good government through congressional action.

The tour will not be held until after the national political conventions, and I have set up the following dates and places to meet with my constituents. I invite all to meet with me and to feel free to discuss their problems, whether it be on legislation, issues, my voting record, or personal governmental business that they may have on matters of pensions, military service, veterans' affairs, or whatever.

Following the final adjournment of Congress, I will open my district office to serve constituents at 925 Lincoln Tower, Fort Wayne, Ind., and my Washington office, room 1511, House Office Building, will, of course, be open.

The tour dates and places where I will be and the hours are:

Monday, August 1, 9:30 a.m., post office, Ossian.

Monday, August 1, 11 a.m., post office, Bluffton.

Monday, August 1, 2 p.m., post office, Decatur.

Monday, August 1, 4 p.m., post office, Berne.

Tuesday, August 2, 10 a.m., post office, Garrett.

Tuesday, August 2, 11:30 a.m., post office, Auburn.

Tuesday, August 2, 2:30 p.m., post office, Butler.

Tuesday, August 2, 4:30 p.m., post office, Waterloo.

Wednesday, August 3, 10 a.m., post office, Angola.

Wednesday, August 3, 1:30 p.m., post office, Fremont.

Wednesday, August 3, 4 p.m., post office, Lagrange.

Thursday, August 4, 10 a.m., post office, Albion.

Thursday, August 4, 1:30 p.m., post office, Kendallville.

Thursday, August 4, 4 p.m., post office, Ligonier.

Friday, August 5, 9:30 a.m., post office, Columbia City.

Friday, August 5, 1:30 p.m., post office, South Whitley.

Friday, August 5, 4 p.m., post office, Churubusco.

Address by Ambassador H. Freeman Matthews on the 10th Anniversary of the Signing of the Fulbright Agreement Between Austria and the United States, Given in the Great Festsaal of the University of Vienna, June 1960

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. J. W. FULBRIGHT
OF ARKANSAS
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, 10 years ago, on June 6, 1950, an agreement was signed by the representatives of the governments of Austria and the United States which provided for the exchange of professors, scientists, teachers, and students. I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an address by Ambassador H.

Freeman Matthews on the 10th anniversary of the signing of that agreement.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF AMBASSADOR H. FREEMAN MATTHEWS ON THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SIGNING OF THE FULBRIGHT AGREEMENT BETWEEN AUSTRIA AND THE UNITED STATES, GIVEN IN THE GREAT FESTSAAL OF THE UNIVERSITY OF VIENNA, JUNE 1960

Ten years ago, on June 6, 1950, an agreement was signed by the representatives of our two Governments. It was an unusual agreement. Unlike most treaties between governments, it did not provide for peace, or war, or alliance, or reduction of tariffs. It did not settle any dispute between our countries. It simply provided a basis for the exchange of professors, scientists, teachers, and students, in a variety of fields. This agreement ran for 5 years, and was then renewed for 5 more years by a simple exchange of diplomatic notes.

In that 10-year period, over 1,200 Austrians and Americans have participated in this program, crossing the ocean both ways to teach, do research, or study.

But before this unprecedented exchange between the intellectual leaders of our two countries took place, the financial and legal basis for the program had to be established.

The first step was taken by the United States well before the end of the Second World War. As early as 1944, it was found that American military equipment and supplies worth millions of dollars were left in country after country following the liberation by the allied forces. It was obvious that much of this material—such as transport trucks and cars, fuel, medical supplies, and food—would be of inestimable help to the countries most ravaged by war. It was however also obvious that such countries had no dollars to buy these materials. The Congress of the United States therefore passed a law authorizing these military surplus materials to be sold at nominal cost to the countries concerned in exchange for payment in their own currency. This was done, and many of you may remember how useful this material was here in Austria in the first difficult years following the end of the war. The resulting sales surpassed all expectations, and the American Government soon found itself in possession of huge sums in foreign currency and credits, not only in Austria but in some 20 other countries as well.

The question was: How to dispose of these funds most wisely? It did not seem right simply to give them away; there was already serious inflation in many countries which would only have been made more dangerous by such a gift. Also, the American people were the true owners of these funds; they had paid with their taxes for all the military material which had been sold. It seemed only fair that these funds should be used in a way that would bring at least some benefit to the American people.

It was at this point that an American Senator proposed an amendment to the 1944 law, which has probably made his name better known throughout the world than those of 99 out of 100 of the Generals and Admirals of the Second World War.

This amendment is officially known as Public Law 584, 79th Congress, but it is better known as the Fulbright Act; the program it provided for is known throughout the world as the Fulbright program, and the scholars and professors who have participated are known to one another wherever they may be simply as Fulbrighters.

I wonder what other statesman in the world's history has during his own lifetime been able to see such a noble monument in honor to his achievements.

It was the hope of your Government as well as of his magnificence and myself, that Senator FULBRIGHT might be able to join us here in Vienna on this occasion. I informed him of this hope, knowing that it would be extremely difficult for him to leave his duties in the Senate during the busiest month of the year. I should like to read to you the letter which he wrote to me in reply.

"MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: It is with profound regret that I find I am unable to be present at the celebration of the 10th anniversary of the exchange program with Austria. Please convey my respect to the President, the Chancellor, and to Education Minister Drimmel.

"The exchange program with Austria and the other countries with which we have such programs contributes materially, I believe, to better relations between these countries and seeks to maintain a free and enlightened society. All of us can learn much from others, and I know of no way that is more effective than the exchange of students and professors.

"Those who have charge of the administration of this program in Austria have done an outstanding job in every respect. There have been no instances of inefficient administration of the program. I believe that in the years to come these exchanges will contribute even more to the improvement of international relations which is essential to the preservation of peace. If the United Nations and other international organizations designed to promote peace are to succeed, the confidence and good will necessary for the success of these organizations will be created, I believe, by the knowledge and understanding which result from the exchange programs. I am hopeful that these programs can be expanded and that perhaps they may elicit a greater participation and support in many other countries.

"Again, may I thank you and the Chancellor for having extended the invitation to me.

"With all best wishes, I am,

"Sincerely yours,

"J. W. FULBRIGHT."

It would not be fitting for me to try to tell you how much good the Fulbright program has done for Austria. That can best be done by his magnificence, Professor Antoine, by his colleagues in the other Austrian universities and colleges, and above all by your Federal Minister of Education Dr. Drimmel, for whose wholehearted support we are deeply grateful. I can tell you something of what has been done for America through the participation of Austria in this program. Some 500 Americans have come to Austria as Fulbrighters since 1950. Of these, 340 were students, not ordinary students, but the best we could select from the entire United States. Almost one-third of them came to study that field which the whole world associates with Austria, the art of music. Many came to study your literature and your language; others came to study your history and to work in your archives, your libraries, and your museums. Some have come for geology, chemistry, and other natural sciences.

In addition to the students, American scientists and scholars, many already world-famous in their fields, have come to Austria to do research, and others have come as exchange teachers for a year in Austrian schools.

Over 700 Austrians have participated in the Fulbright program in America. I hope they have brought back with them knowledge and experience which will prove of long lasting benefit to Austria. But I know that they have given much to America during their stay in my country. Many of them taught German language and literature at our schools and universities. I have heard that it is possible to recognize those American universities which have had Austrians helping in their German departments; the students say karfiol instead of blumenkohl.[1] But seriously, there is hardly any field of study in America where we have not been helped to some extent by the presence of Austrian professors and researchers who have come to us under the Fulbright program.

Lest anyone suppose that our real aim is to steal away the best brains of Austria for our own permanent benefit, let me interject that we ask all Austrian candidates for Fulbright grants to give written assurance that they will return to Austria after completion of their study in America. I must admit that the power of Cupid sometimes thwarts our sincere efforts to prevent the export of Austrian intelligence to America. Several of your most promising, most industrious, and most beautiful young lady students have married Americans and have found ways to stay in America permanently. However, I am glad to assure you that an equal number of our American girl Fulbright students in Austria have been overcome by Austrian charm and have married and settled in Austria. One of our girls was even successful in marrying her Austrian professor. I mention this only as a slight warning to any unmarried members of the senate of this university.

I have tried to give you some idea of the wonderful benefits America has gained through the better knowledge of Austria and the Austrians which we have acquired as a result of the Fulbright program. Perhaps even more important than the exchange of academic and scholarly knowledge and know-how has been the dispelling of countless ancient prejudices and misconceptions which are so frequently characteristic of the attitude of one people toward another. Many of us have learned not to generalize about one another so much.

Some of us now realize that not all Austrians yodel, and some of you now know that quite a few Americans never chew gum. We are beginning to realize that in spite of your famed Gemütlichkeit, most Austrians work very hard indeed to achieve a better life, and those of you who have been in the United States have seen that many Americans are more concerned with spiritual and cultural values than with the eternal chase for dollars which is so frequently (and I believe mistakenly) ascribed to us by Europeans.

In fact, the Fulbright program has helped us to see that we are more alike than unlike; in the great ideas of Western civilization, we as Austrians and Americans share a common heritage which if we will only realize it, should make us friends and brothers for all the centuries to come.

Carroll Reece Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARENCE J. BROWN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, Saturday, June 25, was Carroll Reece Day in Tennessee.

Our colleague was honored upon completion of 40 years of public service. The people of his district under the sponsorship of the Roan Mountain Citizens Club selected as a site for this occasion the Rhododendron Festival which has been held atop the 6,400-foot Roan Mountain as an annual event for 14 years.

---

[1] Austrian and German words for cauliflower.

The setting for this event was on one of the highest peaks in the East which presents one of the most beautiful panoramas and outlooks in America with 600 acres of purple rhododendron in the background and a clear vista in all directions as far as the eye can carry.

Thousands of east Tennesseans and many from out of the State converged on Roan Mountain to honor CARROLL REECE.

The program for Carroll Reece Day was on the format of "This Is Your Life." He was 29 years of age when he was first elected to the 67th Congress in 1920. This was soon after CARROLL REECE returned from World War I where he received many awards for bravery, including the Distinguished Service Cross, Distinguished Service Metal, Purple Heart, and Croix de Guerre with Palm. He was cited for bravery by General Pershing, Marshal Pétain, General Edwards, Generals Hale and Lewis.

On this memorable occasion he was saluted by many editorials in the Tennessee newspapers and by more than 600 letters and telegrams from his colleagues in Congress, Government officials, including the President, Vice President, and members of the Cabinet as well as from many of his friends and admirers throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it would be appropriate and of interest to bring to the attention of the House some of these well deserved tributes which were paid to CARROLL REECE on this occasion.

[From the Nashville Banner, June 25, 1960]

MR. REECE: AMERICAN

A vast majority of Tennesseans are able to put aside political partisanship and pay honor to a deserving native son, regardless of his political affiliations.

This refusal of Tennesseans to put party above the man has manifested itself twice in recent years. Though predominantly Democratic, the State gave President Eisenhower a majority in both 1952 and 1956.

And this independence is being exhibited today at Roan Mountain where B. CARROLL REECE, Tennessee's "Mr. Republican," will be the guest of honor as thousands gather for the colorful rhododendron festival.

The tribute will follow the format of the TV show, "This Is Your Life," and will trace the highlights of Mr. REECE's long and successful career which is marked by success not only in the political arena, but as a businessman and soldier.

Mr. REECE is a politician in the finest sense of the word. He is being recognized today upon the completion of 40 years' service as U.S. Representative from Tennessee's First Congressional District.

Congressman REECE is a party man and proud of it. Today he is serving as chairman of the Republican State Committee and he speaks with a strong voice in national party councils. During one of the few breaks in his long congressional career, the east Tennessee legislator was National GOP Committee chairman.

Today he serves as president of two banking institutions and as chairman of the board of a third. Mr. REECE also is a lawyer, having graduated from nearby Cumberland University.

And Tennessee has had few sons who have served in the Nation's Armed Forces with such distinction.

A battalion commander with the American Expeditionary Forces during World War I, he is a holder of the Distinguished Service Cross, Distinguished Service Medal, Purple Heart, and French Croix de Guerre. He was cited for bravery by both General Pershing and Marshal Pétain, of France.

He is now 70 years old. His political career began at 30.

The Congressman is a candidate for an 18th term in the House of Representatives. He has never lost a Republican primary election and only once lost a congressional race, but at that Mr. REECE was only sidelined for one term. He won the next election.

During his lifetime, the veteran Congressman has received many honors, but this recognition today by his fellow Tennesseans must rank with the best.

[From the Bristol Herald Courier, June 19, 1960]

REPRESENTATIVE CARROLL REECE: HIS DAY AND YEAR

Representative B. CARROLL REECE, when he's in a reminiscent mood, likes to recall how he came down out of the mountains of Johnson County to the flatter lands which form the upper part of the Tennessee Valley.

That he did come down from those mountains is a fact of considerable importance to east Tennessee, for the years which followed led him into a career of public service matched by few men in America.

Next Saturday, Representative REECE will, as he has done on countless occasions in the past, reclimb the mountains which stretch between the Volunteer State and North Carolina.

Though not in Johnson County, his journey will be, in a sense, symbolical. And it will not be without deserving cause.

For, on June 25, during the annual Rhododendron Festival atop Roan Mountain, Carroll Reece Day will be observed. It will be a day of special tribute to a man who, through long, long years, has served his part of the mountain empire in the halls of Government.

The citizens of the First District of Tennessee, the citizens of many other great districts in our region and in our Nation, know of this service. They know the personal touch which B. CARROLL REECE has with his constituents. They know of the quiet effective manner he employs to move mountain-like obstacles which might hinder the growth of his district, his State, and his Nation.

So B. Carroll Reece Day will, undoubtedly, be a great success. But we trust the tribute will not end there.

This is another election year, another year in which Representative REECE will again place his record of service before the voters of east Tennessee, another year in a career which he chose long ago and which he has followed in a dedicated manner.

Let us, then, make this a B. Carroll Reece Year. And, in November, let us give him a mountainous majority as we return him to Congress to continue serving the First District.

We extend to Representative REECE our heartiest congratulations on being honored during the festival on Roan Mountain. We extend to him, too, our full support in his campaign for reelection.

[From the Johnson City (Tenn.) Press-Chronicle, June 24, 1960]

AT ROAN MOUNTAIN—CARROLL REECE DAY—A FITTING OCCASION

Tomorrow will be Carroll Reece Day at the Roan Mountain Rhododendron Festival, and in our view nothing could be finer.

It is certainly fitting that concrete action be taken in the First District to honor Mr. REECE, for he has honored the district and its people by consistent support of their interests in Congress since he was first elected in 1920.

It is to Mr. REECE's enduring glory that his popularity among the people has grown as his service has lengthened. And, remarkably, this popularity knows no party boundaries; it is almost as widespread in the Democratic Party as in the Republican, under whose banner he operates.

The reason for such bipartisan support is, of course, obvious. It lies in the fact that Mr. REECE's service to his constituents is bipartisan. A man or a woman seeking his help does not have to take a party loyalty oath. Mr. REECE does not ask, "Did you vote for me?" If the person is from his district—or another district, for that matter—he is immediately interested and concerned.

It is to the Congressman's credit that, though he has attained national stature, he has not lost touch with the folks back home. He still speaks their language and shares their philosophy, and that is important.

There are few Congressmen, perhaps none, who are more widely influential than he. He is a troubleshooter extraordinary. He knows the intricacies of national politics so thoroughly that he can cut through the red tape which so often ties down the unknowing. It is said of him that if he can't do it, nobody can.

Considering all this—and it is only a general appraisal—it is no wonder he is so highly regarded, no wonder he has no serious opposition when he comes before the people for reelection. In past years the First District split sharply into Reece and anti-Reece factions. That time is gone. Any opposition he has in these days is of the most token sort.

And so we join the sponsors of the Roan Mountain festival in saluting this man. And we express the hope he will have many more fruitful years in Congress.

CARROLL REECE DAY

Saturday is Carroll Reece Day at the Rhododendron Festival atop Roan Mountain.

Certainly, no one in the 14-county First Congressional District is more deserving of such an honor than the man who has represented that district in Congress for 16 terms.

CARROLL REECE, the "Mister Republican" of Tennessee, has given the people of his district the kind of conservative representation they want.

Elected as a Republican, REECE has served the GOP faithfully in district, State, and Nation as national chairman, and now State chairman.

He is a personal friend of the President and of the Vice President. He has known all of the party's leaders for the 40 years he has been in politics.

But CARROLL REECE represents all of the people of his district, regardless of politics. When a constituent comes to him with a problem, he never asks whether that person voted for him or not.

Indeed, it is this very characteristic—the willingness to drop everything to look after a constituent's interests—that has made CARROLL REECE such a perennial favorite among Democrats and Republicans alike in his district.

One of the reasons that CARROLL REECE gives the First District such good representation in the House is his ability to understand his constituents' problems. He speaks their language.

REECE has been a combat veteran, a college professor, a farmer, a successful businessman.

He has known poverty and hardships. He has known what it is to work with his hands and his back. He has known what it is like to advance under enemy fire to assault an objective.

He is a family man and a churchgoer.

Thus, CARROLL REECE can listen with sympathy and understanding to the problems of a veteran, a farmer, a small businessman, a laborer, a housewife.

But what of REECE, the nationally known political leader?

As chairman of his party, he masterminded the campaign that returned a Republican Congress to power in 1946.

As a member of the powerful House Rules Committee, he helps channel the many pieces of legislation onto the floor for debate.

As chairman of the Reece committee, he exposed the leftist tendencies of some of the Nation's most powerful foundations and thus brought down on his head the wrath of the so-called liberals.

He is a trained economist and as such, has helped check the trend toward wayward spending that has for too long been typical of big government.

CARROLL REECE is essentially a quiet, modest man. He does not make a big splash in Washington. He is not a headline-seeker.

But in his deliberate, efficient way—through his many contacts in all three branches of government and on both sides of the aisle—he gets things done.

The First District, the State and the Nation have good reason to be proud of Congressman CARROLL REECE. He deserves being returned to Congress.

CONGRATULATIONS EXTENDED TO REECE AND TO FORTUNATE CONSTITUENTS, AS HE IS HONORED AT ROAN FETE

This weekend, upper east Tennessee is putting on the 14th annual Rhodendron Festival sponsored by the Roan Mountain Citizens Club, of which Byron F. Graybeal is president.

The celebration is given interest to the whole of the First Congressional District, however, by the fact that today is to be celebrated as Carroll Reece Day, in special tribute to the district's Representative who is in the process of being nominated for reelection without opposition in his own party.

The fact that Mr. REECE is being singled out for special honor in the 4-day celebration in Carter County, with the site Roan Mountain, will appeal to many east Tennesseans as especially fitting.

CARROLL REECE this year rounds out his 40th year in public life. In all of the years since 1920, with the exception of one 2-year period in which he served as chairman of the Republican National Committee, Mr. REECE has not only represented the First Congressional District, but as leader of the Republican organization in the State, has placed himself at the beck and call of citizens of both party affiliations as their go-between in relationship to their Washington Government.

Above and beyond his service to the district and to our home State, from these four decades of public service, Mr. REECE has emerged as one of the political powers in the Capital itself. We have frequently heard the opinion expressed in Washington that the First District Representative is one of the most effective men in the Capital so far as getting things done is concerned, no matter whether the administration is, at the moment, Republican or Democrat.

We congratulate Representative REECE upon the honor which is being done him today by his constituents, and no less congratulate them upon their good judgment in keeping a man of his character and unusual abilities in Congress during all these years.

[From the Elizabethton Star, June 24, 1960]

B. CARROLL REECE

The people tomorrow of Carter County and east Tennessee will have an opportunity to display their respect and affection for a great Tennessean and a great American—Representative CARROLL REECE—by turning out to do him honor at the Carroll Reece Day ceremonies on Roan Mountain.

To those of us who have known this man, and that includes practically every man and woman in this district, CARROLL REECE symbolizes the great American ideal. Born of meager circumstances, Mr. REECE has attained high stature not only in his Nation but throughout the world.

Yet, perhaps his highest praise and greatest virtue is that he has remained a man of his people. His thoughts and concern have been first of his people's welfare, and many residents of Carter County and all of east Tennessee can cite examples of his compassion to them in their hour of need. This to us is the measure of this man's greatness.

In the Halls of Congress, among the great and influential men of national affairs, he is known for his good works * * * as the brilliant boy professor at New York University, as the most decorated for bravery in all of Congress, as the holder of the Distinguished Service Cross, the Croix de Guerre, the Distinguished Service Medal, the Purple Heart and other high awards, as the former national chairman of the Republican Party, as a great legislator whose 36 years in Congress have spanned a period which history shall record as being the momentous in the proud history of our Republic, as a man of his word, a friend of Presidents and diplomats throughout the world, and as a counsel to mighty men whose hands have shaped the course of history, he will long be remembered.

This is the man Carter County and east Tennessee will honor June 25. And we claim him for our own.

REPRESENTATIVE CARROLL REECE DAY AT RHODODENDRON FESTIVAL

On Saturday, June 25, the Rhododendron Festival at Roan Mountain will honor Representative CARROLL REECE for his service to that area and to all of east Tennessee.

Mr. REECE was born in the mountains of east Tennessee, and is a genuine example of the "Horatio Alger" story of hard work and success. In 1920 he was elected to Congress, the youngest Member of the 67th Congress. Then in 1946 to 1948 he served as Republican national chairman. It is interesting to note that under his leadership the Republican Party elected the greatest majority in Congress that they have known in recent years.

All of east Tennessee will join with the Rhododendron Festival on Saturday in paying tribute to a citizen who has served his area and his country well.

This community has on many occasions called on him for help. The quiet effective manner in which he was able to move mountains which might have hindered the growth of this area have made a lasting impression on his fellow citizens.

We extend our heartiest congratulations to our distinguished Representative in Congress on Carroll Reece Day. We hope that many of our citizens will journey to Roan Mountain on Saturday, not only to see the magnificent scenery, but to pay honor to a man who has distinguished himself by public service not only to his district, his State, but to his Nation.

[From the Newport Plain Talk and Tribune, June 23, 1960]

HE DESERVES THE HONOR

Congressman B. CARROLL REECE will receive recognition Saturday of this week when he attends the annual Rhododendron Festival on Roan Mountain. The occasion will be known as Carroll Reece Day and the Republican Representative will be honored for his public service at which he has spent over 40 years.

Congressman REECE's outstanding public record is known like a book to Cocke Countians where he is known by practically every adult person. Cocke Countians know him as the youngest man to be elected to the 67th Congress in 1920; they are familiar with his 2 years as Republican national chairman when the Republicans elected the greatest majority of their Members in recent years; they know him as a public-spirited Representative and have followed his public life with interest down through the 40 years he has served them.

Yet, Cocke Countians know this man because of other reasons. They have learned to love and respect him due to his personal interest locally. They like to feel that he is a personal friend. They say with pride that they can write Mr. REECE and receive an immediate reply. They tell of instances where he has helped men in service, veterans of the wars and their families. They tell the story of the young man who has made good.

In short, Cocke Countians like Congressman REECE.

We are glad to see our neighbors do him honor and our congratulations are extended to Mr. REECE and those in charge of the big festival.

REPRESENTATIVE REECE TO CONTINUE LIFE OF PUBLIC SERVICE

ROAN MOUNTAIN.—Representative B. CARROLL REECE, who has spent nearly half of his 70 years representing the First District in Congress, has pledged the remainder of his life to the service of his people.

"Forty years is not such a long time," the nationally acclaimed Republican leader joked before a crowd of several hundred persons who had gathered to honor him Saturday on Roan Mountain in REECE's native upper east Tennessee.

REECE's address was the highlight of Carroll Reece Day ceremonies held in connection with the 14th annual Rhododendron Festival. The special tribute was arranged in honor of the Johnson City Congressman's 40 years of service to his district.

Unopposed for reelection to an 18th term in the U.S. House of Representatives, the veteran Congressman told the audience that the United States will maintain its position of military strength which he described as sufficient to destroy the Soviet Union.

"As long as I am in Congress," REECE said, "I will devote all of my efforts and all of my energies, not only to doing things for the people of my district, but toward maintaining the Nation's strong military and economic position."

REECE's famous broad smile appeared when Knoxville attorney, Ray Jenkins, master of ceremonies for the occasion, referred to the Congressman as "Mr. Republican." Cheers from the audience filled the air atop the mountain when Jenkins suggested that REECE would make a good running mate for Vice President RICHARD NIXON in the 1960 presidential elections.

Accompanied by his wife and his daughter, Mrs. George W. Marthens III, and several other relatives, REECE appeared the happiest when messages of best wishes from President Eisenhower and Vice President NIXON were read to the applauding audience. These messages, along with more than 600 others from every Member of Congress, every Governor, and several members of President Eisenhower's Cabinet, were presented, to the Congressman.

A plaque presented by the Roan Mountain Citizens Club, sponsors of the festival, praised REECE for his outstanding service during war and peace.

Jenkins introduced REECE, describing him as a meteor born to burn, and traced the Congressman's life from his early days in his native Johnson County.

* * * * *

REECE, who has maintained a reputation for speaking the language of the folks back home throughout the years, has never lost a Republican primary race.

Mr. Speaker, among the many messages of tribute which CARROLL REECE received, I feel that I should include in my remarks those from the President and Vice President:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D.C., June 24, 1960.

RAY JENKINS,
In Care of K. Wayne Graybeal,
Roan Mountain, Tenn.:

It is a pleasure to join in the observance of Carroll Reece Day. This day should be celebrated in Tennessee and across the land. As an outstanding Member of Congress for many years, Congressman REECE has not only served his neighbors at home but also his countrymen throughout the Nation. An able and courageous leader in war and peace, he is a credit to America. Please give CARROLL my heartiest congratulations and best wishes.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

OFFICE OF THE VICE PRESIDENT,
Washington, D.C., June 17, 1960.

Mr. BYRON GRAYBEAL,
Chairman, Citizens Committee of Roan Mountain, Roan Mountain, Tenn.

DEAR MR. GRAYBEAL: This is just a note to extend my earnest best wishes for a splendid success for the Carroll Reece Day which your committee is staging in connection with the annual Rhododendron Festival.

I have known and counted upon CARROLL REECE as a loyal friend and valued adviser since I first became a Member of the House of Representatives and I know of no one in public life more deserving of the grand tribute you plan. By his diligence, his keen analyses of developing situations and his intimate knowledge of national affairs as well as of affairs in his home area, he has won the widest respect and admiration of his colleagues in the Congress. It is indeed an honor to join the innumerable friends of CARROLL REECE in wishing him well on the occasion of this recognition of his 40 years of public service. In my opinion, your area is indeed fortunate to have the leadership of CARROLL REECE.

With kind regards.

Sincerely,

RICHARD NIXON.

Address of Congressman Victor L. Anfuso

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LYNDON B. JOHNSON
OF TEXAS
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, 30 years of dedicated work in behalf of human welfare, world peace, and human justice by my old and dear friend, VICTOR L. ANFUSO, the distinguished Representative from the Eighth District in New York, was recently recognized by the Order Brith Abraham at that great fraternity's 73d annual convention.

Presentation of Brith Abraham's Humanity Award was not the first honor to come to this able and outstanding public servant. In 1946 Congressman ANFUSO was appointed by Pope Pius XII as Knight Commander of the Knights of the Holy Sepulchre for his humanitarian work on behalf of youth.

So that we might set down in his own words the thinking of this great American, I ask unanimous consent that Congressman ANFUSO's speech, delivered at the time of the presentation of the Brith Abraham award, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS BY CONGRESSMAN VICTOR L. ANFUSO, GRAND MASTER'S DINNER, ORDER BRITH ABRAHAM, CONCORD HOTEL, KIAMESHA LAKE, N.Y., JUNE 28, 1960

Grand Master Maurice Goldstein, Past Grand Master Irving Hodes, Judge George Radar, members of the national executive board, my good friends of the Order Brith Abraham, ladies and gentlemen, I feel highly honored by the decision of your national executive board to present the annual Brith Abraham Humanity Award this year to me. I am very flattered to join the illustrious men who have been the recipients of this award in the past. I had hoped that my very good friend and great majority leader of the U.S. Senate, the Honorable LYNDON B. JOHNSON, could have been here too, but as someone aptly put it here tonight—somebody has to mind the store in Washington.

This is indeed a signal honor, especially cherished by me since it comes from Brith Abraham, the oldest national fraternal order. In accepting this award, I am thinking of the old but wise observation in chapter 28 of Proverbs in the Bible, which says:

"He that tilleth his ground shall be filled with bread; but he that followeth idleness shall be filled with poverty."

I'd like to think that your award to me today, although I assure you that I feel as though I do not deserve it, is the bread for tilling the soil of humanity all these years—the recognition for my labors in the vineyard of mankind. I did not follow the course of idleness, and so today I am not a poor man; I have many friends—all of you—and you have been very kind to me.

We live in a very exciting age, but also a very dangerous age. Two opposing ideologies are waging a life-and-death struggle for survival, and we are not merely witnesses to this struggle—we are participants in it. Consequently, we cannot afford to come out second best, for that would mean the destruction of our way of life and our civilization.

Speaking of being second best, reminds me of the topsy-turvy way of looking at events as they are practiced in the Communist countries. When they speak of democracy, they mean their brand of "peoples' democracy" which is actually dictatorship. When they refer to political freedom, they mean freedom to preach only communism. They think in different terms and act in different ways, and we will have to learn to understand their ways because the first requisite in this ideological conflict is to understand your enemy.

By way of illustration, let me tell you a little story. A very important international sweepstakes took place one day. The only entries in that sweepstakes were one American horse named "Reluctant Capitalist," and one Russian horse named "Glorious Revolution." The winner of the sweepstakes was the American horse. But here is how the outcome was reported by the Soviet press and radio:

"Our great Soviet horse 'Glorious Revolution' came in second. The American entry 'Reluctant Capitalist' came in next to last."

An enemy of that kind of mentality is never wrong, he will not tolerate any kind of criticism. In a democracy such as ours we have learned to appreciate criticism and to live in tolerance with our neighbors of different racial or national origin, or different religious faiths.

To be sure, we have our problems here. We have problems of discrimination and prejudice against people who have a different color of skin, or worship a different God. We have problems of the perverted minds who find a thrill in smearing a swastika on a synagogue, or burning a cross near the home of a Negro or a Jew or a Catholic. They do not understand that their deeds are merely testimony that their minds are perverted and their hearts are full of hatred for their fellow men. We have the fanatics who are using the U.S. mails to distribute "hate literature," in an effort to divide the American people and to undermine the fabric of our national existence.

And while I am on this subject, allow me to digress for a brief moment to pay a well-deserved tribute to Brith Abraham and to Grand Master Maurice Goldstein for waging a campaign to stop the distribution of this trash through the U.S. mails. I remember well your grand master's excellent editorial "Crime Against Humanity" and his letter to President Eisenhower a few months ago urging him to take action against the spread of racial hatred, because it was "destructive to our national peace and unity." I had both, the letter and the editorial, inserted into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I wish you success, Maurice Goldstein, in your new campaign against discrimination and to better our youth.

I should also like to pay tribute to the oldest living grand master of Brith Abraham, but—I assure you—young at heart, Judge Adolph Stern. Also to the second in seniority of the past grand masters, my very dear friend and president of my club, if you please, the honorable Samuel Goldstein.

Finally, and certainly not last in my esteem, the unsung hero of Brith Abraham, a man who doesn't know how to say no to any good cause of any faith, the man who—believe me, my friends—is more deserving of your great award than I am—everybody's friend, Sam Rubenstein.

My friends, we have reached a stage where it is no longer possible or desirable to justify racial and religious discrimination—and yet maintain that we are a moral nation. If we deny to certain groups the opportunities to develop their skills and talents—be it Jews, Negroes, Italians, or others—then it is a contradiction of our own democratic principles and we are actually causing irretrievable harm to the interests of the Nation.

I believe the time is long overdue to eliminate all manifestations of hatred and intolerance in this country, and thus keep clean the good name of the United States throughout the world. It was not so very long ago that we fought a savage war against the Nazis and their theories of racial supremacy. In that struggle our country stood forth as the world leader of democracy and human dignity. Freedom-loving people everywhere have not forgotten that struggle, they still look to the United States as the leader in the cause of democracy and human rights against those who are trampling on these rights now.

Today we find great nations, who in the past have made wonderful contributions to civilization—such as the Russians and the Chinese—now spreading hatred against their fellow men. I cannot recall a period in history when the world was so full of hatred of man against man, of the Communist world against America and the free world, of black against white, of Arab against Jew, et cetera. Instead of love, instead of neighborliness and understanding, instead of cooperation and the desire to establish peaceful relations among the nations for the benefit of all mankind—we see a world torn by hatred, divided by suspicion, and tottering on the brink of a new holocaust which threatens to destroy both victor and vanquished.

I do not know whether we shall ever succeed in convincing the Communist world that we are anxious for peace, and that it must be a peace based on honor, freedom, and dignity. Perhaps our best answer to communism and those who preach the Communist ideology is to maintain and preserve human rights throughout the free world, to assure freedom to all peoples, and to guarantee them a life of dignity and honor for all, regardless of race, color, or creed.

Here, in the United States, we fought a revolution to attain our own independence. Yet, we cannot understand the surge for freedom in other nations. We call it Communist-inspired. We are wrong. It may be encouraged by the Communists, but the inspiration and surge for freedom and independence exists in all peoples—whether black, yellow, or white. When we understand this we will have these peoples as our friends and prevent the influence of communism—and only then.

Let us have one thing clear in our minds: America is today the only major power that is able to thwart the efforts of the Communist leaders to gain world domination. That means, unless we decide to guarantee the freedom and the human rights for all people, we are in danger of losing them for all people, including ourselves. And that is what I had in mind earlier when I said that we live in an exciting age, but a dangerous one.

I should like now, with your kind indulgence, to devote the concluding part of my remarks to a subject which is undoubtedly of utmost interest to all of you, namely, the controversy over the so-called Eichmann case. Before I discuss this case, however, might I say that it is my firm conviction that the people of Israel are not capable of an injustice and I am sure they will give Eichmann a fair trial.

I wish to, first of all, commend the United Nations for its mild censure resolution and Argentina for its restraint. I interpret the resolution as not denying to Israel the right to try this barbarian.

I regret that this matter has become involved by all sorts of legalisms which only detract from the main purpose, namely, to try the greatest and most despicable Nazi war criminal who directed the extermination of 6 million Jews in Hitler's gas chambers. This is a case involving a crime which has no parallel in human history; hence it requires unusual action.

I have nothing but respect for a people which for many long years pursued and finally tracked down the murderer of 6 million of its kinsmen. Any other people suffering a similar tragedy would do the same, and having apprehended the killer probably would have taken his life. But in the tradition of the "People of the Book" Israel has seen fit to permit this mass killer to survive, to be brought before the bar of justice so that a complete story of the abominable history of annihilation might be placed on the record.

I am certain that the United Nations recognized the international agreement which applies to this situation. That is the declaration signed on October 30, 1943, at the height of World War II between the United States, Great Britain, and the Soviet Union in which they agreed that the principle of "territoriality of jurisdiction" does not apply because the Nazi crimes were not limited to a "specific geographic location." Furthermore, the declaration states that "Nazi war criminals may be tried and punished by the people whom they have outraged. " Since the Jews were the primary victims, there can be no question as to their right to try Eichmann.

It is fitting that an Israeli courtroom be the forum where a detailed history of Nazi genocide should be recorded. There the full tale will unfold with the identity of all who aided, abetted or condoned the dastardly acts fearlessly exposed. No person, no nation, should escape exposure. In this bastion of democracy the world will be assured of complete disclosure of all the facts without fear or favor.

Let Israel invite the nations of the world to send their finest legal talent to assure that justice prevails. Thus the forum of this trial will be given an international atmosphere, appropriate for the trial against one accused of a crime against all humanity.

Israel's trial of Eichmann is not motivated by the concept of revenge. It will be guided by the supreme judaic concept of justice. Since Eichmann was brought to Israel, the people there have not made any outraged demands to destroy him without trial. They have not threatened lynching—they are calm and collected—only awaiting the final day of judgment before the bar of justice.

I know that justice will prevail. A democratic Israel in the tradition of the prophets and judges shall record for posterity a verbatim account of the Nazi atrocities, and will mete out justice in accordance with the wisdom of a Solomon.

It may interest you to know that there is no capital punishment in Israel for an ordinary crime of murder. But the law of the land does provide execution for genocide. However, it is very possible that after Israel has exposed this heinous crime against all humanity, Israel may propose to turn this arch-war-criminal to an international genocide committee for punishment. It will be a great tribute to Israel to make such a move as an international warning that the free world will not tolerate the whim of a despot, dictator or any government responsible for mass destruction of a race without regard to human rights.

I want to commend to you a little prayer which, I think, best expresses our feelings on this occasion:

"God give us the patience to accept that which cannot be changed.
Give us the courage to change that which can and should be changed.
And, above all, give us the wisdom to know which is which."

It is with a great deal of humility and deep appreciation my friends that I accept the "Humanity Award" of the order of this great family of brothers and sisters—Brith Abraham. I want to thank the officers and leaders of this great organization for bestowing this honor upon me. I want to assure you that I shall continue to exert all possible effort toward the fulfillment of the noble principles of your organization—unity, liberty and justice.

Importation of Surplus Property

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN M. SLACK, JR.
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. SLACK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to go on record in vigorous opposition to the measure before the House, H.R. 9996, which is titled as "A bill to prescribe procedures to insure that foreign excess property which is disposed of overseas will not be imported into the United States to the injury of the economy of this country."

A great deal of confusion seems to have arisen about the objectives of this proposal. The proponents contend that the bill will simply devise a framework within which the administrators in the Department of Commerce may issue sound and equitable regulations governing the importation of foreign surplus property. By registering opposition, I do not imply that the Committee on Government Operations merits criticism for suggesting this means to that particular end. The fact is, however, that any rearrangement of existing regulations, in conformance with a new statute adopted in this body, must inevitably lead to the importation from abroad of more Government-owned surplus property to compete with goods produced for our domestic market, and I am unalterably opposed to that end result.

This fact is beyond question by anyone who has read the committee report on H.R. 9996. The report states that the Department of Commerce has maintained tight controls over the importation of excess property, and as a result the importers of such property have complained in consquence that the Department "had become so strict in its application of the law and so few authorizations were issued that a virtual moratorium was being placed on the importation of foreign excess property." Now, I submit, if a virtual moratorium exists today, then the passage of this bill can have only one effect—the opening of some new channel permitting the entry of such property in volume.

All of us, I am sure, favor orderly and equitable administrative processes in the Federal departments, but we must think of this issue within the framework of contemporary economics. Most of this surplus property consists of manufactured goods, produced in this country and shipped overseas. If it can be bought from the Federal Government, shipped back, and sold at a profit, then it has considerable utility. But, if so, it has not less than that amount of utility in less developed countries. Let it be channeled to those areas of the world whose friendship and support we seek.

This is not the time to return vast quantities of surplus property as a threat to domestic market stability. Our first responsibility is to the maintenance and advancement of our domestic production and employment structure. In that connection, we read in the daily press that there are an estimated 130,000 steelworkers idle, and the black word "recession" begins to crop up again in the writings of our economists.

As to the importers—no strong case has been made in behalf of their claims. It has not been established that they merit any special dispensation to enable them to compete with the established dealers and jobbers of this country who bear much of the burden of taxation and supply the bedrock on which so many American payrolls are based.

In view of these considerations, I am opposed to H.R. 9996 or any similar efforts to legitimatize increased imports of foreign excess property. I am confident that my opposition will find favor with an overwhelming majority of my constituents and equally confident that rejection of this bill will be approved by the great majority of all Americans.

Need for Coordinated Defense of the Free World

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JESSICA McC. WEIS
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mrs. WEIS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of this body to a most timely and significant address prepared for delivery by my predecessor in the House, Senator KENNETH B. KEATING before the New York State Convention of the Italian-American War Veterans, at Rochester, N.Y., on June 18. Senator KEATING was unable to attend this convention in person, because of the extended sessions of the Senate. In his absence, the Senator's speech was read by Judge John J. Lomenzo, an eminent Rochester jurist who has long been an outstanding leader in the Italian-American Veterans organization.

The theme of Senator KEATING's address is the need for the coordinated defense of the free world in the face of the massive and single-minded Communist plan of global conquest.

Mr. Speaker, under leave previously granted, I ask that this address by Senator KEATING be printed in the RECORD.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR KENNETH B. KEATING, PREPARED FOR DELIVERY AT THE DEPARTMENT OF NEW YORK CONVENTION OF THE ITALIAN-AMERICAN WAR VETERANS OF THE UNITED STATES, HOTEL POWERS, ROCHESTER, N.Y., JUNE 18, 1960

I am always happy to talk to a group of veterans. You men have fought for our freedom. For that reason you have a sharpened sense of what it means to defend something you hold dear. That is why you have organized—because you know that freedom is not something you lock up in a vault—not something you can forget about once you have won it. And it is about winning it and holding it that I want to talk to you tonight.

In these times we live in, defense is no longer a purely military term. The man with a gun—the man who fires a missile—the man who commands a submarine—each of them is only a cog in the total machinery of defense—and that machinery is so expanded, so complex, that every American citizen, whether he realizes it or not, is a part of the defense posture that we maintain against the potential enemy.

We must realize this new concept of defense. We must act as though it existed—because it does. The battlefield we used to know were specific areas of terrain or of ocean. There is only one battle area today, and it is the globe.

There are only two opposing forces, only two types of fighter—on the one hand the man who is battling to overrun the free world, on the other the man who stands defending the ramparts of freedom, and says, "They shall not pass." It is that simple. It is that tremendous—that fateful—and don't think it isn't a war because you can't hear the whine of bullets, or see men die around you. Men are dying—but it is a death of the spirit—the death of those who were once free, but who have been overrun by the advance patrols of tyranny.

The great challenge to men like yourselves—to men who have known war—is to alert those about you to the tremendous fact of the reality of the silent struggle in which our lives, our futures, the futures of all humanity, are involved this hour, this day. And if they don't think freedom is at war, that freedom must defend itself—tell them to read the casualty list—give them the names of the battle losses—Hungary, Poland, Rumania, China, Lithuania—and all the rest of the fallen. And show them Cuba, mortally wounded, struggling before our very eyes. This is not a dry run.

Freedom is being shot dead—and because the weapons are lies and promises, and trade concessions and duplicity doesn't make the killing any less brutal, any less final.

In our early history we could see the enemy we fought. They marched abreast against us, and it was their markmanship and courage against ours. Today, we face a ghost army across the world—an unseen enemy whose battle plan is precise, intensive, and devastating. They know what they want—a Communist world—and all the fire of their energy, all the scheming of their intellect are directed toward the accomplishment of that mission.

That is what I meant by the new concept of defense. It must be new—must be retooled—to cope with this new kind of menace. And that defense doesn't begin in an arms factory—or on a launching site. It begins in the minds and in the hearts of the American people. It begins when we burn into those minds and hearts the sense of danger that exists, and the critical and compelling need to face up to the life-and-death implications of that danger.

The first thing many Americans must do is to wash their minds clean of outmoded ideas of what war is, what danger is. Victory is no longer something that can be turned out of factories operating on round-the-clock shifts. War today has a new dimension, and that new dimension has changed everything. The tree of freedom isn't blasted by a bomb. It is infiltrated by thousands of termites—and, if left unchecked, they do the work of a bomb, silently but no less thoroughly. And these termites fatten on each freedom tree that falls—and are the stronger to attack new trees—to lay waste the entire orchard of human freedom.

If we want a more recent, more striking example of the Communist technique of subversion—of their termite activities—we have only to consider the current situation in Japan. Red China and Moscow set up these demonstrations, planned their strategy well in advance, and financed this spectacular—and rehearsed it—with all the skill and cunning at their command. When I say financed, I mean financed. Don't think for a minute that the funds for this supercolossal manifestation of hatred came from the coffers of the Japanese Communist Party. It's not that big, not that strong.

A report I have received from the most reliable source says that the hard core of Communist demonstrators were paid $1.65 a day—a fantastically high labor wage by Asian standards—simply to light the fires of revolt and keep them burning until the Communist objective was achieved. This is how the Kremlin and Peiping operate. This is how they keep boring into freedom like worms into an apple. This is the raw technique of conquest—the use of the mob—the trained and well rehearsed mob—as a bludgeon to beat down the forces of duly constituted government, to create the anarchy in which communism thrives and gains power.

Because communism is a massive aggression, it must be met by a massive defense. We must see this drama on the wide screen of global perspective. We must not think of freedom as an American family jewel locked safe within our borders. Freedom is bigger than that, bigger than any nation, than any individual. Wherever it is threatened, we are threatened. Wherever communism gains ground, we inevitably lose ground.

The trouble with many of us is that while we concede that a shooting war is expensive, we have a feeling that peace ought to be available at bargain rates. The error, of course, is clear. We're not buying ships and tanks and rifles.

We're buying freedom—we're buying national security. And in the world we live in right now freedom and security have a price tag on them—a big price tag—but a price tag we must pay.

In this connection, let me say a word about our mutual security program—because this strikes at the heart of the matter. The popular cry of "giveaway" has been directed at this program. It is referred to by its opponents as "foreign aid." Indeed, I doubt if any program in our history has been so maligned, so misunderstood. Actually, this whole program, is a part—a vital indispensable part—of our defense posture.

To call it a gift is like trucking a load of live ammo up to your buddies in the line, and saying, "This is a little gift, boys, in case things start to get hot." The simple truth, of course, is that when you face a worldwide enemy, you use a worldwide strategy of defense. If you don't, you get boxed in—and by then your line of defense has shriveled to your own doorstep. When that happens you've lost your chance to buy defense. You're in the market for survival.

The recent summit conference didn't actually happen. It exploded on the launching pad—because Khrushchev wanted it to explode.

But this very failure drove home to us a lesson that we cannot learn too well—the fact that the Kremlin grand strategy is to split the free world alliance. And the reason they seek to split it is because a solid NATO mass of power is the prime roadblock to Communist ambitions for world conquest.

That is precisely why we must seek an ever closer relationship with the nations that stand beside us in opposition to the Soviet grand strategy. That is why mutual security is not a slogan, not a catchword. It's the life insurance policy of the free world.

The closer identification of ourselves with other free nations—this welding together of our common energies and purposes into our shield of freedom must not remain a wistful dream. It must be made a hard reality—a policy, not just a proposal. To this end we must think big if we are going to be big. We must welcome every opportunity—indeed, we must create opportunities to strengthen the sense of oneness, of solidarity that is the basic source of free world strength.

Barriers must be broken down, bridges must be built to bring us ever nearer to our friends—in a world where freedom needs all the friends it can find.

The history of America is the history of the transfusion of vitality, of energy, of talent, yes, of genius, that we have received from foreign lands through immigration. No other land, surely, has excelled Italy as a source of these gifts and those qualities that have contributed so much to the development and prosperity of our Nation. Indeed, your own fine veterans organization is a living and dynamic symbol of the historic blood brotherhood that exists between America and the great Italian nation. It is this spirit of brotherhood, of solidarity that must be extended throughout the entire free world—if we are to present the massive and impregnable shield that fends off the driving blows of communism.

Let us be thankful, each of us in his own heart, that we meet here tonight as free men. Let us feel, too, what we have a right to feel—the pride of men who have fought in freedom's name—of men who have fought to preserve the things we hold dearer than life: the right of free man to his personal beliefs, to his sense of dignity, to the shaping and control of his own destiny.

The freedom we fought for—that Americans have fought for on all the battlefields of our history—cost many lives, many sacrifices, many sorrows. Let us pledge ourselves, therefore, to protect and defend it. It is the most precious heritage we possess. It is the most precious legacy we can leave our children.

Citizenship Day and Constitution Week, 1960

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JOHN BELL WILLIAMS

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I include the President's proclamation designating the week of September 17 through 23, 1960, as "Constitution Week" and also a reprint of an article from the September 13, 1959, issue of the New Orleans Times-Picayune by Comdr. Robert W. Collins, U.S. Navy Reserve. They follow:

CITIZENSHIP DAY AND CONSTITUTION WEEK, 1960

A PROCLAMATION BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Whereas our life as a nation is founded upon the Constitution of the United States, the oldest and most tested written Constitution in the world; and

Whereas it is fitting that our citizens, both native born and naturalized, observe the birthday of the Constitution and reaffirm their determination to support its principles, which have a universal appeal and application and are an inspiration to freedom-loving people everywhere; and

Whereas by a joint resolution approved February 29, 1952 (66 Stat. 9), the Congress designated the 17th day of September of each year as "Citizenship Day" in commemoration of the signing of the Constitution on September 17, 1787, and in recognition of those citizens who have come of age and those who have been naturalized during the year; and

Whereas by a joint resolution approved August 2, 1956 (70 Stat. 932), the Congress requested the President to designate the week beginning September 17 of each year as "Constitution Week," a time for study and observance of the acts which resulted in the formation of the Constitution; and

Whereas the aforesaid resolutions of the Congress authorize the President to issue annually a proclamation calling for the observance of Citizenship Day and Constitution Week:

Now, therefore, I, Dwight D. Eisenhower, President of the United States of America, call upon the appropriate officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on Citizenship Day, September 17, 1960; and I urge Federal, State, and local officials, as well as all religious, civic, educational, and other organizations, to hold appropriate ceremonies on that day designed to give our people a clearer understanding of their rights, responsibilities, and opportunities as citizens of the United States.

I also designate the period beginning September 17 and ending September 23, 1960, as "Constitution Week"; and I urge the people of the United States to observe that week with appropriate ceremonies and activities in their schools and churches and in other suitable places.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 15th day of March in the year of our Lord 1960, and of the independence of the United States of America the 184th.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

By the President:

CHRISTIAN A. HERTER,
Secretary of State.

HISTORY OF U.S. CONSTITUTION PROVES IT HAD TO BE GOOD

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—President Eisenhower at the request of Congress has proclaimed September 17 as "Citizenship Day," and the week beginning Thursday as "Constitution Week," a time for study and observance of the acts which resulted in the formation of the Constitution. This article traces the early history of the document, commenting on the impact it has had on the lives of Americans from Washington to Eisenhower.)

(By Comdr. Robert W. Collins, U.S.N.R.)

When I accepted this invitation to give a message on appreciation of the U.S. Constitution from the viewpoint of a Naval Reserve legal-specialist officer, I did so in serious thoughts and reflections on that day so many years ago when I was first commissioned in the U.S. Naval Reserve and swore "that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same."

In celebrating the 172d anniversary of the adoption of the U.S. Constitution, we are paying just tribute to the very foundation of our Government, that is, the Constitution itself.

On the 17th of September 1787, a convention of delegates of the people of the United States, selected from the Original Thirteen States, adopted and made public that document, which consisted of a preamble and seven articles expressed in the language of the common law.

When accepted and ratified by those States on behalf of the people of these United States, our Charter of Government came into being.

It should be remembered that the Constitution at that stage in American history was much clearer in its definition of responsibility and its imposition of obligation on its citizens and member States than at a shortly later date in our history.

Four years later there came into force and effect the first 10 amendments, commonly called then and at all times since, including the present moment in history, the Bill of Rights. These early amendments did not alter in any manner the form of our constitutional government. However, they did write into the charter itself certain rights, largely of the individual, guaranteed to them by their Government in this basic compact of their own creation.

Perhaps the Constitution was better understood in its terms and in its meaning at the time of its adoption than it is presently understood, although thoughtful Americans have at all times recognized that the obligations of citizenship are implicit and inherent in the Constitution. To support and defend the Constitution is part of the oath required in all services, but it is a definite obligation on all citizens with or without a formal oath. The struggle to maintain the Constitution of the United States is an unending one, and we would do well to remember the old adage that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

As we take time from our ordinary pursuits to honor such an event as the adoption of our Constitution, it is well for us to consider whether or not the American people had the same appreciation then as we now have of this basic instrument of our lives and Government.

The people did understand the document, but appreciation and support was far from unanimous. History teaches us that only 55 of the 65 delegates of the Constitution convention attended that convention. Only 12 of the Thirteen Original States were represented in the deliberations. Of the delegates in attendance participating in the drafting of the Constitution, 16 failed or refused to sign the document at the time of its adoption. When the secrecy was broken and the proposed plan was published, a tempest of debate over its merits began to blow. Critics fell upon it. Scarcely a single sentence or line of the Constitution escaped attack. While this public debate over the plan was in full course, conventions duly elected in the States assembled to pass upon it.

Within 3 months three States ratified it, Delaware and New Jersey and Pennsylvania, after a hot contest. Early in 1788, Georgia and Connecticut added their approval. By a close vote Massachusetts accepted it in February. Maryland and South Carolina soon followed. The New Hampshire convention, at first opposed or hesitant, decided favorably before the end of June. Nine States, the number necessary to make the Constitution effective and binding between the States so ratifying same, had now made their fateful decision. Two large States wavered. In New York and Virginia the result was long in doubt, and it was not until the late summer of 1788 that New York and Virginia ratified on the same day. Two States still remained aloof. North Carolina withheld its approval until November 1789, and Rhode Island, which had sent no delegates to the convention, would have nothing to do with the new Constitution until the spring of 1790, when it added its own ratification. Upon that event the full acceptance of the charter was accomplished. It had stood the test of scrutiny and searching criticism and survived. Its great ideal, its great body of principles, its great hope for the human race then became the basic charter of the United States binding and effective at the same time on all of the people in all of the States of our great Nation.

If proof be needed that the Constitution was clear and explicit, permit me to show briefly how that document provided the basic authority for the existence of that department of the Government in which we of the Navy League have particular interest. The Department of the Navy exists due to the following items:

Article I, section 8, provides:

"The Congress shall have power—

* * * * * *

"(13) To provide and maintain a Navy;

"(14) To make rules for the Government and regulation of the land and naval forces;

"(18) To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof."

The only other reference to the Department of the Navy in the Constitution is contained in article II, section 2(1), which provides: "The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States."

It may be interesting to note that during its first years the Navy operated without the benefit of being a separate department. It was a great soldier-statesman who urged the creation of a permanent Navy and the founding of the Department of the Navy, which was accomplished April 30, 1798. Washington's recommendation hereon contained the following language, which we cherish: "To secure respect of a neutral flag requires a naval force, organized and ready to vindicate it from insults and aggression. This may even prevent the necessity of going to war by discouraging belligerent powers from committing such violations of the rights of the neutral party as may, first or last, leave no other option." The prime mission of the Navy Department was then, as it is now, to assist the people of the United States to provide for their common defense, and this is one of the people's prime obligations under the Constitution.

When the Constitution was adopted our Nation was living in a period described at that time as "These are the times that try men's souls." There have been various times during our history when the expression would have been appropriate and it is particularly appropriate today. We are fortunate that the framers of the Constitution were moralists. They were to a man moralists to the degree that they held that every right has its corresponding responsibility. They knew that benefits and rights flow from the fulfillment of just and honorable obligations.

The Constitution as framed by the great Convention and reluctantly and somewhat grudgingly ratified by the American States was at the same time the wisest and the noblest assertion of constitutional morality in the annals of statecraft. If the Founding Fathers were dubious of the future of that Constitution, it was not they questioned its wisdom so much as they doubted the willingness of successive generations of American citizens to accept its wise restraints and fulfill its implied and inherent obligations. Washington himself was very reserved as to the merits of the Constitution, but as months passed he came to feel that the result had been wiser than he had anticipated. After stating that the powers of Government had been wisely distributed so as to prevent any undue concentration of power in any one man or body of men, he stated that the new Government would not be other than good, "so long as there shall remain any virtue in the body of the people."

It is recorded in our history that the great Delegate from Pennsylvania, Benjamin Franklin, with tears in his eyes implored his fellow Delegates to sign the compact. He said in an answer to those who saw fatal objections in the Constitution: "There is no form of government but what may be a blessing to the people if well administered for a course of years, and can only end in despotism, as other forms have done before it, when the people shall become so corrupted as to need despotic government, being incapable of any other."

In these statements, Washington and Franklin were giving similar advice and warning of an earlier statesman of our colonial era. It was William Penn who expressed the same principle in this simple analogy. He said: "Governments, like clocks, go from the motion men give them; and as governments are made and moved by men, so by them they are ruined, too. Therefore, governments depend upon men rather than men upon governments."

Our Constitution, as a scheme of government, is a government under law, and not under men. Nevertheless, our Government depends upon its citizens to fulfill their individual responsibilities in the manner set forth in the precepts handed to us by those great early Americans we have mentioned. The Constitution is the organic expression of our national unity and has brought unbounded blessings to the millions of Americans that have come and gone.

The great English historian, Macauley, nearly 70 years after the adoption of the Constitution, made this studied criticism: "Your Constitution is all sail and no anchor." The terms of that critique stimulate my interest. What that great writer probably had in mind was the suggestion that no written document could wholly restrain the excesses of democracy. His underlying suggestion is not incorrect, but possibly it would be more accurate to state that the Constitution has proved to be more of a rudder than an anchor. No state of human society is wholly static; there was no occasion for the Constitution to be an anchor. Its purpose was, and is, to guide rather than to hold.

Another great and disinterested witness of American institutions rendered his opinion on the occasion of the centennial anniversary of the American Constitution. Gladstone, the English statesman, wrote the committee in charge of that celebration: "I have always regarded that Constitution as the most remarkable work known to me in modern times to have been produced by the human intellect, at a single stroke, so to speak, in its application to political affairs." We have reason to consider that he believed most strongly that opinion, for earlier the same Gladstone had written the following: "The American Constitution is the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man."

We Americans and generations which follow us will do well on occasions such as this if we will remember the advice of the ancient proverb in our actions in relation to the Constitution of the United States: "Remove not the ancient landmark, which thy fathers have set."

Brooklyn Polish-American Home of Cleveland Celebrates 25th Birthday

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MICHAEL A. FEIGHAN
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, June 12, 1960, the Brooklyn Polish-American Home of Cleveland celebrated its 25th anniversary. On that occasion a silver anniversary banquet was held at the home, under the chairmanship of Mr. J. E. Szukalski, president of the Brooklyn Polish-American Home, Inc.

It was my pleasure to speak at this banquet and to pay tribute to the great work that has been accomplished through this organization for the civic, cultural, and religious advancement of the city of Cleveland.

By leave previously granted, I insert in the RECORD my address on the 25th anniversary of the Brooklyn Polish-American Home:

I am very happy to participate in the 25th anniversary observance of the Brooklyn Polish-American Home. This home is a landmark in Greater Cleveland and a beacon light for many of the finest citizens in my district. It serves as a landmark for all to observe that here stands a tribute to those who came to our country and to our city from Poland to build a new life in freedom and to help us build this great country. It also serves as a beacon light for the rich culture, traditions, and religious dedication which mark the life and times of the Polish Nation throughout 1,000 years of history. The brick and mortar as well as the decorative features of this building would be meaningless without the spirit these thoughts convey. This, then, is the spirit in which we meet here today.

How comforting it is to reflect on the manner in which Americans of Polish origin have prospered and climbed the ladders of success in these United States. In all walks of life—the professions, the religious, the business world, our scientific and industrial life, in the arts and in government—we see the positive contributions of the American of Polish extraction. All this was accompanied by hard work and personal sacrifices. Nor must you see these results as a destiny fulfilled because the success story must be repeated in each generation. This is part of the story of America in which each of us are players and in which all of us carry responsibilities.

With this, the beauties and inspirations of Polish culture have been preserved and passed on to the coming generation. This, too, is part of the American story. It has always been the diversity of our people which has given the inner strength to our country. We are not a one-culture nation, nor are we a monolythic people who look alike, think alike, and act alike. We are a nation of many cultures, a nation in which native cultures from many distant lands have taken roots and have flourished. This, in turn, has given our Nation a treasure chest of values unequaled among the nations of the world. But with all this diversity, we are a people who are bound together in a common cause which takes its purpose from those great moral values and political ideals which have been the inspiration in all generations of Western civilization. These bonds of unity reach into the heart and mind of all our people. This, too, is part of the American story, that part which forms the hub around which the hopes and high expectations of our Founding Fathers have taken form and substance.

But there is another part to the American story which makes up the contemporary chapter. In our times, all that we hold to be dear as life itself is being challenged by a crude, noisy, but determined tyranny on the march. That tyranny is Russian communism, which today holds the land of your forefathers in a pitiless grip, which seeks to destroy 1,000 years of Polish heritage and to replace it with a soulless ideology. The chains of imperial Russian communism have been dropped over more than a score of once free and independent nations. And the appetite of conquest has not been satisfied. The Russians boast they are going to make the entire world their empire. Every still free nation is marked, but for conquest. No nation, no people, are exempt from the master plan the Muscovites are now attempting to impose upon the world.

It is fitting, therefore, on this occasion that we should turn our thoughts to captive Poland. By so doing we can catch a glimpse of what the Russians have in store for us and thereby we shall find the course of action our Nation must pursue in the immediate years ahead. For those who may doubt the true Russian intentions toward the United States, let me quote no less an authority on this subject than Tzar Khrushchev. Last September Khrushchev visited the United States on the invitation of the present administration in Washington. Within 1 week after departing our shores he visited Communist China to take part in the 10th anniversary of the Communist seizure of power in that country. Arriving at the airport in Peiping, he made this public statement: "We Communists believe in just wars, that is, wars of liberation through which we liberate people from capitalism." There can be no doubt of the meaning of this declaration. It means the Russians offer us peaceful surrender or a hot war. They allow for no other alternative in their global plans. It would appear that Khrushchev's visit to the United States and the reception given him by those who should know better only made him bolder in his claims.

The Congress of the United States, on the other hand, was not deluded by the Russian call for peaceful coexistence. Only a few weeks before President Eisenhower announced his invitation to Khrushchev to visit our country, Congress enacted the Captive Nations Week resolution. This is now Public Law 86–90. As you know, this law designates the third week of July as Captive Nations Week, a time for the American people to recall the sad plight of the people in these Russian occupied nations and to rededicate ourselves to the support of their just aspirations for liberty and independence. This law made the dictator Khrushchev furious—almost as frightened as he was over the U–2 incident. Vice President NIXON was in Moscow as the guest of Khrushchev one day after Congress passed the law. Khrushchev asked him: "How could you do this to us." Apparently he expected much better treatment from the Vice President. I have wondered many times since whether the invitation to Khrushchev to visit our country was recommended by Vice President NIXON as a means of demonstrating that he knew how to deal with the Russians when they became angry. The Vice President has never disclaimed his connection with this political blunder of the century so I continue to wonder how important a part he played in this farce on the American people.

Neither Khrushchev's blustering nor his official visit to our country can remove or weaken the determination by Congress to keep alive the hopes for liberty and independence in Poland and the other captive countries. That law remains on the books until all the countries behind the Russian Iron Curtain are free.

It was my privilege to introduce this resolution in the House of Representatives. I worked to the limit of my abilities to cause its enactment. I remain dedicated to its high purposes.

The language and spirit of that law points the way for a new foreign policy under a new administration in Washington next January. I say this for two basic reasons. The first is that the law makes a finding that the desire for liberty and independence by the people of the captive nations constitutes a powerful deterrent to war and one of the best hopes for a just and lasting peace. So long as our allies behind the Iron Curtain, the captive non-Russian people, remain united with us in the spirit of human freedom, the Russian imperialists will not dare to launch a hot war. If they do, the Poles and other captive peoples will seize upon this opportunity to fall upon their Russian tormentors and destroy them. Thus, the Russians are certain to end up in total destruction of their empire. The only salvation for the Russians is for them to give up their empire of fear and to retreat behind their ethnographical frontiers—as did the Golden Hordes of the Mongols many centuries ago.

My second reason is that the American people have become fed up with the threats, boasts, and insults of the Russian tyrants. They are demanding a realistic policy toward the Russians to get out of all the captive promise of peace with justice. We can no longer stand by while the captive people call out for their emancipation. The time has arrived when we must exert a relentless political, economic, and diplomatic pressure on the Russians to get out of all the captive nations or face the wrath of a thoroughly aroused free world. We have the military strength to back up such a policy and we had better act before it is too late.

Only last week the world was reminded of the endless struggles of the Polish Nation to regain its freedom. Riots broke out there again over the denial of religious freedom to those devout people. Not one word of protest against the Russian-inspired action to destroy the historic faith of the Poles was made by official Washington. This is but another example of inert government, of government by absentee leaders, of government that must be changed if we as a nation are to measure up to the challenge which faces us.

The Brooklyn Polish-American home has been a beacon light these past 25 years for a people who know the meaning of faith in the future. I urge you to share this light with all your fellow Americans, to lead the way in calling out for justice for the long suffering people of Poland. In so doing you will be acting in the finest American traditions because we are a people dedicated to justice for all nations and all people.

Legislative Record of 86th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JOHN LESINSKI

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, when the 86th Congress adjourns sine die this fall, it will have, I am sure, written an impressive legislative record for the betterment of our Nation and its citizens. As we recess at this time, I believe it would be well to review some of our actions thus far and to look at the work remaining to be done. After the elections this fall, I am confident that we who will be reelected to the 87th Congress can look forward to receiving cooperation from a friendly administration in the enactment of progressive and enlightened legislation to secure and enhance America's future.

I have been pleased and gratified by a number of actions which have been taken in fields in which I have been especially interested.

I was particularly pleased to see both Houses of Congress produce programs to extend Federal aid for school construction purposes. Having made close and careful study of the classroom shortage problem in my own district, I realized that Federal aid was necessary to help not only my area but also the other States and local school districts. As you know, I have introduced a number of bills on the subject, and one of my suggestions on a loan program was adopted in part by the administration. I have maintained that one of the greatest investments we can make today to insure continuation of our way of life is in the boys and girls of America who will grow up to be the future citizens of this great Nation. If we are to triumph over the ideologies that seek to destroy our way of life and form of government, we must see that these future citizens are trained and ready to meet the challenges of the future. To do this, we must start by providing facilities within which to educate them. I look forward to completing action on this legislation when Congress reconvenes this fall and to formulating new programs to meet new needs in the education of our children.

Another area in which I have been seeking legislative action is on the problems which confront the economically distressed areas throughout the Nation. Automation, changes in the consumer market, an ever-increasing population rate are all making their impact on the labor market and causing pockets of unemployment and depression in our country. Such conditions are to the detriment of the entire country. Coming from one such area, which suffers one of the highest rates of unemployment, I have introduced and sought action on a program to extend Federal assistance in the rehabilitation of these areas and to provide jobs for the jobless. It was heartening to see the Congress pass this vitally important legislation, but it was extremely disappointing to see the President veto the measure. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that when we return this matter will be again brought up and favorable action secured on a program to meet the needs of these depressed areas.

With approval of the rivers and harbors bill, I saw the realization of a project on which I have been working for several years—the improvement of the Trenton Channel in the Detroit River. This is one aspect of my program to enhance the economic welfare of my own area, which, of course, will ultimately benefit the State of Michigan and the Nation as a whole. I was pleased to secure the cooperation of my colleagues in the House and in the Senate in obtaining approval and funds for the implementation of this project this year. And I look forward to securing similar approval in the succeeding Congress on projects which I have in varying stages of completion and others which I will initiate to improve the economic climate in my area, by making available the deepwater channel and port facilities that industry is always seeking for their expansion programs.

As a member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, I have been actively working on the problems of the postal and civil service employees. We have been successful in having granted to these worthy citizens a much needed cost-of-living pay increase which puts their salaries more in line with those in private industry. The committee has reported for favorable action a number of other measures important to the welfare and well-being of our civil servants. Among them are three of my bills, one to provide a health and hospitalization benefits program for retired civil service employees, another to protect postal employees from sudden and unjustified salary cuts, and another to establish a more equitable salary schedule for employees promoted from one grade to another to provide for an incentive for the promotion of the better qualified people. I shall actively seek final approval of these measures when we reconvene in August.

It was my pleasure to support and see passage of the civil rights bill this year to insure that every citizen in the United States will be allowed to exercise his constitutionally guaranteed right to vote for the people he wishes to have represent him in public office.

I had hoped for favorable action on my proposals to revise the Federal income tax structure so as to give the individual taxpayer and small businessman relief and to eliminate excise taxes which had been imposed during emergency periods. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that my bills were drafted to provide this tax relief without any loss of revenue which the Federal Government needs to provide the services that our citizens need and demand. By closing some of the loopholes and special concessions in the tax laws, this purpose can be accomplished. However, in the absence of such revision and realizing that the Federal Government must have revenue to continue functioning, I reluctantly joined in the passage of another year's extension of the excise tax laws. I strongly feel that serious consideration must be given to the tax situation and I shall continue my efforts to have action taken.

All of us are very much concerned with the plight of our older citizens who must live on fixed incomes while the cost of living spirals ever upward. The passage by the House of Representatives of a bill to provide for increased benefits under the existing social security programs and to authorize a new program to help the retired folks meet the high costs of hospitalization and medical care is, I believe, a clear indication that we are aware of and responsive to their needs.

Mr. Speaker, much remains to be done in the months ahead, not only on the subjects which I have mentioned here briefly but on numerous measures for the welfare of our Nation and our citizens. When the final session of the 86th Congress comes to a close this fall, our record, individually and collectively, will demonstrate to the American people that we have acted wisely, judiciously, and in their, and the Nation's, best interests.

A Reminder by Francis Walter

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GORDON H. SCHERER

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, FRANCIS WALTER, chairman of the Committee on Un-American Activities, delivered an outstanding and memorable address at the Wyoming Monument commemorative exercises, Wyoming, Pa., which should be read by every American in these days of Communist aggression. Mr. Speaker, his timely warning to all of us follows:

Come with me as we walk back through the corridors of time a century and a half and more. We find ourselves right here in this beautiful valley which is the favorite gathering place of Indian tribes who come from miles around. Here we see the Six Nations of the Iroquois in their tribal conferences, and here we see an area which the white man covets. Then we see the Indians, over the strong opposition of King Hedrick, greatest of the Mohawk chiefs, deeding this very land to the white man.

As we linger in this valley, the shot heard around the world pierces the quiet of this very air. The Revolutionary War begins. Practically all of the able-bodied men leave here to serve in Washington's army to fight for freedom from British rule. The attraction of this valley does not go unheeded, for now we are in June of 1778, and we witness a combined force of Indians, British troops, and Tories under General Butler, who have set out from the village of Queen Esther, then the Iroquois monarch in New York. They have traveled by canoe down the Susquehanna. By July 1 they have captured the northern half of the valley and have reached Mount Lookout, leaving behind them a trail of blood and death. Their progress through the valley is marked by methodical massacre of everyone who falls into their hands—men, women, and children. We now behold them as they stand astride Mount Lookout, where they map their plans to pillage and sack the remaining villages.

In the valley, besides the women and children, there are only old men, boys too young to serve in Washington's army, and men of military age too sick to serve. Under the leadership of Cols. Zebulon Butler and Nathan Denison, they organize a force some 300 strong. Though outnumbered 3 to 1, they march out of Forty Fort on the morning of July 3, 1778, to meet an enemy they know they have no chance of defeating.

The British troops wait in their concealed positions until the Americans are within 300 feet—and then open fire. The Indians attack and fold the left flank of the American force. The battle itself lasts scarcely 30 minutes. The American ranks are decimated. The survivors surrender or try to flee.

The end of the battle, however, does not mean that the bloodletting is to end. Instead, it marks the beginning of the Wyoming massacre which lasts until at least the following morning. On the battlefield and around the Indian campfires that night, we see Americans who had surrendered honorably on the field of battle and other inhabitants of the valley who had been captured, being put to death by savage torture. Some have their bodies pierced by spears. Others are burned at the stake.

We grimace as we look toward Bloody Rock and see over a dozen Americans executed by Queen Esther herself. We shudder as the Indians hold them—one by one—singing the Indian death chant, while Queen Esther crushes their skulls with a huge maul.

Slowly you and I plod back again to the 20th century, and we find ourselves today with certain questions which we must ask. Why did this feeble band not flee as soon as word of the advancing enemy forces reached them? Did they not realize the futility of engaging in mortal combat an enemy that outnumbered them; that was fresh from victory after victory; that was infinitely better equipped and trained?

My friends, the answer to these questions rings through the ages until today. It is this—that there are certain causes for which men are willing to give their lives.

"Give me liberty or give me death"—"I regret that I have but one life to give for my country." Where are these voices today?

Instead, we hear: "I would rather crawl on my knees to Moscow, than die under an atom bomb." Or—"It would be better to live under communism than to risk death and destruction in a thermonuclear war."

If we could bring to this scene today, here on July 4, 1960, those brave men and boys who were massacred here 182 years ago, I am confident they would utter these words: "We would rather that our bodies be blown to bits by all the destructive physical force of the international Communist empire, than to succumb to communism which destroys the soul and the mind, as well as the body."

Was the Battle of Wyoming—and the Wyoming Massacre—a needless waste of American lives? An 1837 petition to the Congress from the people of this valley made the following statement:

"The blood and tears shed at Wyoming were not shed in vain. Perhaps few incidents during the war provoked stronger sensations of horror and pity, throughout Europe, than the Wyoming Massacre. Perhaps few circumstances had so powerful a tendency to discredit, in public estimation, the arms and efforts of the enemy or had a stronger influence in arousing the people of the whole civilized world in behalf of the American cause."

Yes, hundreds of people died in this valley on July 3, 1778. But they did not die in vain. Their blood, their sacrifice, not only strengthened the resolve of the American armies, but were vital factors in rallying world support to the cause of the Colonies. In this sense, it was a defeat for the enemy. In death, the people of this valley achieved a victory.

A little over 3 years ago, the people of Hungary rose up against their Communist oppressors in what was deemed a completely hopeless cause. To the amazement of the world, they utterly defeated the Red occupation armies and won a complete initial victory. Then the Soviet Union threw in new massive forces. The Hungarians begged the free world, in God's name, to help them. But the most powerful free nations on earth responded with nothing but pious words and phrases, and, since that time, have welcomed the "Butcher of Budapest" everywhere within their borders. And so the people of Hungary were slaughtered by the tens of thousands. Many thousands more were shipped off to slave labor camps in Siberia—and Hungary today still lives under Communist tyranny.

Did the Hungarian freedom fighters die in vain? Like the Wyoming Valley Army, will they win a victory in defeat? To paraphrase the petition of the people of this valley to Congress in 1837, few incidents "provoked stronger sensations of horror and pity" than the Hungarian massacre and few circumstances "had so powerful a tendency to discredit * * * the arms and efforts of the enemy or had a stronger influence in rousing the people of the whole civilized world" in behalf of the Hungarian and the whole anti-Communist cause.

May I again ask: Did the Hungarian freedom fighters die in vain? The answer to that question will not be known until history records the last battle in the struggle between communism and the forces of freedom. In the ascendancy of the Communist conspiracy, it is reliably estimated that at least 40 million human souls have been murdered. In Red China alone, the most conservative estimates are that 20 million human souls have been crushed by this human meat grinder. It is almost impossible for us, as we stand in this peaceful valley, to comprehend just what these statistics impart. All the wars in history have not taken anything like this number of human lives. Let me give you at least a faint idea of what these statistics mean.

Let us suppose that when this ceremony is ended we were to embark on a tour that took us to every corner of our native State, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and that, after we had covered every inch of its territory from north to south and east to west, we went into the neighboring State of New Jersey and did the same thing there; then we traveled south to Delaware; west again through every mile of the State of Maryland; then into the District of Columbia, our Nation's Capital; and finally all through the State of Virginia.

Let us suppose that on this tour we saw not a living soul, but that everywhere we went in each one of these six formerly populous States we saw nothing but corpses—thousands, hundreds of thousands, millions of them. We would then have some idea of what, according to the most conservative estimates, the Communists have done to the people of China alone.

West Virginia, Kentucky, and Ohio would be added to the list if I were to use the higher estimates of the human slaughter committed by the Chinese Reds. It would be beyond our ability to imagine, even in a gruesome nightmare, each one of these millions of deaths taking place one by one—many of them as a result of fiendish torture.

This is an appalling picture, a picture painted by a monstrously inhuman regime—a regime which some people in this country and some of our allies say should be recognized by the United States and admitted to the United Nations as a peace-loving nation.

Today, we hope that, with God's grace, nothing like what has happened in Russia, Hungary, in China, Tibet, and Eastern Europe will ever take place in this country. But we must not think that it cannot possibly take place here. Our enemy is rapidly extending his power throughout the world. His agents are growing in strength in every nation that has so far been spared Red bloodletting. To date, we have failed to stop him. Today, he is not only entrenched 90 miles from our shores, but has thousands of agents within our borders. They are in our schools, our PTA's, our churches, civic groups, our entertainment media—in every phase of our national life—and are growing in strength. This I know from incontrovertible evidence and testimony presented before the Committee on Un-American Activities. The enemy is working day and night to destroy our freedoms and our Government, just as surely and with as deadly a purpose as that of the British, Indians, and Tories in the Revolution.

What can we do now to assure that it will not happen here?

My friends, the hour is late. We must begin today to do everything in our power to see that the enemy forces entrenched in our society are eliminated, beginning on the local community level and going on up through the highest levels of our political, economic, and social structure.

We must insist that our Government do everything in its power to destroy the international forces of communism which threaten not only our lives and our freedom, but every advance wrought by thousands of years of human civilization in every part of the globe.

Today we know the enemy is at hand. He himself has told us so over and over again. And he has told us, too, just what he intends to do with us. "We will bury you," he says.

Today, unlike our Wyoming Valley forebears, we have all the tools, the weapons, the strength, needed to defeat our foe. But we have refused—and are still refusing—to make full use of them. We lack the will. We seem to lack the devotion to freedom that all men must have if they are to remain free.

The Great Wall of China was designed and built centuries ago to be impregnable. Its massive strength was tested time and time again by direct physical assault. But three times within a single generation enemy forces pierced this barrier, not by reason of physical strength, but by bribing the guards. In this hour we know that the military might of the free world is such that we can destroy in a matter of hours any aggregation which might unleash physical attack upon us. Like the walls of ancient China, our armed might appears to keep us invulnerable. How about the guards? At this very moment, while I am speaking to you, hundreds of Communists and other subversives who at one time were denied security clearances to serve on merchant vessels have now gained Coast Guard documentation to serve on the merchant vessels which are vital conduits for our defense—all because of strained constructions by the courts which fail to recognize the conspiratorial nature of the Communist operation.

While I am speaking to you at this very hour, there are over 100 employees of the Federal Government who were dismissed as security risks, but who have since gained reemployment in the Government, because of still other decisions by the courts which have all but destroyed our loyalty security program.

While I am speaking to you now, the tie-lines and lease-lines carrying security information out of the Pentagon itself, and the North Atlantic Cable, are serviced by the American Communications Association, which is controlled, lock, stock and barrel, by the Communist Party.

While I am speaking to you now, traitorous American citizens who are international Communist agents, are coming and going around the world with U.S. passports issued to them because of the breakdown in our passport control system.

Yes, my friends, our freedom is at this instant imperiled, not by lack of military might, but by lack of the spirit, vision and courage which prompted our Wyoming Valley forebears to challenge with their all, that force which threatened them.

These are things we must think about today as we remember and honor the spirit and the deeds of the early settlers of this valley and the way many of them died. They have given you and me, each one of us, the most precious thing of life—freedom and honor.

We leave this brief ceremony then with this question which each must answer to himself: Will I be true to the memory of our Wyoming Valley forebears who gave their all for the cause of freedom?

Veterans' Insurance Legislation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. OLIN E. TEAGUE
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am inserting in the RECORD a letter which I have written to the Honorable EDITH NOURSE ROGERS regarding her erroneous remarks which appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 2, 1960, on page 15822. I trust this letter will serve to correct the misinformation which is being disseminated. The letter follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U.S.,
COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, D.C.

Hon. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MRS. ROGERS: I am writing regarding the erroneous statements which you made on the floor of the House on July 2, 1960, which appear on page 15822 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I was not in error when I stated that the Subcommittee on Insurance voted unanimously against favorable consideration of bills to reopen the national service life insurance program. The Subcommittee on Insurance considered this matter on two occasions. On March 30, 1960, with 4 out of 5 members present it considered all of the insurance bills before it, reported four bills and passed over the remainder, including the national service life insurance bills, without action. On April 27, 1960, the subcommittee met with all members present for the specific purpose of reconsidering the bills to provide for reopening the national service life insurance program. At that time the subcommittee voted unanimously to defer action on the national service life insurance bills. The subcommittee made no plans for subsequent reconsideration at that meeting. There have been no subsequent meetings by the Subcommittee on Insurance and there has been no discussion by the subcommittee regarding reconsideration of these bills.

You state that the subcommittee never turned down these proposals. This is contrary to the facts. The subcommittee had these proposals before it on two separate occasions and passed over or deferred action. In your remarks you expressed the hope that I would ask the Committee on Rules to grant a rule for the consideration of this legislation. You are advised that I took such action immediately following my attempt to secure a vote on this legislation.

Both you and the minority clerk received notices of all committee and subcommittee meetings. Minutes of the committee reflect that you did not attend either of the subcommittee meetings where the action described above occurred. Since you did not attend the meetings and did not consult the minutes of the committee, it seems to me you should have at least shown me the courtesy of checking these points with me before making these incorrect statements for publication in the RECORD.

I expect to place this letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to correct your erroneous inference.

Sincerely yours,

OLIN E. TEAGUE,
Chairman.

Summary of Poll Results

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM G. BRAY
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. BRAY. Mr. Speaker, I have recently conducted an opinion poll among my constituents of the Seventh District of Indiana. I believe the tabulation of the responses will be of interest and significance to my colleagues.

Continued stiff opposition to communism is supported by Seventh District no inclination to back down to the Russia and the attempts of some Americans to belittle our own strength, voters show no inclination to back down to the Russians. Many say such a retreat would lead to our eventual collapse.

One of the questions asked if the United States should retreat from its position in West Berlin, where the free world forces show the day-to-day living contrasts with life under communism in East Berlin. Despite Khrushchev's ultimatums, 95 percent of those responding said the United States should not abandon West Berlin. Less than 2 percent said we should withdraw and 3 percent declined to give an opinion.

On the subject of recognizing the Communist government of China, only 8 percent advised such recognition and an overwhelming 85 percent said we should not; 7 percent were undecided.

Opinion is sharply divided on the adequacy of our defense spending—42 percent believe the United States should spend more money for national defense; 43 percent said no more should be spent and 15 percent ventured no opinion.

About three-fourths of those responding favor reduced funds for foreign aid projects. Of the 19 percent who do not favor a cut, many commented that our aid programs should be better directed and administered.

Dissatisfaction with the Cuban regime of Fidel Castro has grown daily. This was evidenced in answers to a question as to whether the United States should continue to pledge to buy about one-third of our sugar requirements from Cuba at prices above the world level. The percent of people favoring our withdrawal from such agreements has grown steadily to an average of 88 percent; 7 percent believe we should continue to try to work with the Cubans through such agreements, and 5 percent had no opinion.

There is increasing awareness of the problems created for domestic industry by the imports from countries where labor rates are much lower than those in the United States: 73 percent of those replying favor import controls to protect local industries from foreign competition; 18 percent are opposed to such quotas; and 9 percent did not respond.

As a further indication of public sentiment in the defense and foreign affairs field, I asked if we should retain the Connally amendment which allows this country to reject the jurisdiction of the World Court. This issue is apparently not well understood by a large segment of the general public, for 26 percent said they had no opinion on this question; 61 percent favor retention of the Connally amendment; 13 percent favor its repeal.

Seventh District voters have strongly endorsed a proposal I put forth concerning the possibility of supporting schools by returning to each State a part of the Federal cigarette tax collected in that State—85 percent of those responding to a question about this said they favor such a program; 8 percent are opposed, and 7 percent have no opinion.

This was one of the most clear-cut responses on the questions affecting certain aspects of our domestic policies, and quite frankly the response surprised me. For years there have been insistent claims that our school systems required more financial support than could be maintained by local real estate taxes. Yet there has been strong opposition to Federal support on the grounds that it would lead to control and regimentation of our schools. This alternative, which would merely refund the money to the States and require that it be spent for education, guarantees that local school authorities would remain free and autonomous. In addition, questions as to whether such money should go for classroom construction only or should be used for teachers' salaries, whether it should be restricted to public schools or shared with parochial and private schools, could be left to the discretion of the States. The Federal Government would only insist that it be spent in the educational system of the State according to its programs.

Opinion was not so decided on the subject of Government-sponsored medical care for social security retirees. This referred to the Forand bill, which has been rejected on two occasions, and by a large margin, in the House Committee on Ways and Means: 36 percent favor some such program; 57 percent are opposed; and 7 percent indicate no opinion.

The much-discussed soil bank was also the subject of a wide difference of opinion. Among those who checked that they are engaged in farming, 45 percent favor expansion of the soil bank to about 60 million acres, which experts say would reduce production sufficiently to meet consumption and thus avoid the problems of surplus production; 45 percent of those in farming oppose this; and 10 percent express no opinion.

Among those not in farming, 25 percent gave no comment; 21 percent favor the expanded program, and 54 percent are opposed.

Deficit financing is frowned upon by a majority of Seventh District voters: 81 percent say we should limit national expenditures to balance the budget; 12 percent say we should not be bound to stay within income; and 7 percent are without a firm opinion.

The question of the loyalty oath which is required of students requesting aid under the National Defense Education Act elicited much interest. The repeal of the loyalty oath requirement is favored by 17 percent; 76 percent oppose its repeal.

In addition to the thousands of letters, telegrams, and phone calls I receive and the many personal visits I make throughout the district, I have found these polls of great value in assessing voter sentiment. I am encouraged by the wide and favorable response to this questionnaire and I am gratified by the careful attention given to the answers.

The results of the poll follow:

Final summary of opinion poll conducted by Congressman William G. Bray, 7th District, Indiana

Washington Report

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. BRUCE ALGER

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. ALGER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include my newsletter of July 2, 1960:

WASHINGTON REPORT

(By Congressman BRUCE ALGER, Fifth District, Texas)

The battle over adjournment was won by the Democrats. Instead of finishing all work and adjourning "sine die" (until the new Congress), the Democrat leadership decided to recess and to convene again in August. We could have easily finished our work. This leaves unanswered the question, "Why?" The reason will become evident later—but only to those people who concern themselves in learning what Congress is doing.

I summarized my views during consideration of the sugar bill in this way: "Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that action against Cuba is long overdue. Why subsidize your enemy? Why delay responsible action as we have done up to this point? Why has the House Democrat leadership delayed so long in programing this bill before committee and Congress? As we face a recess adjournment instead of adjournment sine die, I am reminded once again of the failure of Democrat leadership to provide leadership. Obviously something must be done, and done now, to stop this expensive subsidy to Cuba. Meanwhile, we can let our domestic producers provide the sugar, and also buy from friendly allies." While the sugar bill is a good example of the failure of Democrat leadership, there are many others.

The minimum-wage battle wasn't over whether or not to hike the amount and increase the number of people covered, but over how much of an increase would be made in each instance. The radical and far-reaching bill brought to the floor by the Education and Labor Committee and supported by an overwhelming majority of Democrats was amended into a moderate measure by the bipartisan effort of almost all the Republicans, including me, and a goodly number of southern Democrats. The vote on the "moderating" amendment was close, 211 to 203. My own view was stated bluntly and succinctly to the House: "Mr. Chairman, I believe that the Federal Government has no constitutional authority to set wages. Therefore, I oppose minimum-wage laws." That view was supported by only 71 others in the vote on final passage. The count, 341 to 72.

All Federal employees, including postal workers, received a substantial pay raise when both Houses of Congress voted to override President Eisenhower's veto of the something-for-everybody election-year package Congress had passed earlier. Thus, we kicked another three-quarters-of-a-billion-dollar hole in the administration budget. My views on this sort of politicking were stated at the time of the vote in the House:

"Mr. Speaker, in overriding the President's veto of this pay increase we have capitulated to the political pressure of lobbyists, in this case representing the postal workers' unions. We are guilty of permitting legislative dictation. If one pressure group can do it, so can others. Then in the aggregate total our representative government will fail. No longer will we have judicious study of legislation, but roughshod political dictation. This course can only result in the disintegration of our form of government and our society of free people.

"I condemn this pay raise as factually wrong and financially unsound, though politically expedient. Therefore, I voted to uphold the veto. The President's statement contains the facts, including his recommendation that the temporary 2.5 percent raise already in effect be made permanent, and indicating his willingness to go along with a further reasonable hike commensurate with increased living costs.

"That this bill goes far beyond those reasonable norms is manifest. To the extent that it does, we are simply rewarding one group—well organized Federal employees—at the expense of all other taxpayers. At this time, as much as ever, we legislators need to exercise self-discipline, letting November's votes fall where they may."

Senator BARRY GOLDWATER, of Arizona, is the guest of my final television program of the current series. Senator GOLDWATER, a frequent visitor to Dallas, discussed his new book, "The Conscience of a Conservative," with me, going into the true definitions of the terms "conservative," "liberal," and "radical." This program will be shown Sunday morning, July 10, over WFAA–TV.

Rumanian Independence Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MICHAEL A. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, May 15, 1960, a large rally was held in Carpatina Hall, Cleveland, to commemorate Rumanian Independence Day. It was 15 years ago last March 6 that the Russian Communists destroyed the free government of that old and honored nation and imposed upon the Rumanian people a form of tyranny which is completely alien to their rich culture, traditions, and love for human freedom. Despite these years of occupation and despoiling of their heritage, the people of Rumania stand as stanch allies of the West. It is fitting, therefore, that this Rumanian national independence observance should be held in Cleveland, Ohio, in order that the people of Rumania would be reassured that the American people have not forgotten them, and that we look forward to a restoration of their freedom and national independence.

I was privileged to address this rally and to reassure Rumanians living in the free world and those in the homeland that we have not and shall not forget their fight for freedom. Under unanimous consent I insert my address in the RECORD:

RUMANIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

May 10 is a day of great importance to Rumanian people everywhere in the world because it is Rumanian Independence Day. In these days it has special significance because the people of Rumania have been robbed of their national independence by the Russian imperialists. It was 15 years last March 6 that the Russians destroyed the free government of that old and honored nation and imposed upon the Rumanian people a form of government which is completely alien to their rich culture, traditions, and love for human freedom. In the darkness of those 15 years the people of Rumania have never lost faith in the destiny of their nation. They remain convinced that justice will triumph throughout the world—that the cause of freemen will prevail in the affairs of nations and that Rumania will rise once again in all the splendor and beauty of her ancient civilization. It is this dedication, this unwavering conviction, which holds the people of Rumania in an unbreakable alliance with the people of the United States and all other free countries.

The people of Rumania will be prohibited from celebrating this memorable day by the alien government which has been imposed upon them by the masters of the new imperialism in Moscow. No public observance of this day will be allowed because the Russians are dedicated to destroying all hope for a return of national independence and because such public manifestations carry the possibility of getting out of hand so far as the occupiers are concerned. However, the Rumanian people will find ways to observe this historic day, despite the efforts to prevent them from doing so. What rests firmly in the hearts of men cannot be wiped out by the order of a dictator.

Rumanians in the free world will properly celebrate this day. I am happy and proud that in my district one of the most significant of these celebrations is taking place today. Free Rumanians will carry high the hopes of the captive people of Rumania. They will, as in the past, remind all those who love freedom that these past 15 years of darkness have strengthened the determination of the Rumanian people to regain their national independence. In this they will be performing a service for their adopted country, the United States, because the cause of peace with justice requires the dedication of all our citizens.

Tomorrow the second summit conference will open in Paris. There a contest will take place between men who represent the cause of human freedom and those who lead the cause of slavery for all mankind. This will be a test of justice as the foundation for a lasting peace; that is, justice for all nations and all people. The one paramount issue, the issue which rises above all others at the Paris Conference, is that of political status quo. The spotlight of public attention has been focused upon such issues as disarmament, a ban on nuclear weapons, the future status of Berlin and a free and united Germany. Important as these issues are, they avoid the critical question of human rights, the rights of nations, and the unnatural division of humanity by the Russian Communists.

It is clear beyond any reasonable doubt that the Russians are going to Paris with but one objective in mind. That objective is to force the free world leaders to accept a political status quo; that is, to put a stamp of finality upon their empire of captive nations. Nor can there be any doubt that the Russian leaders desperately need this recognition. A serious internal crisis grips the vast empire of the Russian Communists. It is not an economic crisis, even though there is a critical shortage of food and consumer goods throughout the empire. It is not a crisis at the top, resulting from the constant struggle for total power which is the common characteristic of the regime. It is a political crisis brought on by the failure of the Communist regime to win the confidence and support of the people and the corresponding demand by the non-Russian peoples of the empire for a complete change in the order of things. The old order of Russian imperial communism is bankrupt. It is centuries behind the needs and aspirations of the common man. Its failures are well known to those who are its captives. The need for drastic change to avoid total collapse is evident to all who are confined behind the Iron Curtain, including Khrushchev and his crowd. It is beyond the ability of Russian imperial communism to grant the changes necessary to avoid the great human explosion which is in the making. If the Communist leaders grant the changes demanded by the realities of life they will open the floodgates to their own destruction. They cannot possibly accommodate their system to the changes needed to preserve the empire. The leaders in Moscow recognize these hard facts of life and are accordingly going to use the Paris Conference as a temporary remedy for their internal crisis.

They seek to cause the nations of the free world to associate with them in efforts to preserve the empire. The Russians insist that the captive peoples must be made to realize that there is a finality to their unhappy state of life, that there is no hope for their future, that they must make their peace with communism and adjust to the imposed peace of Moscow.

The Russian leaders also need a legal license to employ whatever methods become necessary to hold the empire together. They feel they must neutralize the conscience of the West so that there can be no public protest or legal proceedings in the United Nations against such future actions as they may find necessary, including genocide and the other crimes against humanity. This is the insurance policy they want the leaders of the free world to underwrite at Paris.

So, to secure these objectives the Russians propose a status quo and Khrushchev has announced that this will be his goal at the Paris meeting.

Now the question is how will the leaders of the free world meet this challenge? Up to this moment there is no evidence available to the public which would indicate what we might do or not do to prevent a Russian victory on this critical issue. However, it is clear to all that if President Eisenhower fails to raise in principle the right of all nations to self-determination, to self-government, in the context of the Captive Nations Week resolution as defined in Public Law 86–90, the Russians will win their point by default. Khrushchev has made it clear in public statements that he considers the basic question of the Paris meeting to be status quo. By so doing he has established the issue as pertinent to all the discussions which will take place. If our leaders fail to raise the issue and state our position on it, silence will be taken as assent to the demands made by Khrushchev. This is a fundamental law of international diplomacy.

It is entirely possible that the Russians can leave the Paris meeting with sound precedent to believe that the United States has accepted a status quo. Nor is it necessary for the three Western Powers to have unanimity on this issue in order for our President to speak out. Rumors are rampant in Europe that the British are actively pushing for a status quo, even to the point of a permanently divided Germany. It is unlikely that France could make herself party to such a deal. In any case, it is imperative that the United States make its position clear on this issue regardless what Great Britain and France elect to do about it.

The future of Rumania and all the other captive non-Russian nations hangs in the balance at the Paris summit. While Rumania as a nation will not be an agenda item, the future of Rumania is involved in the issue of status quo which has been created by Khrushchev. Nor is status quo likely to become an agenda item but it will hang over all the proceedings and discussions at Paris. It is the unavoidable issue. It is in fact the reason why Khrushchev forced the leaders of the free world into a second summit meeting.

These are fitting thoughts for this Rumania Independence Day commemoration. Those of us who have fought for the rights of the Rumanian Nation, for justice for all the nations of the world, do not give lipservice to this cause. More than words are needed. Political action must be given to this cause. I, therefore, have urged President Eisenhower to seize the initiative at Paris, to flush out into the open the issue of status quo, to disclaim any degree of acceptance of status quo for the American people, and to rekindle the hopes of suffering millions behind the Iron Curtain by a firm advocacy of the rights of all nations to self-government, to freedom, and to national independence.

Let us pray that President Eisenhower will lead all free nations of the world in a successful fight for the right of self-determination for all nations and people. Such positive, affirmative, political action will enable the great nation of Rumania to determine its own destiny and to take its proper place among the free nations of the world.

SBA Renders Disservice to Vermont Community

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM H. MEYER
OF VERMONT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, early in February of this year my office was contacted by persons interested in the disposition of a furniture company in Brattleboro, Vt., which was facing bankruptcy, and thereupon began a story of disservice and disregard by the Small Business Administration which I believe should be made a matter of record. This account is from the point of view of efforts made by me and others to obtain cooperation and assistance from SBA for local business leaders who were trying to save a small industry. Their efforts were thwarted, and the manner in which the affair was handled by the Small Business Administration deserves to be recounted.

Templeton Furniture Co. of Brattleboro was the industry in question. Small Business Administration carried a mortgage of some $149,000 on its property, and parenthetically, this in itself is an item which should have an explanation when one considers that the total amount for which the assets were finally sold was only $84,000.

The problem for Brattleboro early in February was what steps could be taken to save this manufacturing plant as a going concern to provide income and jobs for the community. Original contact was made with my office by W. Robert Johnson, Sr., on behalf of the Industrial Development Committee of the Brattleboro Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Johnson asked that I contact Small Business Administration to see what disposition would be made of the plant, and especially what could be done in cooperation with local business interests to make it possible for another local furniture manufacturer, who needed it, to acquire the space and equipment.

My first discussions on the matter were with the staff of the House Small Business Committee, and it became apparent from their inquiries that SBA would dispose of the property by auction. It was my understanding that SBA probably had discretionary powers as to the manner of resale, but apparently it is their policy in such cases not to negotiate directly with buyers. Rather they go for the top dollar, and this they seek at an auction.

Later in February, Mr. Johnson was passing through Washington, and this afforded opportunity for him to talk directly with responsible officials at SBA to see what could be done to help interested local parties acquire the Templeton plant. A meeting was arranged, and this took place on February 25 with Mr. Frederick C. Stoddard, Director of the Office of Loan Administration at SBA. Mr. Stoddard was joined by Mr. William A. Chadwell, Chief of the Liquidation Division, and both Mr. Anthony Buraczynski of Brattleboro and Mr. John Carnahan of my staff were with Mr. Johnson. It was reported that they discussed the whole range of problems in disposing of the Brattleboro property, and Mr. Stoddard was most cordial in assuring that SBA was interested in helping the community retain the plant as a going concern. In particular, it was the understanding of the Vermonters present that final approval of any sale would have to be given here in Washington, although arrangements would be handled by the SBA office in Boston. In the meantime, other representatives of the chamber of commerce, including Manager George Vakalis, and Mr. Leon Sandman, president of Alpine Wood Products Co., which wanted to acquire the plant, had talked at length with Mr. Albert O'Shea of the Boston office. From both sources, the understanding clearly was that final approval of any sale would be given by Washington.

This matter of final approval has importance to the outcome of the story, because all through the events that followed it was the definite understanding of the Brattleboro people that there would be top level review following the auction. It was hoped that in this way final consideration could be given to the community's efforts to save the property intact as a going concern, and that the needs of the community and small business could and would be taken into account in the final disposition of the property.

Community concern was indicated by local activity to make arrangements for helping to finance a buyer such as Alpine Wood Products, and it was expressed in various statements, including the following petition by the selectmen of the town of Brattleboro:

TOWN OF BRATTLEBORO,
Brattleboro, Vt., April 20, 1960.

Hon. WILLIAM MEYER,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MEYER: It has been brought to our attention by the Industrial Development Committee of the Greater Brattleboro Chamber of Commerce that it would be very much in the best economic interest of the town of Brattleboro if the forthcoming sale of the Templeton property could be held as soon as possible and sold as a package so that it can be maintained as a productive manufacturing plant.

There is, at the present time, at least one local manufacturer extremely interested in acquiring the property. This party needs additional space desperately in order to meet increased production schedules this summer. The present employment of this manufacturer is 35 to 40 and would increase to 50 to 60 as soon as they could move. They have the potential of employing 90 to 100 production workers within 90 days.

We are also informed that there are other industrial prospects who are interested in acquiring the property as a unit and feel certain that there would be several bidding.

In view of these facts, we respectfully petition the referee and the Small Business Administration:

1. That the arrangements be made to hold the sale at the earliest possible date.

2. That the property be offered and sold as a package which would include the land, buildings, machinery and equipment.

Very truly yours,
W. H. MOORE,
ERIC G. W. BARRADALE,
WILLIAM R. CAMPBELL,
HENRY ANGELL,
L. R. WHITMAN,
Selectmen, Town of Brattleboro, Vt.

A letter similar to that from the selectmen was also received from Mr. Leslie E. Snow, president of the Brattleboro Chamber of Commerce, and he reiterated the importance of selling the Templeton property intact so that it could continue to function as a local industry. Jobs for Brattleboro workers were a principal concern of all involved, and the Brattleboro Daily Reformer on May 18 called editorially for an outcome to assure that "the building and machinery could be put to work again providing jobs and incomes for Brattleboro families."

The petition of the selectmen was forwarded to the Small Business Administration with my letter urging action along the lines sought by the Brattleboro leaders, and a reply was received as follows:

SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D.C., May 3, 1960.

Hon. WILLIAM H. MEYER,
House of Respresentatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MEYER: This is in reply to your letter dated April 22, 1960, to Mr. Frederic C. Stoddard, Director, Office of Loan Administration, concerning the interest of the selectmen of the town of Brattleboro, Vt., in Templeton Furniture Co., Inc.

We have received a letter from the selectmen and have assured them that we will be glad to cooperate with them in any way we can, consistent with the laws of Vermont and the regulations under which this agency operates.

As you may know the company filed a petition in bankruptcy in August 1959 and the trustee attempted without success to sell the property over a period of approximately 7 months. He abandoned the plant about the middle of March, at which time the U.S. attorney, representing this agency, instituted foreclosure. We are advised that under the laws of Vermont a period of approximately 3 months will be required to complete the foreclosure.

The foreclosure sale will be under the jurisdiction of the court in which the action was filed and the property will be sold to the highest bidder.

We have requested the selectmen to advise our Boston regional office of any plans they may develop for purchasing the property and have asked our Boston office to keep the selectmen informed of the progress of the foreclosure action so that all interested parties may make arrangements to bid at the sale.

Your interest in the matter is appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

PHILIP MCCALLUM,
Administrator.

Again, we were assured of cooperation, and also there was written assurance that the foreclosure sale would be under the jurisdiction of the court. This, together with our understanding that Washington would give final approval to SBA's sale, had the effect of misleading Brattleboro leaders as to how final disposition would be made. Contacts had been made with the Boston SBA office as recommended, and negotiations locally to help finance an industry to take Templeton's place were progressing satisfactorily.

The next report was on the day of the sale itself, June 9, 1960. Procedure at the auction called for the property to be offered first as an entirety, and on this there was some bidding in which Mr. Sandman, the local manufacturer with local backing, was successful at $80,000. The real estate was then offered as a separate lot, and taken by a Mr. Denerstein, for $40,000. Sandman did not bid on this as the only financing arrangement offered by SBA of which he was aware was on the land and equipment as an entirety. Machinery and equipment were then offered as a separate lot, and this also was taken by Mr. Denerstein, after raising his own bids to $44,000. Denerstein, listed as an auctioneer and machinery dealer, is reported to have been at the sale representing several interests, including his own, a woodworking machinery company, and a machine and motor company, all in New York. To many who were there he was a speculator.

To complete the auction the machinery and equipment were then offered piecemeal, and for this the total bid was $43,935—or $65 less than Mr. Denerstein had bid for the machinery in a lot. A conference followed between Mr. Denerstein and Mr. O'Shea, the Boston SBA representative, and through some understanding which has never been adequately explained, Mr. Denerstein waived his right to the machinery and Mr. O'Shea announced that the piecemeal bids would be accepted. In fact, he announced also that the sale had been completed, and buyers began carrying out pieces of equipment.

At this point the question was raised immediately about final review of the terms of sale by higher officials in SBA, and contrary to all previous understandings from Boston and from Washington, it was finally learned that Mr. O'Shea had gone to Brattleboro with full delegated authority to complete the sale, provided the total price exceeded $80,000. This fact came out for the first time in conversations here in Washington with Mr. Chadwell on June 10, the day after the auction began, when he stated that authorization had been given the Boston office 2 weeks earlier to go ahead to sell on terms set under SBA regulations. Despite all of our understandings and our entreaties of concern about the manner in which the sale would be handled, this delegation of authority had been settled and approved 2 weeks earlier here in Washington, and not one word about it had been given to any of the interested parties. Not only that, but Chadwell assured us that there was no further court responsibility in the sale, despite Administrator McCallum's written assurance on May 3 that the "foreclosure sale will be under the jurisdiction of the court."

There was also a question raised immediately about the terms on which the sale had been completed. The Brattleboro understanding was that SBA would offer terms on the property only when sold in the entirety. At the sale, terms were given to Denerstein on the real estate alone. In reply to questions from my office, SBA states it was announced that terms would be given on the real estate and machinery separately, provided the successful bidder on both was the same person. Possibly this was announced verbally at the opening of the auction, but it certainly is not to be found anywhere in the written brochure for the auction. Furthermore, the Brattleboro business people who had talked with Mr. O'Shea and others at length, were never aware of the possibility of such an arrangement. From all appearances Denerstein was the only one of the interested bidders who knew of this possibility, and furthermore, in his agreement to waive his right to the higher bid on the machinery as a lot, he apparently made a deal with Mr. O'Shea by which the financing terms would still be available to him on the real estate alone. Thus, not only was he allowed to withdraw his top dollar bid to which SBA was so firmly committed in holding the auction, but also a special, unannounced, and unexplained arrangement was made by which his purchase was financed by SBA.

No such consideration was ever shown to the Brattleboro community. In fact, in retrospect it clearly appears that the town was thwarted in all its efforts to work out an arrangement for keeping the industry. For one thing, the procedure of offering the property intact first, and then by lots, puts those wanting to hold the industry together at a disadvantage. Although this is evidently standard practice for such auctions, the Brattleboro experience raises serious questions as to whether this best serves the purpose of keeping the plant together.

SBA told my office on June 10 that all Alpine Wood Products needed to do was to make a higher bid on the entirety than Denerstein did on the lot bids. How was Alpine or anyone to be sure of doing that when the bidding on the lots followed the entirety? And more important, why should the order not have been just the other way so as to let the man who wanted to buy the whole plant see if he could outbid the lot buyers? Set up as it was, the burden was all against the man who wanted the whole plant, and the advantages were all in favor of the speculator or lot buyer who wanted to clean the business out. Does this procedure serve the purposes for which Small Business Administration was established?

There were many unanswered questions in Brattleboro as a result of the way the auction was conducted. The Reformer described it as "a strange piece of business," and the matter has even been referred to the U.S. attorney for investigation as to possible irregularities or illegalities. So far no report has been made as to whether technically such was the case. Regardless of technicalities, it is clear that the SBA rendered a disservice to this Vermont community, and certainly broke faith on every count with the civic groups that tried so hard to work out something to keep the property intact so that it could be maintained as a productive manufacturing plant. Indignation has been expressed on every side in the community, and this editorial from the Brattleboro Daily Reformer for June 24 expresses local sentiment:

UNANSWERED QUESTIONS

When U.S. Attorney Louis G. Whitcomb was asked by the chamber's industrial committee to come to Brattleboro last week to discuss the public auction conducted by the Small Business Administration on the former Templeton property, the local businessmen were seeking information and advice on what had appeared to them to be "highhanded" methods of operation by the SBA. It had been hoped, prior to the auction, that the Templeton building and equipment could be acquired by a local furniture manufacturer who was seeking means of expanding a successful business and that by this means many of the former Templeton employees could again find jobs in their trade.

But a Federal auction proved to be a strange piece of business, leaving many unanswered questions in local minds. There was the question of why the SBA should have shown so little interest in helping put this property back to work creating jobs; why the local manufacturer seeking to acquire it should have been denied a Federal mortgage on the building when the successful bidder was granted one; why the building and machinery as a package were put up for auction first and then auctioned separately, rather than in opposite order; why—especially—a successful bidder on the machinery as a whole was permitted to be relieved of his bid and his suggestion followed that the machinery go in separate units at a lower "take" for the Government and the taxpayers. To be sure, the lower figure was only $65 less than the high bid for the whole lot; but even if it was only 65 cents lower the question of why a lower bid was accepted would be legitimate.

As taxpayers and as a group of citizens working for Brattleboro's industrial growth, the chamber committee turned to the U.S. attorney to shed light on a Federal procedure. They still don't have the answers. They have, rather, the feeling that they got the "brush off" from Mr. Whitcomb, in the process of which they were told by the U.S. attorney "not to say anything to the newspaper about anything discussed at this meeting." Since Mr. Whitcomb refused to say anything to "this newspaper" himself, we also are unable to report whether the auction procedure of the SBA was proper.

We can say, however, that the more we see of Federal officials who profess to work for the best interest of "the Government" we wonder at just what point they began to forget that the Government is "the people."

A small business has been dismantled, and the manufacturer who wanted to operate it is now reported to be looking elsewhere for a plant. A community effort to reopen a small industry was thwarted. The moral of this apparently lies in the policies and attitudes of the Small Business Administration, and certainly this experience raises serious doubts as to the agency's real concern for small business. SBA cannot point to a single concrete way in which it helped small business in this Brattleboro episode. Possibly by relating this experience others can be forewarned of the pitfalls in such negotiations.

There may even be some poetic justice, too, in the report lately received that the boilers at the plant in question have been condemned and thus the speculator may have paid considerably more than its worth.

Captive Nations Week, 1960

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HOWARD W. ROBISON
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. ROBISON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of my colleagues to the fact that Captive Nations Week will be observed July 17–23, 1960.

During the 1st session of the 86th Congress, Public Law 86–90 was enacted expressing the sense of the Congress that the President should proclaim the third week in July as Captive Nations Week and that similar proclamation should be made each year until such time as freedom and independence from Communist imperialism shall have been achieved for all the captive nations of the world. Therefore this year's observance will be the second Captive Nations Week.

Mr. Speaker, I know I reflect the opinion of my colleagues when I state that I hope the reason for observing Captive Nations Week will not exist for many more years. However, so long as these nations remain under the domination of international communism, we of the United States will remind them annually that our hearts are with them and our prayers as well.

I am proud to be an honorary member of the National Committee on Captive Nations Week and I commend the committee, its chairman, Dr. Dobriansky, its executive director, Mr. Connor, its secretary-treasurer, Mr. Skubik for their excellent activities in stimulating the formation of local committees throughout the Nation to organize proper ceremonies and observances of Captive Nations Week, 1960.

Address of Hon. John F. Shelley, Knights of Columbus Dinner, Hotel Claremont, May 29, 1960

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks I include a splendid address made by our distinguished friend and colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. SHELLEY], at a Knights of Columbus dinner held in Claremont, Calif., on May 29, 1960.

As our distinguished colleague well said:

On the international scene, there is challenge of the cold war, with its unpredictable twists and turns. The quick-change artists of the Kremlin juggle the hopes of peace and the threat of warlike oldtime vaudeville performers. We as Americans cannot afford to be taken in by any Communist trickery. We must not become the world's largest bouncing ball in the hands of Communist manipulators and jugglers.

As Congressman SHELLEY also well said:

But the cold war is, in fact, the grim contest between those who are dedicated to freedom—human freedom and its whole brilliant range—religious, political, personal—opposing those who seek to destroy it.

The splendid address of Congressman SHELLEY is appropriate to the world of today. His address should be as widely read as possible:

ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN F. SHELLEY, KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS DINNER, HOTEL CLAREMONT, MAY 29, 1960

Mr. Toastmaster, right reverend monsignori, reverend fathers, past and present grand and worthy knights, sir knights, and your lovely ladies, no words of mine could adequately express the gratitude and the humility I feel for the signal honor you have conferred upon me today and this evening. We have been friends, most of us, for many years, and you will understand without my telling you, that this day will be for me an abiding source of gratitude and inspiration, and I say that on behalf of today's fourth-degree class.

I'm particularly happy to have this opportunity to speak with you as one American Catholic to another in this turbulent year of grace 1960.

If ever we, as Catholics, were called upon to demonstrate the qualities of good citizenship in our beloved country, that time is now.

On the international scene, there is challenge of the cold war, with its unpredictable twists and turns. The quick-change artists of the Kremlin juggle the hopes of peace and the threat of war like oldtime vaudeville performers. We as Americans cannot afford to be taken in by any Communist trickery. We must not become the world's largest bouncing ball in the hands of Communist manipulators and jugglers.

To the everlasting credit of the Catholic Church, she has never once taken her eyes from the central fact that communism is a religion: The religion of no God: The religion of an all-powerful tyranny from whose decisions there is no appeal, even in the moral order.

And remember this: When communism destroys the divinity of God, it destroys, at the same stroke the humanity of man. It makes of man nothing but a creature without a soul, totally dependent on the whim of the state.

If the sometimes smiling confidence men of the Kremlin have blurred that harsh fact for some of our fellow Americans, the Chinese Communists, with merciless determination, restored the image by their shattering of families, their relentless persecution of all religion; their implacable hostility to the United States.

We have the honor to be singled out as enemy No. 1—and, therefore, as the supreme objective of Communist scheming—not so much because of our power or wealth, but, I suspect, for another reason.

With all our faults—and we are not yet perfect, as a people—but with all our faults, we remain as a nation dedicated to this proposition: That free men can govern themselves with justice and dignity and honor. As Woodrow Wilson once phrased it: "Free men need no guardians."

Within the very cornerstone of this Nation, there is written this eternal defiance of tyranny, Communist or other: "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." How could communism or any other tyranny stomach that principle?

If the cold war today were simply a matter of two differing forms of government at odds with each other, that would be one thing.

But the cold war is, in fact, the grim contest between those who are dedicated to freedom—human freedom and its whole brilliant range—religious, political, personal—opposing those who seek to destroy it.

You and I as mature Americans recognize how deep is the challenge to our convictions. The challenge to remain levelheaded through every twist and turn of the devious strategy of the Communists.

We know what an appalling catastrophe nuclear warfare would be. But we also know what an unspeakable disaster it would be for us to be either deceived or intimidated into surrendering our heritage of freedom.

Tomorrow, you and I join with all our fellow Americans to pause for a moment and hear the high clear notes of "Taps" sounding out in living salute to American fighting men of every generation and race and faith who gave their lives to keep that heritage intact.

Memorial Day, I believe, speaks to us this year with greater urgency than ever before.

The Colonials who abandoned their plows and reached for their rifles to fight the bitter War of Independence knew perfectly well what they were up against. There they were, living practically at the ocean edge of a vast wilderness, defying the might of the British Empire. Washington knew, and Hamilton, and Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin and the other leaders, that their own lives were forfeit if this Revolution failed.

They knew the odds against them.

But they knew also that here in America men walked upright, self-reliant, refusing to be exploited by the absentee government.

It was freedom they fought for, from Lexington on through the cruel days and nights of Valley Forge to final victory at Yorktown.

Our infant Nation was scarcely out of its cradle when war struck again, and again Americans had to fight to preserve what they had won. Andrew Jackson's men at New Orleans included just about every kind of American imaginable, and maybe even a philosopher or two. They knew what they were fighting for—their own freedom; their own right to govern themselves as Americans, not as subjects of any crown or any imported bureaucracy.

As our Nation grew, as self-reliant pioneers thrust back the wilderness, so too did the confident heritage of freedom become stronger.

Under the heartbreaking tragedy of the Civil War, when brother fought against brother, and our Nation seemed on the verge of disruption, the resolute but deeply compassionate Abraham Lincoln held our country together.

Americans had their first call to oversea battle in the Spanish-American War.

Since that time, our sons have given their lives in battle on the continents of the earth; on the islands of all the seas, in the skies and oceans of the world.

Thanks to their heroism, their sacrifice, we gather here tonight as free men.

Think for a moment—how many nations are there now wherein a meeting like this would be impossible?

Tomorrow, as Catholics and as Americans, every one of us will pray for the eternal repose of the souls of those who died for us, whatever their generation, their race, their faith.

And as we remember with deep gratitude their sacrifice for us, I hope we shall ponder the meaning of their sacrifice.

For these honored dead must not have died in vain.

It remains, as Lincoln said, for us, the living, to advance their work.

The heritage of freedom is in our hands, new, enriched by their heroism.

The question remains: Do we appreciate, do we really understand what it means to be citizens in a democracy?

I often think of the words of Pope Pius XII, discussing the contract between dictatorship and democracy: "If the possibility of controlling and correcting the action of those in power had not been lacking, the world would not have been dragged into the hurricane of war."

And again, discussing the citizen in a democracy, Pius XII said: "To express his own opinion concerning the duties and sacrifices which are imposed on him; not to be forced to obey without having been listened to; there are two of the citizen's rights, which have their expression in democracy."

What happens, then, when a citizen ignores the great political questions of the day?

What happens when here in America, only a few sometimes bother even to vote?

We hear of voter apathy, voter indifference, and it reminds me of the cynical old saying that the grandfathers die on the barricades to win the rights that the grandsons don't even bother to exercise.

How many people like you and like me would give their right arm for the chance to vote in a free and open election? Think now of the people of China, of Hungary, of Poland, of East Germany, of Czechoslovakia, and the whole sad company of captive satellite nations.

Why else did Hungarian youth, in a glorious and unforgettable blaze of heroism, make their barehanded attack upon the armor of their Communist masters?

They and others like them were trying to win what we in America have: The right to control their own affairs; a voice in the shaping of their national policy.

It seems to be that of all people, we American Catholics should most appreciate the rights and privileges of our citizenship.

In this year, confronted as we are with the complex problems of the cold war, we have the solemn obligation of voting for a President.

It so happens that one of the candidates is a Catholic and thus, whether you and I like it or not, we become the objects of the critical scrutiny of our fellow Americans.

I firmly believe that no one should vote for a candidate because he is a Catholic.

The Catholic Church embraces Americans of both political parties, and Catholics have made significant contributions to both parties at every level.

I hope, as you do, that religious intolerance will not manifest itself in the months ahead.

And I most sincerely hope that Catholics will not lay themselves open to the charge of injecting the religious issue into the campaign.

We have come far, in this country, from the days when Catholics were a puzzle, a mystery, something to be feared, avoided or thrust aside.

I need not remind you tonight of the recent campaign on proposition 16.

Many regrettable things were said, many false charges were made, and a few attempts to arouse bigotry were undertaken.

But the great majority of Californians understood what the issue was and resisted, to a gratifying degree, the blandishments of bigotry.

I accept this as a compliment to Catholics generally.

I believe that as people not of our faith had a chance, over the years, to size us up, to rub elbows with us, to associate ever more closely with us, they realized that we are not a group apart.

We are accepted as other Americans and we are judged by the kind of people we show ourselves to be.

Are we good citizens?

Do we try to pull our oar in the boat, to do our part as good citizens in our community?

Do we give our time and effort to help worthwhile community projects?

Do we make it easy and comfortable for our fellows not of our faith to know us and associate with us?

We are not a special interest group in this country and I'd like to give you just one example of that from my own experience and personal knowledge.

When the Federal aid to education bill came before the Congress, the position of the church regarding parochial schools' inclusion in the bill was sent to various Members of Congress.

It was a reasonable position, and some felt that parochial schools should be included in the list of beneficiaries.

It became clear, however, that if such an attempt were made—that is, an attempt to include parochial schools—the whole Federal aid program would be defeated.

Catholic spokesmen pointed out that, rather than deprive any American youngster of the benefits of this program, the church would not press its own position in the matter.

This was mature, completely patriotic and generous action, whereby the church subordinated its own interest for the benefit of others.

As American Catholics, we have, I believe, a special contribution to make to our communities and our country.

First and foremost, of course, our position regarding communism is fixed. Regardless of what twists the party line may take, Catholics have had this evil and monstrous thing dissected for them time and again, and they know its evil.

I urge those of you who may not have done so recently to pick up and read again Pope Pius XI's letter on atheistic communism.

Read it carefully, read it thoughtfully, and you will observe certain prophetic aspects about the heartbreak and tragedy communism would bring into the world.

Catholics also have an enlightened sense of the need for helping the distressed of the world.

We, of all people, can never forget the plight of those across the world from us.

Where men and women and children are trapped in grinding and almost hopeless poverty, they may very easily, from their own despair, turn to the deceits of communism as a way out.

Technical assistance programs and programs of aid are not simply matters of good policy on the political level. They are an expression of the charity that lies deep in the heart of the American people.

Never forget this: While the enemies of our country ridicule and mock us as ignorant materialists, selfish exploiters, interested in nothing but money, the foreign aid programs brand such propaganda as a pack of contemptible lies.

In our thinking about the Communist threat and the plight of underprivileged nations, we must remember the story of Fatima.

The Russian people are the first captives, the first victims of the Communists, and in our thinking and our prayers, we must distinguish between the decent and good people of Russia and their ruthless masters.

The message of Fatima gives to Catholics throughout the world a new dimension and, indeed, a new weapon for combating this atheistic monstrosity: We see it not simply as a political or social or economic theory, but as a moral evil to be fought with the weapons of the spirit: prayer and meaningful penance.

In addition to our view of the world situation, I believe that our background as a sometimes unwelcome minority in certain areas gives us added insight into the problems of other minority groups.

Certainly we know what the denial of civil rights can mean to a people.

We knew once what it meant to be regarded as second class citizens.

Those days have come pretty much to an end, now.

But the task remains for us to see that such days are ended for all times for all Americans.

Most of us in this room have lived to see the sweep and tempo of American history speed up tremendously.

We have seen the concept of social justice expanded beyond anything one might have dreamed of 50 years ago.

We have seen legislation passed which, at the beginning of the century, would have seemed impossible.

While much remains to be done, let us not forget that much has already been done to make life better for all Americans.

We shall never create, here on earth, the conditions of Paradise.

But we have always before us the vision of an ever finer and greater nation; a people moving always forward, sometimes swiftly, sometimes slowly, but always forward to a realization of the American dream.

Progress is not achieved without the clash of judgment and opinion, and that is as it should be in a democratic society.

Let us hear every man's opinion, for no one has an exclusive monopoly on intelligence.

This year, above all, let us, as Catholics, conduct ourselves before the eyes of our countrymen with intelligence, self-respect, balance, and charity.

It is not for us to impute motives to those who may not agree with our position in one or another field of national interest now.

But it is our duty, and it devolves upon every one of us without exception, to remember that if the turn of the wheel touches off questions about the church and state; if at times we are made to answer questions about our faith, let us answer such questions from an informed mind and an understanding heart.

The Holy Father has said that in times like these it is permitted to no one to be mediocre.

For us, I believe, that means many a long and thoughtful meditation on the blessings God has given us in this blessed land of ours.

It means pondering deeply the silent but eloquent message of Memorial Day: that others had died for us—to give us the chance to make their sacrifice meaningful by our conduct as citizens of this great Nation.

Let nothing narrow or petty or mean emanate from us this year, even under the most exasperating provocation.

For our fellow Americans have a tremendouse sense of fairplay, and they will not mistake forbearance for timidity or cowardice.

There are members of both political parties in the ranks of our order.

In this year and the years to come, let us act according to our best intelligence and conscience as citizens, doing our utmost in however great or humble a way to make this blessed Nation an ever greater expression of freedom; a mighty beacon in the turbulent world showing forth clearly and steadily that free men indeed can govern themselves with dignity and justice and honor; that free men need no guardians; that, with God's blessing, government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

Armenia Commemorates 42d Anniversary of Independence

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MICHAEL A. FEIGHAN
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, on June 4, 1960, a rally was held in New York City to commemorate the 42d anniversary of the national independence of Armenia. This was a significant occasion because the Armenian nation and people were among the first to declare their national independence and complete separation from the Russian empire during the period 1917–18. At that time many other nations declared their national independence and separation from the Russian empire. This was an era in which the spirit of freedom and national independence dominated the lives of the people between the Baltic and Caspian Seas and signaled the beginning of a new order among the nations of this vast area based upon the promises of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. This great hope was snuffed out by the Russian Bolsheviks who, by the use of terror, infiltration, and armed aggression, destroyed the national independence of Armenia and many other newly independent countries.

The flame of freedom, the hope for a return of national independence, burns brightly in the hearts and minds of the people of Armenia. They are not satisfied with the dismal and oppressive way of life imposed upon them by Moscow. Armenians in the free world and their friends commemorate this anniversary each year as a means of strengthening the bond of friendship which exists between these subjugated people and the American people.

Under unanimous consent I include my address in the RECORD.

ARMENIA WILL BE FREE AND INDEPENDENT

Forty-two years ago a series of inspiring events took place in many distant lands which gave promise of bringing to war-weary mankind a long era of peace with justice.

This inspiring series of events were the declaration of national independence by the many nations submerged by the tyranny and despotism of Russian imperialism. The stimulating air of freedom, liberty, and personal dignity was everywhere as the chains of imperial slavery were smashed by the will of millions of people who determined to be masters of their destinies. In a real sense, history records that period as the golden age of national independence.

Today we commemorate the 42d anniversary of the establishment of the Armenian Independent Republic. May 28, 1918, marks the official date of the rebirth of the national independence of that ancient and honored nation. This is a day which will never be forgotten by Armenians everywhere and anywhere in the world. It is a day cherished by all people who love freedom, and particularly by Americans because our basic political belief is that all men are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights—that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Our Founding Fathers determined that the pursuit of happiness required the national independence of the Thirteen Original Colonies, that life and liberty for the colonists would not be secure until that independence was won. Each generation of Americans has been dedicated to this great ideal. We in this generation want nothing more for ourselves and we seek nothing less in our national purposes for all the people of the world. That is why Americans in all walks of life pay tribute to the freedom-loving people of Armenia on this anniversary of their national independence.

This year 1960 marks the 42d anniversary of national independence for many other nations. On this day we are mindful that the people of Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, White Ruthenia, Ukraine, Georgia, Azerbaijan, Cossackia, Turkestan and Idel-Ural marched arm in arm with the people of Armenia in the common fight for a better world, a world order based upon the right of all nations and people to self-determination. Nor do we forget that the people of Poland, Czechia, Slovakia, Hungary, Romania, and Bulgaria were allies in this great struggle. Our memory of this golden era of national independence is not dimmed by the present tragic plight of all these nations. We remain convinced that it is the destiny of all mankind to be free, that the divine order of the world moves steadily in this direction and that we are on the threshold of a new and brighter era.

The Congress of the United States gave official voice to this conviction in the passage last year of the Captive Nations Week resolution, now known as Public Law 86–90. This law now stands as the basic framework for a positive and realistic foreign policy for the American people.

Events of the recent past expose both the fallacy and the dangers of attempting to resolve world tensions by dealing with the jailers of the Russian Communist prison of nations. The Russian leaders have demonstrated beyond any doubt that this meaning of peaceful coexistence is the road to war or peaceful surrender. They leave us no other alternative once we accept the mirage of this high-sounding slogan. The Eisenhower administration must be credited with providing all the evidence necessary to awaken the American people to this reality. No one can, in honesty, argue that the present administration did not go the full distance on the theme of peaceful coexistence with the Russian Communists, nor can it be said that the visit of Tzar Khrushchev to the United States was not a part of this dangerous game. Vice President NIXON deserves and should be given credit for the part he played in this international drama which ended up with a Russian villain, but no American hero.

It is time that the debris and offensive odor resulting from the collapse of the peaceful coexistence drama was cleared from the national political arena. It is time that the American people were presented with a foreign policy which corresponds with the hopes and aspirations of the common man the world over. It is time that we turned our attention to the oppressed and away from the oppressors. It is time that we recognized the worldwide struggle, for the minds and hearts of the common man cannot be won with dollars and will be surely lost unless we unshackle the power of our American moral and political ideals. It is time that we recognize wars have never been averted by timid men or halfway measures and that the winning of a just peace entails risks which free people must accept if they are to remain free.

These are fundamentals which we, as a united people, must face now and in the foreseeable future. I am convinced the vast majority of our people have awakened fully to this need. The bursted balloon of peaceful coexistence has awakened them from the sleep of a Disneyland world into which they were led by the slogans of the Madison Avenue soap salesmen. As a nation, we are back on the hard and rough road to a just and lasting peace and the road markers are found in the convictions and moral principles set forth in Public Law 86–90.

These thoughts, I believe, are both fitting and proper on this day when we commemorate the 42d anniversary of Armenian national independence. The valiant struggles by the Armenian people to win their national independence and the terrible sacrifices they have made in these past 40 years to preserve their national heritage demand that we who are free, speak with candor. We must be honest in the analysis of our national affairs, unafraid to accept the responsibilities which our nation, as the citadel of human freedom, inherits from the march of world events, and responsive to the aspirations for freedom held by the people of Armenia and all other captive nations. These things we must do if we are to pass through the threshold to that new and brighter era when peace with justice and freedom shall prevail for all nations and all people.

Captive Nations Week—July 17–23

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LOUIS C. RABAUT
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, the great American tradition of freedom, democracy and fairplay are well known throughout the whole world. From the Declaration of Independence to the Wilsonian self-determination of nations to the present-day encouragement and assistance of newly emerging free nations, this country has stood before the world as the beacon of personal freedom and the sovereign integrity of nations.

Sadly enough, Mr. Speaker, all nations have not been as fortunate as the United States in enjoying this status or in preserving it. The world power designs of certain imperialistic nations or ideologies have led to the overwhelming, by force, intrigue and subversion, of many of the smaller and weaker nations of the world. These nations and their courageous peoples still love freedom—for freedom is an overriding right natural to all men. While nationalities, languages, dress, and habits differ throughout the world, the human spirit differs but little as between all men. Thus we free Americans are substantially one in spirit with our fellow men throughout the world who have had their freedom taken from them.

The proclamation of the Captive Nations Week by the President, in pursuance of a joint resolution enacted by Congress on July 17, 1959, is a clear reaffirmation of our wholehearted dedication to justice and freedom. Of course none of us are naive enough to expect the freeing of these nations merely by the observance in this country of the Captive Nations Week. But we do believe that this observance will serve notice to oppressors and tyrants, indicating that the downtrodden and the underprivileged have our full sympathy, and that they have not been forgotten in their struggle for freedom. It will also hearten those tens of millions who are captives of Communist totalitarianism behind the Iron Curtain, knowing that their cause is in our mind and that it has champions in this great Republic. We shall continue to observe the Captive Nations Week until these nations have regained their freedom, and I am glad, indeed, to join in the observance of this annual event. The week of July 17 of this and of every year shall tender the sympathy and support of every American to the freedom loving, though temporarily captive peoples of the world. We can only look forward to the day, Mr. Speaker, when there will be no such thing as a captive nation, when all human beings—indeed, the whole world—may live without fear in the personal and national freedom to which everyone has an inherent right.

Barratt O'Hara's Answers to a Questionnaire

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. BARRATT O'HARA

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in little more than 4 months every Member of this body who has been nominated and is seeking reelection will have passed upon him the verdict of his constituents. It is the short 2-year term that keeps the House very close to the people, as it was intended by the wise men who made our Constitution.

In recent years there has been a growing advocacy of changing the term of tenure from 2 to 4 years. I hope that this change never will be accomplished. The short term is a personal hardship on the Members of the House, and the expense of even a modest campaign every 2 years is no inconsiderable tax on their resources. But this is no valid argument why there should be a gulf of 4 years between the people and their Representatives. I firmly believe that one of the great strengths of our Constitution is the provision that subjects all Members of the House every 2 years to the acid test of the ballot box. The observations and experiences of my 10 years in Congress have confirmed me in this conviction.

The interest of the electorate, always a healthy sign that our representative democracy is functioning through an enlightened citizenry that wishes to be informed, is reflected in the questionnaires Members of Congress and nominees of opposing parties now are receiving. I am extending my remarks to include the questions of the independent voters of Illinois and my answers thereto. The first five questions and answers I have omitted since they relate only to name, residence, and similar statistical matters:

QUESTION 6

(a) Do you agree with the general proposition that Federal income taxes, in addition to supplying the major part of Federal revenue, should be used as a positive instrument of economic policy? Explain.

(b) Would you give a tax-cut priority over expansion of Federal support for education, housing, health and welfare services at this time?

ANSWER

(a) The Federal income tax serves the double purpose of (1) raising needed money, and (2) by percentage increases graduated to higher incomes minimizes the danger inherent in the accumulation of a nation's wealth in a relatively few hands. Furthermore, as the income rises the large percentage taken by the Government is kept by current Federal spendings in circulation and thus contributes to the sustained buying power.

On revisions of the tax rate it is inevitable that there should be conflict between the two schools of economic planning. I am of the school that believes relief first should be given where it is most needed since I conceive national strength to be measured by the position of the lowest in the economic scale, not that of the highest. On the other hand, those who think contrarywise argue that more incentive and capital should be given to those on top to encourage more expansion, more industries. It seems the old question going back to the days of Jefferson and Hamilton of whether you build from the top or the bottom. I would say that the proper approach, in the pattern of democratic thinking that what is good for one segment is good for all, is that consideration should be given to the reasonable and realistic need of both top and bottom.

In a sense I presume you can consider Federal income taxes as an instrument of economic policy. Certainly in a broad way there is a relationship. But it is difficult to make a clear-cut "Yes" or "No" answer to your question. However, if by your question you are in effect asking "Should the income tax be used exclusively for revenue purposes with no attention to economic consequences?" My answer must be negative. On the other hand, there may be economic objectives which may seem desirable to some who would use the income tax as a tool for their accomplishment, to which I would not subscribe.

For example, I would not approve use of the income tax to establish complete equality of income or to work a redistribution of the wealth. Yet I do believe in a progressive income tax and taxation in accordance with ability to pay. In any event, rates should meet the test of providing incentives for economic growth.

I may cite at least two occasions when I have supported tax legislation designed to have effects whose purposes were primarily economic. The first of these was in 1958 during the recession when I sponsored a residential rehabilitation program. To make the program attractive, I proposed to allow property owners, in computing their taxable income, to deduct expenditures for residential rehabilitation that conformed with prescribed standards. This was a deliberate tax incentive. In that sense then, I did favor the use of the income tax to promote an economic objective.

During the present session, I have also supported legislation to promote the expansion of American business abroad. I have long been impressed with the importance of implementing President Truman's point 4 program. Related to this has been the effort to make it easier for American businessmen to compete abroad. Many of us felt that the tax laws impeded the full development of their efforts. I therefore spoke in favor of, and voted for, H.R. 5 which provides a measure of tax relief designed to encourage foreign business development. In that sense then, I favored the use of the income tax to promote economic objectives.

I have answered this question at some length because I know of no short answer that would cover what I think you have in mind. I would refer those further interested in the subject to the various papers in the Ways and Means "Tax Revision Compendium" (November 1959, pp. 107, 118, 169, 180, 181, 192), not necessarily as representing my views, but as a research source on a complex subject.

(b) Decidedly no.

QUESTION 7

Which, if any, of the following proposed revisions in the Federal tax structure do you support? Give reasons.

(a) Reduction of taxes on middle and lower income families?

(b) Repeal of preferential tax treatment of dividend income?

(c) Reduction of benefits in tax treatment of capital gains?

(d) Limitation of depletion and writeoff tax allowances for oil and mining industries?

(e) Reduction of corporate taxes?

(f) Reduction of excise taxes on other than luxury items?

ANSWER

I have a sense of impotency in replying to this question since in every Congress of which I have been a Member tax items have come out of the Ways and Means Committee in package bills, not open to amendment, and a sense of fiscal responsibility (raising money for worthy things for which I have voted) compels me to vote for them despite there are items in which I am not in agreement. This year I wrote several hundred constituents of my opposition to the excise tax on local telephone calls. I did manage to save some face by voting against the closed rule (barring amendments) but when the rule was adopted I could not be irresponsible enough to vote against the bill. Some Members did vote nay in a sort of protest, but I doubt if any Member would have done so if his were the determining vote.

In revision of the Federal tax structure I would give favorable consideration to your (d), (f), and (a) because they are in fields wherein I am informed to some extent. I could not honestly answer as to the other matters without the study and evaluation of complex tax problems which under the legislative situation in which I have found myself I have not undertaken.

The Ways and Means Committee has the hardest job in the Congress, that of raising money to meet the large and growing expenses of the Federal Government. Taxes never are popular with those upon whom they are saddled. The Ways and Means Committee holds months of public hearings, at which Members of Congress may and do appear as well as other witnesses representing varying views. The committee then studies the problem as a whole. The reason advanced for package bills is that otherwise there would be endless amendments and the consequences that come when important and complex legislation is written on the floor of the House. As it is, the House must take the bitter with the sweet, according to varying viewpoints and interests, and the Federal Government ends with getting the money necessary for its functioning.

QUESTION 8

(a) What kind of program—legislative or otherwise—do you support to provide assistance to workers and businesses in "distressed areas"?

(b) Do you consider that the Federal Government has a responsibility in the distressed area problem? Why?

ANSWER

I am combining your (a) and (b) questions, and first answering (b) because if the answer to (a) were "no" it would be illogical to suggest a legislative program where there was no responsibility.

(b) I do believe strongly that the Federal Government has a responsibility in the distressed area problem. I regard it as one of our most serious problems, and one of which there is not sufficient awareness. Depletion of natural resources, as coal, lessened demand for an old product supplanted by a superior product, removal of factories and automation are only a few of the factors that more and more will occasion the drying up of the employment to which the workers of a community have been accustomed. This happened in my young manhood when the old heating stove went the way of progress and the area around East St. Louis, which had been the center of the stove industry, went through a period of readjustment and resultant keen unemployment. In the fast-moving change and expansion of the present, and the expected freer exchange of goods by the nations of the world, and certainly as a logical result of automation, developments in this direction will be rapidly accelerated.

It is the responsibility of the Federal Government to encourage, to aid and in reasonable measure to finance on a matching basis the job of industrial readjustment to the end that all sections and all communities of our common country may share in the benefits of progress and none be penalized. The same line of reasoning governs here as that which gives justification to our program of help to the less developed nations of the free world.

(a) My thinking on the kind of a legislative program was reflected in the Douglas bill, for which I worked and voted in the 86th Congress, and which passed the Senate and House only to be vetoed by the President. I do not believe the President's veto can or will be defended by anyone aware of the seriousness of the situation and its challenge to the national welfare. Nor do I think that the administration bill, cutting assistance to a gesture and ignoring the vital need of vocational education to prepare workers for new employment in which they have had no training, can be defended. This is a subject on which I feel strongly and on which my convictions have been reached after much study.

QUESTION 9

How would you vote on the question of Federal price regulation of natural gas as proposed in the Harris bill during the 85th Congress?

ANSWER

The Harris bill in the 85th Congress was reported out by the Rules Committee 7 to 5, but never reached the floor of the House. In previous Congresses I had voted against bills which I thought gave an unwarranted advantage to the oil interests at the expense of millions of dollars in increased prices to the consumers of Chicago.

QUESTION 10

Do you think the minimum wage should be increased and expanded to include more workers? Be specific.

ANSWER

In 1913 the first State minimum wage laws were enacted largely as the result of the conscience of the American stirred by the revelations brought out by a commission of which I was privileged to be chairman. Naturally, I have a deep interest in minimum wage. I always have thought that the humblest of the Nation's workers was entitled in return for his time and toil at least the means of subsistence. In the 81st Congress I participated in the debate and voted for an increase in the Federal minimum wage and an extension of the coverage. Its passage furnished one of my great thrills of the first Congress of which I was a Member. In the 86th Congress I voted for the bill raising the minimum wage, with some increases in coverage, after first voting in Committee of the Whole for the stronger bill and greater coverage reported by the Committee on Education and Labor.

QUESTION 11

Do you support the "partnership" theory of water resource development whereby private industry has the primary responsibility for river development with only supplemental non-revenue-producing participation by the Federal Government, or do you favor direct Federal responsibility for multipurpose development of water resources? Explain.

ANSWER

Our Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court wisely gives jurisdiction over navigable interstate rivers to the Federal Government to preserve them in the national interest and for the use of all the people. Certainly the Federal Government has the responsibility of developing the power generated by these rivers and for multipurposes, all of which contribute to the national welfare and the benefits of which should go to all the people.

QUESTION 12

Do you believe the Federal Government should establish yardstick operation for the development of atomic energy comparable to the TVA?

ANSWER

Yes.

QUESTION 13

What Federal legislation, if any, do you favor to provide effective civil and criminal penalties for depriving any citizens of his constitutional rights to vote, and to enjoy equal opportunities for employment?

ANSWER

I think the Civil Rights Act of 1960 marked decided progress. It has provisions, I think, will prove effective, but they need strengthening. I sponsored in the House the much stronger and more inclusive bill introduced in the Senate by Senator DOUGLAS, and I hope it will receive favorable consideration in the 87th Congress. In the event of my reelection this will be high on my agenda, as will legislation assuring equal opportunity for employment. In the 81st Congress I remained on the floor of the House all night aiding in fighting off a southern filibuster and seeking to pass a Fair Employment Act with teeth. A law without strong enforcement provisions and penalties, sufficiently severe to serve as deterrents, would be a meaningless gesture.

QUESTION 14

Numerous proposals for Federal aid to education have been made. Which, if any, do you support? Why?

ANSWER

In the 86th Congress I voted for the only Federal aid to education bill that reached the floor of the House. It was trimmed to include only construction. I hope that the elections in November will return a Congress more sensitive to the Nation's educational needs and adequate salaries for teachers. The plain fact is that, in the changed world of the present, and with an increasing number of migrating families, the old concept of popular education supported solely by local taxpayers is outmoded. The Federal Government cannot escape its responsibility. If our representative democracy is to continue functioning in the highly competitive period ahead every American child must have the advantage of a good school and a good teacher, paid on a scale comparable with that of other workers with similar professional preparation.

QUESTION 15

The Supreme Court has already held that the Federal Government employee security program is limited to security-sensitive jobs. Prior to this Court finding, the programs was applied to all Government employees. Would you support legislative proposals to set aside the Supreme Court decision and reapply the security program on an across-the-board basis?

ANSWER

No.

QUESTION 16

Do you think congressional committee investigations should be unlimited or restricted to the finding of facts for legislative purposes? Explain.

ANSWER

It is the province of the Congress to make the laws, not to administer or to enforce them. Its investigations, therefore, should be confined (1) to the subject matter of pending or proposed legislation, (2) to the operation of existent laws when there is a legislative purpose, as repeal, amendment or codification, and, (3) to a limited extent and always governed by a definite and immediate legislative objective, to the need for legislation and its nature and scope.

QUESTION 17

Are you in favor of any plan to limit nuclear testing? Under what conditions, if any?

ANSWER

Nuclear testing is attendant with risks, of which menace to health is not the least. I believe there should be such definite limitations as in the judgment of our scientists would minimize these risks to a negligible margin and in the judgment of those responsible for the national defense would not unreasonably jeopardize our security. I believe that Adlai E. Stevenson rendered a large service to his country and to mankind in focusing attention to the danger in nuclear testing in his last campaign, even though what he said largely went unheeded.

QUESTION 18

Are you in favor of any of the proposed plans for world disarmament? Explain.

ANSWER

I always have been fearful that history would repeat itself and the present race of armaments would end as did that of France and Germany in the period prior to World War I. I hope and fervently pray that before it is too late world disarmament will be accomplished. If there is sincere desire on both sides, this should not be difficult. I am not sure that even such a simple plan as periodical observations by U–2 planes, operated by the United Nations or in any event internationally manned, might have possibilities. But I doubt if I, or any other Member of or candidate for Congress, would wish to take the responsibility of mapping the program for observation and inspection to assure complete compliance by all nations with the disarmament agreement. That is a task and a responsibility that must be left to others with greater and specified knowledge in the field and familiarity with all the factors, both personal and physical.

QUESTION 19

Explain your views on the present U.S. program of international assistance and development.

ANSWER

My approach to foreign policy in its economic relationship is: (1) On the world front, the foundation of permanent peace is in the worldwide elimination of poverty insofar as human effort under wise and cooperating democratic governments can accomplish that end; (2) on the domestic front, the opening of new foreign markets in countries now less developed for the products of our factories furnishes protection from the danger of wide domestic unemployment resulting from automation which increases output and decreases the number of jobs for workers.

QUESTION 20

Do you support congressional approval of U.S. participation in the Organization for Trade Cooperation, the international body to administer the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade?

ANSWER

Yes.

QUESTION 21

Would you support legislation to assist workers, communities, and industries that may be directly injured by reduced tariffs?

ANSWER

Yes. I realize that some workers, communities, and industries have been injured by that which has brought benefit to the Nation as a whole. During the period of readjustment, and in their present distress, it is only fair and in the national interest that they should be helped by reasonable subsidies and otherwise.

QUESTION 22

What is your attitude on continued U.S. participation in specialized agencies of the U.N., such as the International Labor Organization, the World Health Organization, UNESCO, and the Food and Agriculture Organization?

ANSWER

It would be the height of folly to terminate that participation. I think the entire membership of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, which is closest to the situation, would agree. It is an index to my thinking that in the closing weeks of the recent session I gave strong support to the International Development Agency as an instrumentality in which the resources of many participating nations could be pooled in the common effort to help the less developed nations.

QUESTION 23

To what extent should the Federal Government be active in the field of housing?

ANSWER

I came to Congress in 1949, when the housing problem was desperate, and in three Congresses served on the Banking and Currency Committee, which has jurisdiction in housing. I always have thought that it was the responsibility of the Congress to assure a decent roof over every American family. That objective has not been attained, but until it is the challenge will be on the Congress to meet its responsibility. As long as my constituents return me to Congress I shall work toward that end.

QUESTION 24

What important legislative proposals, other than those referred to above, would you like to see enacted by Congress?

ANSWER

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Africa I am keenly conscious of the importance to us and to the free world of the establishment of lasting bonds of friendship, of understanding, and of cooperation with the nations of that continent. By the end of this year there will be a total of 24 sovereign nations in Africa, all of which it is expected will have votes in the United Nations. If I am returned to Congress, it is my hope that I can make some contribution in this field of challenge.

I also am the ranking majority member of the Subcommittee on Latin America and a member of the Subcommittee on Foreign Economic Policy, and to these tasks I shall if reelected give my best effort, but with no cessation of my interest and activities in legislative approaches to the solution of our many domestic problems with which the experiences of the 10 years my constituents graciously have kept me in the Congress have given me familiarity.

Self-Employed Individuals' Retirement Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOSEPH E. KARTH
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. KARTH. Mr. Speaker, the House may soon again consider a worthy bill to help millions of self-employed persons—the small businessmen, doctors, dentists, lawyers, and other professionals—provide for themselves a sound, convenient, and orderly plan for retirement income.

Late in the last Congress this bill was approved by the House but unfortunately it died at adjournment before it could be considered in the other House and included with the other small business legislation which the 85th Congress passed because of able and vigorous Democratic leadership. This series of measures, incidentally, if properly financed and sympathetically administered could well initiate the renaissance of American small business.

H.R. 10 when enacted will round out the basic structure in this system to help men and women who are gifted with ideas and energy but short of other resources to invigorate and put meaning and substance in the idea of free enterprise.

Our economy is in dire trouble because the giant corporations since World War II have through consolidation, purchase, or a variety of other dubious methods crushed out of existence much of their competition. Our country is now paying the terrible price for the monopolization of our economy with inflation, underproduction, and unemployment. Negative weapons of antimonopoly legislation have failed—the promising, positive program of encouraging small business is an inspired effort to keep the American economy democratic and dynamic. I am proud of the leading part that the Democratic Party, both nationally and in my State of Minnesota, has had in reinvigorating small business. Some considerable tribute has to be paid too to those fearless members of the minority party who have voted with the Democrats despite the formidable disapproval of the Republican administration and the big business elements who guide the GOP.

This administration has fought tooth and nail against any really effective program for small business and when it has been forced to accept, reluctantly, Democratic-sponsored measures it has practiced cold, deliberate sabotage against small business as our distinguished and venerable colleague WRIGHT PATMAN has revealed.

The administration has now grudgingly accepted H.R. 10 after considerable revision in the Senate Finance Committee. It has conceded the justice of giving the millions of self-employed persons a fraction of the tax consideration received by high-salaried corporation executives, those exalted employees with their bonuses in stock, stock options, company-contributed pensions, and other fancy emoluments—not including that ultimate in tax evasion devices, expense-account living.

Republicans in the administration have at long last stopped wrapping the flag of patriotism around them and saying that to enact H.R. 10 would throw the President's budget into deficit and would be doing Karl Marx's work of destroying capitalism.

I hope that H.R. 10 will be enacted into law and thus spur the millions of America's self-employed persons to do better democracy's work of invigorating free enterprise by helping themselves provide for their golden years.

I urge the passage of H.R. 10.

A New Outlook on American Foreign Policy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MICHAEL A. FEIGHAN
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, Sunday, June 19, marked the 10th anniversary of the founding of the Ukrainian American Youth Association. To mark this occasion a mass rally was held in Cleveland.

In recent weeks the American people witnessed the role that youth can play in support of Communist objectives when led and stimulated by agents of Moscow. The riots of Japan which made it necessary to cancel President Eisenhower's visit to Tokyo were the actions of misguided youth. This lesson will long remain in the memory of the American people and should stand as a warning sign of the importance of youth in the domestic affairs of any nation.

It is therefore refreshing to find youth groups in the United States who are motivated by love of liberty and freedom and the desire to assist in removing the threat of imperial Russian communism from the face of the earth. The Ukrainian American Youth Association is such a group. The young men and women who comprise this organization know full well the meaning of communism, the tyranny of Russian imperialism, and the consolidation of these two evils as the source of the dangerous tensions which now grip the world. They take pride in the traditions which are the American way of life; they support, without reservation, the moral and political ideals which form the foundation of our American democracy. They are determined that these same moral and political ideals shall be the birthright of all nations and people because thereby they know the Ukrainian nation, the land of their forefathers, will be free and independent.

Under unanimous consent I insert my address given before the Ukrainian American Youth Association in the RECORD:

A NEW OUTLOOK ON AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. Ciszkewycz, officers, and members of the association and friends, I am happy to play a part in this 10th anniversary celebration of the Ukrainian American Youth Association. This is an important milestone in the affairs of your organization, and I am confident it marks a period of progress toward the high goals which you have set for your association and for its members. For all of you it is a time to look back at your beginnings, a time to examine your purposes in terms of the realities of this hour, and, a time to plan your future activities in the light of these realities. You are much better qualified than I to evaluate your accomplishments of these past 10 years, but I believe I have something to offer you in your examination of the realities of the present and some suggestions you might consider as you chart your future course.

This moment in history reflects deep and far reaching changes in the social and political order of the world. On all sides of us we see these changes taking place and we are alert to the great changes in the offing, changes which correspond to the aspirations of almost one-third of enslaved humanity for freedom, liberty, and national independence. We are entering the climatic period of the revolutionary era. This will be the period of crucial trial and test for the political and moral ideals of freemen. At issue is the question whether our free, open society; the democratic way of life; has the inner strength and external driving power to survive the organized onslaught of Russian imperial communism and to extend the frontiers of freedom until all nations and all men are self-governing. It will not be enough for us to hold back the wave of red totalitarianism, we cannot survive through defensive efforts alone. We are now faced with the immediate challenge to hold and strengthen the areas of freedom and to launch a political, economic, and diplomatic offensive against the enemy of all mankind.

The task before us is, therefore, twofold. We must have a defensive capability which openly warns the Russian imperialists that we have the military power to render them helpless and that we will not hesitate to use it if they instigate circumstances which would make such action inescapable. This defensive capability must be attained by us and our associated allies without 1 month, or 1 week, or 1 day of delay. Then we must launch an offensive against the Russians with the assurance that we have the power to back up the political, economic, and diplomatic actions which the reality of the present danger demand. Nor should we back off from any risks involved by taking such political, economic, or diplomatic actions. The responsibility for risks should be placed firmly on the backs of the Russian tyrants; if they choose to interfere with the orderly progress of all nations toward freedom and national independence, the responsibility will be theirs and not ours.

Looking to the urgent need for a program of positive actions in the cause of peace with justice, a scale of values must be set if the program is to measure up to the challenge. There are those who call for diplomacy as the major arm of this offensive. These are the people who advocate summit conference after summit conference and personal diplomacy such as the infamous visit of Czar Khrushchev to the United States. These same people are calling out for a new President who has had personal experience in dealing with the Russian Communists, a man who by experience would be qualified to drag our Nation into more summit conferences, a man whose experience would make him a senior operator in personal diplomacy with Khrushchev and company. The candidate they have in mind is, of course, Vice President NIXON, because he meets all these qualifications.

I have often wondered how Americans of Ukrainian origin felt after Vice President NIXON, during his visit to Moscow last year, referred to Ukraine as the Texas of Russia. This was the startling statement he made after stopping a young lady on the streets of Moscow and saying, "What a pretty Russian girl," and receiving her pointed reply, "I am no Russian, I am a Ukrainian." All of us know that George Kennan is the one who launched this false idea about the Ukraine being the Texas of Russia, but we could hardly expect Vice President NIXON to be so badly informed on this basic matter. Perhaps Mr. Kennan is one of Mr. NIXON'S many silent advisers.

Then there are those who are calling out for an economic offensive against the Russian Communists, including the proviso of trade with Red China, economic assistance to the so-called satellites and a variety of other strange formulas for victory. They are fundamentally economic determinists, people who see life as nothing more than the material advancement of the individual regardless of the system under which it is attained. I do not make any reference in this connection to the need for our country to have a sound, realistic program to assist the newly independent nations and the newly emerging nations in the economic development of their countries. The case for these nations is clear, we must help them by means of development loan funds, technical assistance, friendly advice and at all times extending the hand of genuine friendship. But this formula must not be extended to Communist regimes imposed upon the people of once free nations by force, intrigue, and violence. Nor should this program be extended to those who prefer to sit on the fence between the free world and the camp of the Russian Communists in the belief they can blackmail us into supporting their economic development schemes. This is no time for fence straddlers—either they get down off the fence or suffer the tragedy of Humpty Dumpty.

Then there are those who see the challenge of our times as political, the struggle of ideals and ideas, a conflict of two political systems which can not be reconciled one with another. Either one or the other must triumph, there can be only one winner and the loser is doomed to extinction from the face of the earth. I belong to this school of thought. Cold reason and long experience prohibits my being otherwise. Now, what are my thoughts on the scale of values in the program of positive actions against the Russian Communists?

To begin with, we, as a nation, must set our political goals and make them known to all the people of the world. These political goals must dominate all our thinking. All other aspects of the program must be subservient to them. That which does not support our international political objectives must be put aside. All actions in the field of economic assistance and diplomatic contact must be measured by this compelling rule. These things we have not done. These things we must do. This is the real task which will confront the new President and his administration come January 1961. This is the task which has confronted the present administration for the past 7 years, and their failure to measure up is demonstrated by the fact that summit conferences, personal diplomacy, exchange of visits between NIXON and Khrushchev have been the substance of their efforts. These efforts have failed. The evidence of the failure is to be found on all sides. We cannot afford 4 more years of such failures.

Now for more pleasant things. Let us look to the future, what are the elements of a political action program against the Russian Communists? I see these as the elements:

1. Self-determination for all nations and all people. This policy must be applied to all people on all the continents, on both sides of the Iron Curtain.

2. In applying the principle of self-determination we must get rid of the Russian concocted dilemma which exists in the Department of State, popularly known as nonpredetermination. This current policy is interpreted to mean that we must not speak about self-determination for the captive non-Russian nations of the Soviet Union because to do so would prejudge the situation. Consequently, State Department interpretations of Public Law 86–90 are in violation of the spirit of the law and play right into the hands of the Russian imperialists. We must resolve this Russian dilemma in the State Department and all those who support the confusion techniques of nonpredetermination.

3. We must support the national independence movements behind the Russian Iron Curtain. In so doing we must take into official account the fact that all the non-Russian nations of the Soviet Union have already exercised their right to self-determination during the period 1917–18 and elected for national independence, for the dismemberment of the Russian Empire. Having done this, all these nations had their independence robbed from them by the Russian Communists, just as happened to such nations as Poland, Hungary, and Rumania following World War II. Therefore, the question of self-determination for these nations is not pertinent. The question of restoring national independence to all these nations is the real issue.

4. We must stop doing business with the oppressors in the Russian Empire and start doing business with the oppressed in the Empire. By this I mean we should look to the majority peoples of the Soviet Union, the oppressed non-Russian peoples, for a solution to the tensions which grip the world. These people have the answer. The answer is the return of their liberties and their national independence. They are willing to fight and die for this objective. All they ask of us is our political support, the stimulation of world opinion to understand the truth of their present plight and the power of their aspirations. They will peacefully dismember the present-day Russian Empire—the real threat to all humanity—if we will but stand by them. This can be done; we can develop world opinion in support of the aspirations of these captive nations, and by so doing we can put the responsibility on the Russian masters to accept the will of the people or face the wrath of a thoroughly aroused free-world community. But we cannot do this while playing footsie with Khrushchev and company, by forcing our people against their conscience to be courteous and considerate of the bloody-handed Khrushchev during his unwelcome visit to the United States.

5. We can begin to use the United Nations as a platform for such a political campaign. As a first step, we should take action to cause the Russians to live up to the United Nations resolution on Hungary or be expelled from membership in that body. As a second step, we should declare the non-Russian nations of the Soviet Union and the so-called satellites of Central Europe as non-self-governing territories and demand that they be treated as such in the Council, the Assembly, and the work of the various organs of the United Nations. This will be sufficient as a starter. Such action will pry the lid off the fakery barrel which has been imposed upon the people of the world and open the door to a just and lasting peace.

This program I commend to your consideration as you plan your program for the immediate years ahead. It is a program worthy of your support, a program which I believe you could support with vigor and confidence. Having known the Russians and their Empire of fear from firsthand knowledge, many of you are in a position to speak with authority about the aspirations of the good people of Ukraine. By making these aspirations known to all the American people, you will strike a powerful blow for peace with justice, which is and will remain our goal.

Public Laws 409–449

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BARRATT O'HARA

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am extending my remarks to include a digest of Public Laws 409 to and including 449 of the 2d session of the 86th Congress as reported by me to my constituents in the Second District of Illinois:

PUBLIC LAW 409

S. 2482, exploring the oceans

Public Law 409 is important. In its projection into the future it may prove as vital to our survival and welfare as any legislation of the 86th Congress. It removes territorial limitations on the activities of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, which heretofore could conduct its scientific researches and explorations only in the United States, its territories and possessions. Now the whole world of outer space, the frozen wastes of the Arctics and the bottoms of the seas are opened to it. It is expected to play a leading part in the expanded research operations which experts in the scientific field declare to be essential in our race to overtake Russia.

National Academy of Science, the National Research Council and the Committee on Oceanography all are concerned over our Nation's deficiency in studies of the oceans. Research, explorations and studies in oceanography now getting started may open up amazing new sources of food and mineral supplies, a vast new world of riches at the bottom of the seas, as well as means of defense outmoding the missile, the battleship and the aerial bomber.

Whatever is ahead for us in the future no one knows, but most of us feel that our survival, militarily and economically, is for the present in the hands of our scientists. I hope you approve of my casting of your vote to unshackle the Geodetic Survey.

PUBLIC LAW 410

This is an old friend, a perennial in these reports. It is the annual permit for Canadian vessels to carry passengers and cargo to and from Hyder in Alaska and other American ports. Law is that only American vessels can do business between American ports. No American vessels, however, are available at Hyder. Each year Congress passes a 1-year exemption, vainly hoping that come another year Hyder will have American bottoms at her beck and call.

PUBLIC LAW 411

Public Law 411 extends to 2 years (instead of 1 year) the time in which claims can be filed against the United States for damages arising from noncombat activities of our Armed Forces in foreign countries. Naturally, accidents do happen in countries where we have troops stationed just as they happen at home, such as a distressed airplane inflicting damage on civilian persons or property, and the prompt and equitable settlement of resultant claims, when justified, makes for a friendly climate. Nothing is more helpful to us in winning hearts and minds than an image of Uncle Sam as always being fair and honorable.

PUBLIC LAW 412

H.R. 10233, District of Columbia appropriations

Public Law 412 appropriates $239,470,433 for fiscal 1961 for the District of Columbia, a decrease of $1,818,643 on the fiscal 1960 appropriations and a cut of $2,932,567 under the President's budget.

Washington was a city of 840,000 on July 1, 1959, with the same requirement for urban services and the same municipal problems as Chicago. Public Law 412 is comparable to the annual budget passed by the city council of Chicago. Municipal revenues come from much the same sources as in Chicago, and to these Uncle Sam adds a $25 million contribution for the reason that so much of the real estate here is occupied by the Federal Government.

Washington is the shrine of our country, to which millions come on patriotic pilgrimage, and we would wish it always to be kept clean and beautiful.

PUBLIC LAW 413

Public Law 413 repeals the 10-percent excise tax on aromatic cachous. If you don't know, as assuredly your Representative did not until this legislation reached the floor of the House, aromatic cachous are pellets, such as Sen Sen, that are chewed to sweeten the breath. Heretofore they were classified as toilet preparations (most of which are externally applied and subject to the excise tax). Usually they are sold at small candy stores, which do not handle toilet preparations, and the main reason for Public Law 413 was to relieve small candy merchants of the burden of collecting and keeping books on negligible amounts of tax.

PUBLIC LAW 414

If you were in the Navy after April 20, 1949, and prior to April 17, 1954, and temporarily stored your furniture under an erroneous order from the Department of the Navy, Public Law 414 is the aspirin for your headache. It relieves Navy personnel, present or retired, who in good faith acted under the erroneous order from reimbursing the Government.

PUBLIC LAW 415

S. 2220, Public Health Service

In 1798 Congress established the Marine Hospital Service, which in 162 years has grown into the Public Health Service of today, with a personnel of 25,350 persons, including 3,350 doctors, scientists, and nurses, who by direction of the Surgeon General and on an hour's notice are prepared to fly to a quarantine station in Burma, a disease ridden spot in Panama, or an isolated Indian reservation in the United States. They go wherever the Nation's health demands their presence.

Public Law 415 strengthens the commissioned corps by (1) providing improved retirement benefits, and (2) increasing the number of annual appointments to higher grades. This it is hoped will attract to and hold the required additional physicians, dentists, sanitary engineers, and other professional health personnel.

PUBLIC LAW 416

On original stock issues of corporations there is a documentary stamp tax of 10 cents per $100 of actual value while in the case of stock transfers the tax is 4 cents per $100 of actual value. Public Law 416 places the issuance tax of regulated investment companies on the 4-cent, instead of 10-cent basis, as such companies redeem stock put up for sale with issue of new securities.

PUBLIC LAW 417

There is no monument in Washington to James Madison, who was a large figure in the formulation and adoption of our Constitution, was Secretary of State under Jefferson, and the fourth President of the United States. Public Law 417 creates a Commission to plan a James Madison memorial. It is probable that the historic columns recently removed from the east front of the Capitol will be part of the memorial.

PUBLIC LAW 418

Public Law 418 exempts bicycle tires and tubes from the manufacturers' excise tax. Reason: tires and tubes on new imported bicycles are not subject to such tax, hence Public Law 418 puts domestic manufacturers on a fairer competitive basis. Note: of about 3 million bicycles sold annually in the United States, 27 percent are imported.

PUBLIC LAW 419

This corrects an inadvertent omission in the wheat legislation of 1958. It prevents the loss of wheat acreage history when the farm exceeds its acreage allotment but does not produce a marketing excess.

PUBLIC LAW 420

Public Law 420 authorizes participation by the United States in parliamentary conferences with Mexico similar to those held with the legislators of Canada.

PUBLIC LAW 421

Public Law 421 conveys to the Navajo Tribe of Indians 81 acres of land, valued at $810, at Crownpoint, N. Mex., as site for a community center.

PUBLIC LAW 422

Public Law 422 reduces the excise tax on roof gardens, cabarets and similar establishments from 20 to 10 percent. The 20 percent excise tax on cabarets (twice the tax on theaters) caused a drop of 56 percent in employment of musicians.

PUBLIC LAW 423

Farmlands are taken over by the Federal Government by eminent domain, or negotiation, just as city properties are acquired for urban renewal, highways and other public developments. Public Law 423 protects the former owners in their acreage allotments during the period between acquisition by the Government and actual commencement of work on the proposed development.

PUBLIC LAW 424

H.R. 10743, 2d Supplementary Appropriations Act

Public Law 424 carries $955,300,003 in supplemental appropriations for fiscal 1960. This is a cut of $53,098,261 under the President's budget. Supplemental appropriations really are deficiency appropriations to cover current expenses (to keep things running to the end of the fiscal year on June 30) in excess of those provided in the regular appropriations acts passed the previous year. They are occasioned by the inability accurately to calculate in advance and unexpected situations that arise.

Among the larger items: $675 million for Commodity Credit Corp. to restore capital impairment; $17,500,000 additional for slum clearance and urban renewal; $1,500,000 additional for administering the public debt, due to increased interest rates; $9,700,000 additional for student loan funds under the Defense Educational Act.

PUBLIC LAW 425

House Joint Resolution 621, NASA supplemental appropriations

NASA stands for National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the newest instrumentality of the Federal Government. It carries an additional $23 million for the Project Mercury, the tracking and data collection network, and the Atlantic Missile Range for advanced launch vehicles. NASA employs over 16,000 persons, including 260 scientists in supergrade positions.

PUBLIC LAW 426

This reduces the annual number of paydays for Senate employees from 24 to 23. Senate secretaries will be paid on the 5th and 20th of each month instead of the 1st and 15th. Reason: increased time necessary to process payrolls because of deductions for health benefits. There are 40 optional plans, hence no uniform standard for deductions.

PUBLIC LAW 427

Public Law 427 extends for 3 years the exemption from import tax of certain tanning extracts, including extracts of hemlock and eucalyptus. A blight virtually wiping out the chestnut trees in the Appalachian Range played havoc with the domestic supply.

PUBLIC LAW 428

Four nonprofit corporations serve their own mutual bank or building and loan association members substantially as the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation serves the banks of the Nation. Three, organized prior to 1951, enjoy the same income tax exemption as FDIC. Public Law 428 includes under the exemption the one corporation that was formed in 1957.

PUBLIC LAW 429

H.R. 529, Narcotics Manufacturers Act of 1960

Public Law 429 is major legislation in a field of vital need. It strengthens the public's fight against habit-forming drugs by establishing a system of licensing and control over the manufacture of narcotics. Since 1940 there has been a rapid development of synthetic substitutes, used as pain relievers but with the same habit-forming attributes as natural analgesic drugs in the morphine class. Public Law 429 covers the field, includes all classes of narcotics, both natural and synthetic.

PUBLIC LAW 430

This will interest members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. It grants tax exemption to the building and property occupied by VFW in the District of Columbia.

PUBLIC LAW 431

Public Law 431 regulates the finance charges for retail installment sales of automobiles in the District of Columbia. This is expected to put an end to the practice of some finance companies of charging from 30 to 50 percent of the selling price of the car.

PUBLIC LAW 432

Coconut oil is used chiefly in the manufacture of soap, palm-kernel oil in edible products such as crackers and candy, and palm oil in the tin-plate industry to prevent oxidation in plating baths. Public Law 432 continues for 3 years the suspension of the processing tax.

PUBLIC LAW 433

Public Law 433 permits the sale to the State of Nevada, at fair market value, of some 15,000 acres of the public domain 90 miles southeast of Las Vegas. The State will develop the land for agriculture, homesite, and recreational purposes. Its topography ranges from mountainous to plains bordering the Colorado River. It now is undeveloped and uninhabited.

PUBLIC LAW 434

H.R. 725, Wilson's Creek battlefield

Public Law 434 establishes the Wilson's Creek Battlefield National Park near Springfield in Missouri on the site of the battle on August 10, 1861, the second major engagement of the Civil War. The Confederates, victorious at Wilson's Creek, took over a large part of Missouri, but Union reinforcements finally forcing their retreat into Arkansas, the Confederates were decisively defeated in the battle of Pea Ridge in March of 1862. In 1956 Congress authorized the Pea Ridge National Military Park. There now will be two battlefield parks commemorating the campaign that saved Missouri for the Union. U.S. Highway 60 runs near the Wilson's Creek battlefield.

PUBLIC LAW 435

Public Law 435 excludes for income tax purposes copyright royalties from the definition of personal holding companies (1) if they are at least 50 percent of gross income, and (2) if the business expense deductions incident to promotion are 50 percent or more of gross income. This reflects the change in the music publishing business, which formerly existed by sale of sheet music, now derives its principal income from sale of royalties to radio, TV, phonograph records, night club performers and others.

PUBLIC LAW 436

This eliminates the requirement that trustees of insurance companies in the District of Columbia be residents of the District. Reason: in Washington as in Chicago there is a residential trend to the suburbs. Many of the suburbs here are in Maryland and Virginia, outside the District.

PUBLIC LAW 437

Public Law 437 excludes from income tax the pension annuities paid to nonresident aliens. These mainly are persons who worked years in United States embassies and other offices of our Foreign Service. The Republic of the Philippines was among the nations protesting the imposition of the tax. State Department, therefore, joined in recommending Public Law 437 for the sake of amity.

PUBLIC LAW 438

H.R. 1805, Antietam battlefield

More men were killed at Antietam, or Sharpsburg, on September 17, 1862, than in any other battle in the Civil War. The Union lost 15.4 percent of those engaged, the Confederates 26.1 percent. Historians seem agreed that a decisive victory for Lee at Antietam might have foreshadowed the final independence of the Confederacy. When he turned back into Virginia the chance of intervention by Great Britain vanished.

Antietam National Battlefield Site was established by act of Congress in 1890. Public Law 438 authorizes the acquisition of 600 additional acres to restore the area to substantially the same condition as in 1862 and to give the oncoming generations a full and unimpeded view of the entire battlefield.

PUBLIC LAW 439

Public Law 439 authorizes the sale at market value of two acres of land to the city of Tillamook in Oregon for a marine park. For many years the land has been occupied by squatters, without consent of or payment of rent to the Federal Government.

PUBLIC LAW 440

This provides a tax of 1 cent a pound on the sale of laminated tires instead of the 8 cents a pound tax on tires used on highway vehicles and 5 cents a pound on other tires. Reason is that laminated tires are made of scraprubber tires, and because of their very great weight are under a tax disadvantage (based on poundage) with the much lighter tires.

PUBLIC LAW 441

Public Law 441 extends for 2 years the suspension of duty on alumina, bauxite, and calcined bauxite, the domestic supply of which is limited.

PUBLIC LAW 442

This is of interest to Federal civilian employees. It repeals section 1505 of the Social Security Act to put them on exactly the same footing as workers in private industry in the matter of eligibility for unemployment compensation. Accrued annual leave will be treated under State law.

PUBLIC LAW 443

In 1927 Congress established the Stones River National Military Park on the site of the battle of Bragg's Confederate Army of the Tennessee with Rosecran's Union Army of the Cumberland. Public Law 443 changes the name to Stones River National Battlefield (much more descriptive, I would say) and adds six acres (cost of $1,500) to include a view of Stones River itself, the stream for which the battle is named.

PUBLIC LAW 444

S. 2434, historic Fort Laramie

Fort Laramie in Wyoming, built in 1834, and used as a fur-trading post, then as an Army post in the era of the Pony Express riders, the overland stages, the gold rush travelers, the campaigns against the Northern Plains Indians, probably is the best preserved of the trading posts and forts when adventure was in the air and exploration and settlement of the West were the trend.

Public Law 444 changes the name of Fort Laramie National Monument to Fort Laramie National Historic Site (which is more descriptive) and adds some 350 acres. A woman in Denver, who spent her girlhood in old Fort Laramie, is donating $100,000 to provide the historic old buildings with authentic furnishings of the times.

PUBLIC LAW 445

This gives to the Keweenaw Bay Indian Tribe in Michigan a third of an acre of land that the Federal Government purchased in 1935 for $1 for an Indian CCC camp. This assuredly is not major legislation, but it highlights the range of the work of the Congress. The President signed this $1 bill with the same pen he signed the authorization for $170 million for milk for schoolchildren, which follows.

PUBLIC LAW 446

H.R. 9331, school milk program

Public Law 446 authorizes additional CCC funds for the school milk program, a total of $85 million for fiscal 1960 and $95 million for fiscal 1961. Beginning in 1961 CCC will be reimbursed from the Treasury.

Some 83,300 schools and institutions, including summer camps, settlement houses, and child-care homes, are participating in the program in 1960. During the year they will use 2,380 million half pints of milk. Your vote has supported the school milk program since its inception.

PUBLIC LAW 447

Muckleshoot Indian tribe in the State of Washington showed little interest in its land consolidation program, and tribal council was hard put to scare up a quorum. So Public Law 447 authorizes the tribe to reconvey the land to individual tribal members.

PUBLIC LAW 448

This permits the continued delivery of water during 1960 and 1961 for irrigation in the Riverton project in Wyoming, pending execution of repayment contract.

PUBLIC LAW 449

H.R. 8601, Civil Rights Act of 1960

Public Law 449 is the legislation by which this session of the Congress will be remembered in history. It is not as strong as the measure introduced by your representative, as cosponsor with other members of the Senate and House, but it marks real progress in the long, hard fight to protect all American citizens in the exercise of their voting rights. The House passed the bill, 311 to 109. I cast your vote for the bill, against recommital (which was defeated 118 to 304), and against all crippling and weakening amendments.

The long and bitter filibuster in the Senate and the equally long and bitter fight with the Rules Committee in the House were highlights of the first half of the session.

I shall begin my next report with a digest, in simple language, of just what is in Public Law 449.

Address by Senator Wiley Over Wisconsin Radio Stations

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALEXANDER WILEY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the Congress—when it reconvenes in August—will have a sizable workload to handle—if it is to write a real record for the year.

Recently, I delivered an address over Wisconsin radio stations viewing some of the major legislation yet to be acted upon in the final days.

At this time, I ask unanimous consent to have the address printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCERPTS OF ADDRESS PREPARED FOR DELIVERY BY SENATOR ALEXANDER WILEY OVER WISCONSIN RADIO STATIONS

Friends, as you know, Congress has now recessed—the House of Representatives until August 15 and the Senate until August 8. Why? The legislative workload has piled higher and higher in recent weeks.

As a result, the majority leadership decided to adjourn—rather than attempt to push through all the pending legislation.

Question. Will this mean a long session in August, Senator WILEY?

Answer. Well, that depends upon many things. It will depend upon whether Congress is ready and willing to "roll up its sleeves" and get to work; or whether an effort will be made to "play politics" with the issues.

For myself—as prior to recess—I am prepared to stay as long as necessary to get the whole job done when Congress reconvenes in August.

Question. Senator WILEY, how large a workload remains in August?

Answer. A big one.

WILEY-SPONSORED LEGISLATION PENDING AFTER RECESS

Briefly, now, I'd like to review some of the proposals—which I have sponsored—that I believe are of major interest to Wisconsin. These include:

1. S. 910, to authorize the payment to local governments of sums in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain Federal real property.

2. S.J. Res. 208, to establish a commission to study and report on the impact of foreign trade on business and new industrial expansion in the United States. As a cosponsor of this measure, I feel we need to take a "hard look" at the effect—the adverse effect—which the increased flood of imports, for example, is having on our domestic industry.

3. Expansion of agricultural research through enactment of S. 690 now in conference. The purpose of this legislation would be to expand research of utilization of agricultural products for commercial purposes.

Incidentally, still pending also is my bill for establishing a dairy research laboratory—with similar objectives—at Madison, Wis.

Question. What are other measures of particular interest to Wisconsin?

Answer. Although there are many more, a number of additional areas include:

4. S. 2917, to provide an increase in price supports for dairy products to provide a brighter outlook for the dairy farmer in America. Currently, the measure is pending before the Senate.

5. S. 894, to establish an ice-age national park, encompassing the glacially formed moraines in Wisconsin. Unfortunately, the long-delayed studies by the Department of Interior had held up action on this legislation.

6. S.J. Res. 186, to establish a National Voters Day. Prior to the recess, this resolution—for encouraging greater voter participation in elections—passed the Senate. Currently, it is pending before the Judiciary Committee in the House of Representatives.

7. S. Con. Res. 96, to provide for an updated Internal Security Manual—a useful guidebook to strengthen the internal security of the country. This measure has also passed the Senate and is pending before the Administration Committee in the House of Representatives.

8. Legislation to extend the termination date for the Menominee Indian Tribe, as well as to provide exemptions from Federal documentary stamp tax on transfer of property from Federal control to the tribe. To accommodate the change in status, the Wisconsin State Legislature has created a 72d county. Unless additional time is provided to put the tribal affairs in order, serious economic and social problems may arise for the Menominee Indians. Unless these are resolved, it will handicap their ability to integrate properly into the political and economic life of Wisconsin.

OTHER MAJOR LEGISLATION PENDING BEFORE CONGRESS

Question. Now, Senator WILEY, what are some of the other major issues which would be a matter of priority—or major controversy—when Congress reconvenes?

Answer. When the "closing gong" of the recess came, the unfinished business included the following:

Consideration of the proposals for increasing the minimum wage and extending it to more workers.

Proposals for providing medical and hospital care for the aging citizen.

What to do about Federal aid to schools.

Expanding the housing program.

Carrying forward the mutual security program.

Public works bill—including funds for flood control and port and harbor development and additional planning, maintenance, and surveys for projects including: Eau Galle River, Menominee Harbor, Milwaukee Harbor, Sheboygan Harbor, Cornucopia Harbor, Duluth-Superior, Pecatonica.

A great many of these major programs are highly controversial. Consequently, they could touch off real battles after Congress reconvenes in August.

UPCOMING NATIONAL CONVENTIONS

Question. What about the upcoming Democratic and Republican Conventions, Senator WILEY?

Answer. As we are aware, the conventions are scheduled as follows:

The Democratic meeting in Los Angeles on July 11.

The Republican meeting in Chicago on July 25.

The nominations of candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency—as well as adoption of platforms—by the respective parties, of course, is a significant—and essential—step in our two-party system toward filling the highest public offices in our country.

Because of the breakup of the normally continuing sessions of Congress, however, we must be careful not to allow politicking to unduly influence the outcome of action on the pending legislation.

Politics—in its best sense—can, and does, effectively serve the interests of our people—locally, statewide, and nationally.

At the same time, irresponsible efforts to make political football out of issues for "personal or party" gains can work against the public interest.

Consequently, we must—in these challenging times—encourage adherence to the highest standards of conduct by candidates and parties in electioneering.

ESTABLISHMENT OF FUTURE GOALS BY STATES AND COMMUNITIES

Question. Senator WILEY, today—inside and outside of politics—we are hearing, and reading a great deal about "goal setting" for our country.

Answer. Yes.

Currently, the Nation and its leaders are attempting to establish—and "shoot for" goals to meet the Nation's future needs for economic progress and security.

Personally, I think this is a good idea. Highlighting this effort has been the appointment of a National Goals Commission by President Eisenhower. Among its purposes are the establishment of objectives and assuring a good "forward pace" by channeling human and natural resources into programs that best serve the interests of the country.

To obtain maximum progress, however, I believe we need a coordinated effort also to assure a top-to-bottom voluntary mobilization of the Nation's people and resources.

Question. How can this be accomplished, Senator? What goals shall we be shooting for?

Answer. We recognize, of course, that—if this is to be done—each State and community can helpfully contribute by establishing such goals in relation to its potential. This involves such steps as:

Surveying manpower, natural, financial, commercial, and other resources.

Reviewing needs for services, products, transportation, housing, education and other needs, together with recommendations for fulfilling such needs.

Following a realistic survey of a community or State's potential, then the task is to establish—and attempt to reach—high-achievement goals within the range of their human and natural resources.

To accomplish such a program, however, certain additional requirements need to be fulfilled. These include:

1. A thorough analysis of its potential by a State or community—and then realistic efforts to "set its sights" on promising objectives in such fields as agriculture; housing; education; social progress; trade; expansion of industrial and business activity to create more jobs; and other purposes.

2. Encourage citizens to support—and invest in—local and State projects, to further provide much-needed—and sometimes scarce—finances for projects.

3. Assure local and State tax systems favorable to industrial and business development.

4. Look for new markets for local—or State—produced products or services to provide greater business and industrial activities—which means more jobs—and economic health.

5. Improve our "human resources" development program.

6. Create a spirit of cooperation between management and labor to minimize costly strife that jeopardizes progress.

7. Improve and expand air, rail, road and water transportation systems to better meet present and future needs of the economy and the people.

8. Carry on unexplored opportunities for development of mineral, timber or other natural resources; expansion of tourism; participation in trade; locating new markets for communities' products or services; and other opportunities.

Each State and each community can, of course, best determine its requirements, potentials and objectives, and set up the machinery for mobilizing its human and natural resources to attain its goals. If such a grassroots program can be effectively established, I believe it will go a long way toward successfully paving the way for an ever-brighter future for the State and the Nation.

The overall objective, of course, is to stimulate a greater, communitywide effort to make each hometown or community the "best place" to live in America.

CONCLUSION

This, then, is a brief, between session review of the legislative and other tasks that remain ahead of us.

As in the past, I shall look forward to hearing from you folks, from time to time, as issues of public interest arise in the days ahead.

Now, again, this is your senior Senator, ALEX WILEY, saying: Thanks for taking time out of your busy days to "tune in" to this program.

Bastille Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ABRAHAM J. MULTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, on July 14, 171 years ago in Paris, an outraged citizenry stormed the citadel called the Bastille, the dread prison that for them represented the denial of basic human rights by the regime under which they lived.

The anniversary of that occasion has since been celebrated by the French nation as the symbol of its dedication to the principles of liberty, justice, and equality for all.

It is most fitting for us to join the people of France in recognition of this anniversary. And it is fitting that the key to the bastille should today hang in Mount Vernon. For the charter of our liberties, the Declaration of Independence, owes much of its essence to France. The enlightened French philosophers of the 18th century largely fathered the concept of society as one in which individuals have rights and do not exist merely as objects for the whims of arbitrary rulers. The American Revolution was the earliest concrete expression of that concept. And from it the French people perhaps drew renewed inspiration for their struggle to establish a democratic society. Much of the history of the world since that time has been the history of peoples throughout the world inspired by the ideals of the French and American revolutions and struggling to realize them.

Today when new and more insidious forms of tyranny than monarchic despotism threaten to overwhelm the world, it is more than ever important to pay tribute to a people whose devotion to individual liberties has long been paramount, and to join with them in rededicating ourselves to renewed efforts to maintain them.

Hon. Joseph C. O'Mahoney, of Wyoming

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS C. HENNINGS, JR.

OF MISSOURI

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a statement by me on the retirement from the Senate of the Honorable JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, of Wyoming.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HENNINGS ON THE RETIREMENT OF HON. JOSEPH O'MAHONEY, OF WYOMING

I wish to join the great number of friends of Senator O'MAHONEY in expressing sentiments of regret that he is leaving the Senate. As one of its ablest Members, his rugged individualism, initiative, and perseverance have made him outstanding. Outspoken in his dedication to the Constitution, in his alinement with proponents of economic freedom, and devotion to the development of the West, he is most highly respected by his fellow Senators. His eloquence and great independence in all fields from antitrust to military affairs, from matters affecting the Department of Interior to atomic energy have added to his prestige.

JOE O'MAHONEY is a leader, advocate, and originator. He is a realist.

The distinguished Senator from Wyoming made an indelible impression on me in early 1937 when I, as a Member of the House, would come to the Senate to listen to the debate on the Supreme Court "packing" plan. He was a bulwark of strength and principle in the great fight to maintain our Court as an independent judicial body.

It is through our common interest in the field of constitutional law and antitrust legislation that I have gotten to know Mr. O'MAHONEY very well. It has been a privilege to be with him on the Judiciary Committee. During our close association on that committee, I have observed his keen insight into constitutional problems, his dauntless courage and determination to prevent any threat to constitutional rights, and his courage of conviction. His opposition to the drafting of labor in World War II, and assertion of the constitutional principles at stake in the Strauss nomination are indications of his deep conviction and courageous vigor in defense of the Constitution.

Guided by patriotism and welfare of the country, he has done all in his power to protect the American system. He believes in fair play and competition. He has been forceful in attacking monopolies and concentrations of economic power. He has been outspoken against the power of monopoly in controlling the economic lives of working people, white-collar people, and small business people. He has been an ardent supporter of antitrust legislation.

He has been industrious in his endeavors to help the West. He has been successful in his battle for the development of the West's natural resources. In conservation he has worked to aid mining, water development, and land reclamation.

Although he comes from a State with a small population, through his talent, integrity, and keen intelligence, his reputation has spread beyond the boundaries of his State, beyond the boundaries of the West, and over the entire country. His grasp of national problems and relentless efforts to solve them have made America a stronger and better place to live.

I regret to see him leave the Senate. I realize, though, that he is taking the right road. He knows in his own heart what is best or he would not have made the decision. As a great student of history, he himself will now go down in history as one of the outstanding Senators of our time. I wish for him and for his loved ones many more years of good health, great happiness, and success.

Public Opinion Poll, 10th District of North Carolina

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES RAPER JONAS

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Speaker, earlier in the year I distributed 45,000 questionnaires among the residents of my district. Approximately three-fifths were sent to rural boxholders because many people in the district work in town but receive their mail on rural routes, and the remainder went to residents of the towns and cities in the district.

The response to this questionnaire was gratifying—a 10-percent return—and came from every urban and rural community in the district—from farmers, laborers, executives, storekeepers, clerks, teachers, housewives, and professional men and women.

Perhaps half of those who returned the questionnaires extended their yes or no answers by adding explanatory comments. Many others took the trouble to elaborate at length on their answers and some discussed issues not even listed on the questionnaire.

I have personally read all of these supplementary comments and appreciate the willingness of so many of my constituents to share their views with me on important issues. Although the final responsibility for votes I cast in Congress must necessarily be my own, and is always based upon a careful consideration of all the pro and con arguments on a given bill, I believe the people of the district should have an opportunity to express their views and to know that they will receive careful consideration by me. The use of such a questionnaire is the easiest way I know to give them that opportunity and I am pleased that so many took advantage of it.

Following are the questions with answers indicated on a percentage basis:

[In percent]

	Yes	No	No opinion
(1) In the recent steel strike, almost the entire steelmaking capacity of this country was closed down. In view of the impact of such a strike on our national security and economy:
(a) Do you believe the Federal Government should be given more power to arbitrate and enforce agreements between labor and management in such cases?	67	26	7
(b) Do you favor a legal ban on industrywide bargaining?	56	29	15
(c) Do you believe unions that represent all workers in an industry should be made subject to the antitrust laws?	83	8	9
(d) Do you favor compulsory arbitration of labor-management disputes when an entire industry is affected?	72	18	10
(2) The present Federal minimum wage is $1 per hour. The North Carolina minimum wage is 75 cents per hour: (a) Do you favor increasing the Federal minimum wage above $1 per hour?	34	60	6
(3) The Forand bill provides hospital, surgical and nursing home care for social security retirees, surviving widows and children. Persons presently retired will be eligible without contribution. The program will be financed by an increase in social security taxes on employers, employees, and the self-employed: (a) Do you favor the Forand bill?	35	59	6
(4) Under present law, if a person drawing social security earns in excess of $1,200 annually he is penalized by having his social security payments reduced:
(a) Do you favor increasing this limitation on earnings?	69	24	7
(b) Do you favor eliminating the limitation altogether?	36	52	12
(5) The 1961 Federal budget provides $565,000,000 for various aid to education programs. Several proposals are pending in Congress to increase substantially this Federal support of education. The bills range in cost from $300,000,000 to $1,100,000,000 per year:
(a) Do you favor Federal aid to education in addition to that already being provided?	32	61	7
(b) If so, would you restrict the use of the funds to school construction or would you include teachers' salaries?	21	13	66
(c) Would you prefer a plan providing that the Federal Government should return to each State a small percentage of the income taxes collected from individuals within that State for use by the State in support of public education?	66	23	11
(6) Legislation is pending to grant a pension of $100 a month to every World War I veteran:
(a) Do you favor this proposal?	18	79	3
(b) If your answer was "No," would you favor such pensions if they are restricted to veterans with small incomes?	40	40	20
(7) A bill is pending in Congress to inaugurate a GI educational benefits program for peacetime veterans. This bill is estimated to cost $600,000,000 a year. Do you favor such a bill?	19	75	6

	Increase	Decrease	No opinion
(8) Do you favor increasing or decreasing spending in the following areas:
(a) Defense	41	37	22
(b) Farm subsidies	11	79	10
(c) Mutual security	27	47	26
(d) Public works, such as dredging harbors, building dams, flood control, reclamation, etc	39	45	16
(e) Public housing, urban renewal, slum clearance, etc	36	52	12
(f) Federal grants to States and local communities for public works such as sewage disposal works	27	60	13

	Yes	No	No opinion
(9) If you favor increased spending, where would you propose getting the money?
(a) Increasing existing taxes?	16	46	38
(b) Deficit financing (borrowing)?	5	42	53
(c) New taxes, such as a manufacturers' sales tax?	27	25	48
(10) Interest on the national debt is now $9,600,000,000 a year. It takes 11 cents out of every tax dollar just to pay this interest bill. If we go on as we have been, in just about 30 years we will have paid out, in interest alone, an amount equal to the national debt ($290,000,000,000) but will still owe every cent of the principal. In an effort to force the Federal Government to begin reducing the national debt, I have introduced a bill providing that at least 1 percent shall be paid on it each year. Do you favor this proposal?	93	3	4
(11) Do you favor taxing cooperatives on the same basis as private enterprises?	83	9	8
(12) Do you favor a national fair trade law?	29	55	16
(13) Do you agree with the administration that disarmament must be accompanied by a foolproof inspection system?	89	5	6
(14) Do you believe that the exchange of visits by heads of state is in the interest of world peace?	78	12	10
(15) Do you favor continuing our current missile and space programs on about the present level or do you favor a "crash" program to speed them up regardless of the additional cost?
(a) Continue on present level?	70	9	21
(b) Starting a "crash" program?	17	36	47

Medical Care for the Aged

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS C. RABAUT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, as we are all aware the question of medical care for the aged citizens of our country has become one of the most controversial issues of the day. And rightly so. The position in which our elder citizens find themselves when the necessity arises to meet the cost of any sizable medical expenses is truly tragic. In the vast majority of cases they simply cannot meet such expenses. What is more, a representative cross-sampling of this above-65 group has shown that not only can these people not meet the cost but would either have to borrow the money or flatly state that they do not know where they would get it. This is a sorry situation, indeed, for our retired workers to find themselves facing. There are roughly 15 million retired people in this country. Of this 15 million just about 11 million are now drawing social security pensions. Only about 1 million of these are also covered by private pension plans. With respect to those on social security, it should be noted that the maximum Federal benefit for a retired couple is $180 per month; but the average amount actually received is close to $114. It is, of course, obvious that these figures leave no margin for heavy medical expenses, particularly when you consider that medical expenses have zoomed up higher and faster than any other single item in our economy.

The consequence of this situation is that it creates a singularly peculiar paradox within the traditional American system of employment and retirement. The traditional goal and the fond dream of the American workingman and his family has always been eventual retirement to a life of ease and complete freedom. However—and here is the paradox—this traditional goal is becoming more and more difficult—even impossible—of attainment for the retired and retiring members of our society because their continuing reliance on a set, stabilized income in the form of pensions and so forth has failed to be given due consideration as the price of living has continued to spiral. Thus these people who are required to get along on the same amount of money each month have seen their ability to do so decline progressively as the purchasing power of the few dollars they receive has grown less and less. This general principle, while it is true of all living necessities such as food and rent, is particularly and acutely true with respect to medical expenses incurred by these older citizens. For if their fixed incomes are increasingly inadequate to buy the daily needed loaf of bread, how then are they to meet unforeseen medical expenses of greatly larger proportions? The answer is simple—they cannot.

But it is not enough to know this answer. It remains to seek the remedy. For what are we to do, refuse these people needed medical care because they cannot afford it? Certainly not. Here, then, is the central point on which everyone concerned is in agreement; that the need exists and that something must be done about it. Even the budget-minded administration recognizes this point. But here, also, is where the general agreement ends and the controversy begins. For here is where the question arises of how to approach the problem; of how to go about the solution.

By this time there have developed several differing approaches, all distinct in one respect or other from the original and well-known Forand bill. I do not intend to go into a detailed discussion or comparison of the different bills involved. There are now six different major bills dealing with the question of providing health care for our aged. The main differences between them lie in the manner of financing the program and in the categories of coverage to be provided. The basic alternative methods of paying for this medical care are first, through an extension of the present Social Security System; second, out of the general revenue funds; third, through State and Federal Government matching funds; fourth, through subscription fees to be paid by the recipients; or fifth, through some combination of these methods. For my part, I have supported the Forand bill from the very beginning and I am in favor of paying for the needed medical care through the present Social Security System. This would be done by increasing the present social security taxes one-fourth of 1 percent. This would mean that an individual would pay into the social security fund a maximum of $12 per year more than he is paying now. This program would amount to a prepaid health care package on which today's workers can fall back when they retire. Figures from the Census Bureau show that 60 percent of retired people—60 percent of people over 65 years of age do not have as much as $1,000 income per year. This means about $20 a week for food, clothing, shelter and everything else people need to live. How are they to pay for needed medical care?

The elderly people of this country are the people who need medical care the most. More than any other segment of our population these people need this care—which, in a tragically large number of cases, they cannot afford. This older group of persons gets sick more often and stays sick longer than any other population group. Further, many of them are in need of continuing care. That is they require nursing home care or medical attention on a regular basis—be it weekly, biweekly, or monthly—or they are required to take medicines regularly, often daily and often comprising not one but several different medicines—all of which are expensive these days. All of these things are necessary and they are also considerably beyond the means of most of our senior citizens. This situation has been called a "pressing social problem." I prefer to call it a "crying human need" and I pledge that I shall fight to see that something is done about it.

Public Laws 553 to and Including 591

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. BARRATT O'HARA

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am extending my remarks to include Public Laws 553 to and including 591, as reported by me to my constituents in the Second District of Illinois. My reports have covered all legislation enacted at the 2d session of the 86th Congress with the exception of a few awaiting the President's signature. I hope that this digest of the laws of the second session will prove of interest to my colleagues, and others, at least as a source of convenient reference and reminder. I do not know of the availability to the general public elsewhere of a digest of all the laws of the session.

The digest follows:

PUBLIC LAW 553

This is of no interest to the second district, where we grow no cotton. But it is of interest in the Cotton Belt. Sometimes the Government makes mistakes in measurement of acreage in regard to allotments. Public Law 553 places the cost of remeasurement in cotton lands on the same basis as that in lands producing wheat and other farm products.

PUBLIC LAW 554

Public Law 554 changes the title of the second in command of the Coast and Geodetic Survey from "Assistant Director" to "Deputy Director." I do not believe much in titles, but if a public servant thinks he can do a better job with more dignity in appellation it is all right with me. Whatever you call him, anyone paid by the taxpayers to do a public job is a public servant.

PUBLIC LAW 555

St. Lawrence Seaway has greatly complicated vessels safety problems on the Great Lakes. In 1959 there were 1,033 foreign commercial vessels making round voyages in the lakes in addition to the 2,206 United States and Canadian vessels regularly in the Great Lakes trade. Public Law 555 requires that vessels entering the five lakes through the Seaway shall during passage in the lakes have pilots, experienced with the area, and drawn from a United States-Canadian pool. I, with other members of the Illinois delegation, objected to the bill as first drawn, withdrew our objections later when the bill was amended to the satisfaction of the Chicago shipping interests and pilots.

PUBLIC LAW 556

Public Law 556 authorizes a payment to the Government of Israel of $16,616 for two of its nationals injured in an automobile accident in Paris and of $3,340 to the Government of France for one of its nationals injured in another automobile accident in Paris. Reason: inquiry showed that in each instance the driver of an American Embassy car, on official business, was to blame.

PUBLIC LAW 557

Public Law 557 (1) makes permanent the suspension of import duties on coarse wools imported under bond for use in the manufacture of rugs and carpets, and (2) adds papermakers' felts to the list of wool products covered. Purpose is to place American carpet manufacturers on even footing with foreign competitors.

PUBLIC LAW 558

Officers in the naval service, please take note. Public Law 558 corrects the bull the Navy admittedly made in urging the definition of "total commissioned service" in the hump law. The Navy intended solely to protect Marine Corps majors from mandatory retirement because by promotions over the heads of their superiors in rank they had picked up too much total commissioned service time. But it turned out the hump definition would force the retirement unintentionally and prematurely of 7 worthy but passed over lieutenant commanders, 154 commanders, and 31 lieutenant colonels. Congress rights matters by restoring the old definition of total commissioned service.

PUBLIC LAW 559

H.R. 8186, Reserve commissioned officers

Public Law 559 amends the Reserve Officer Personnel Act of 1954 to equalize promotion opportunity in the various branches of the Armed Forces. The law (19 printed pages) affects and is of interest to all Reserve officers, a fact pointed up when the document room informed me that it was completely out of House Report No. 681 (120 pp.) and the Armed Services Committee loaned me its copy on my solemn promise to return it within 24 hours. Note to Reserve nurses: You now can aspire to becoming a full colonel. Former top rank for Reserve nurse or Army medical specialist was lieutenant colonel.

PUBLIC LAW 560

Public Law 560 extends to June 30, 1962, the President's authority to allocate and fix priorities for strategic materials, grant loans and subsidies under the Defense Production Act to expand industrial capacity. We were told the control powers are necessary to maintain production schedules on missiles and other defense contracts.

PUBLIC LAW 561

H.R. 10569, Treasury and Post Office appropriations

Public Law 561 carries $4,007,500,000 in appropriations for fiscal 1961 for the Post Office Department ($522.5 million under the budget), $832,849,000 for the Treasury Department, and $1,565,000 for the U.S. Tax Court.

Not included in the above amount for the Treasury is $9.6 billion permanent and indefinite appropriations for debt service, tax refunds and payment to the unemployed trust fund. Most of this goes to paying interest on the national debt, a reminder of the future price we pay when we spend borrowed money.

PUBLIC LAW 562

This continues until August 7, 1962, the suspension of duty on copying lathes used in making shoe lasts. Purpose is to make available to American manufacturers specialized lathes obtainable only from foreign sources. It also extends suspension of duty on casein.

PUBLIC LAW 563

Public Law 563 extends for 2 years the exemption from duty on personal and household effects brought into the United States by persons returning from governmental service abroad.

PUBLIC LAW 564

H.R. 12381, Excise taxes and debt limit

Public Law 564 (1) provides for a temporary limit of $293 billion on the national debt for 1 year to June 30, 1961, (2) extends to July 1, 1961, the 52 percent corporate income tax rate, and (3) continues another year the excise taxes on alcoholic beverages, cigarettes, automobiles and parts, transportation of persons, and telephone calls.

All of this was packaged in one bill, which the Rules Committee reported out under a closed rule. A closed rule means that you take it all as is, or leave it, since no amendments are in order. Your representative, opposed to an excise tax on local telephone calls, voted against the adoption of the closed rule. The closed rule, however, was adopted, 204 to 181, and the bill passed, 223 to 174. Your vote was aye. It could not have been otherwise with a proper sense of fiscal responsibility. I doubt if any Member of the House would have voted nay if his were the decisive vote.

PUBLIC LAW 565

H.R. 11001, International Development Association

Public Law 565 authorizes the United States to participate with 17 larger and 51 smaller nations in the International Development Association to help provide assistance to undeveloped countries. IDA, affiliated with the World Bank, is an international cooperative venture, furnishing financing on flexible terms but on the same sound banking principles as those of the World Bank. It will have resources of $1 billion, of which the United States will contribute about a third. The House passed the bill, 249 to 158. Your vote was aye. I believe the burden and responsibility of world rebuilding should be shared by all free nations, each contributing in increasing proportion as its own economy improves. That makes common sense. You will find my remarks on pages 14774 and 14788 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 28, 1960.

PUBLIC LAW 566

United States produces less than half the long staple cotton it consumes. Public Law 566 prevents 50 percent reduction in acreage by establishing the same marketing quota for the 1961 crop as for the 1960 crop.

PUBLIC LAW 567

This extends for 2 years, to June 30, 1962, the authority of the Federal Reserve Board to buy securities directly from the Treasury.

PUBLIC LAW 568

H.R. 9883, Federal employees pay raise

Public Law 568 is part of the history of the 86th Congress. It raises by 8.4 percent pay of postal workers, 7.5 percent pay of classified and other Federal employees. Mainly it affects the humble Federal workers, most of whom had a hard time making both ends meet in a period of rising living costs.

But it had to go the hard way to clear the hurdles. A discharge petition, signed by 219 Members, brought it from the Rules Committee, where it was bottled up. Your Representative was the fifth Member to sign the petition, held the floor for an hour on the deadline day and until the required 219th signature (that of Congressman O'KONSKI, of Wisconsin) was affixed to the petition. (Discharge petitions can be signed only when the House is in session.)

The bill passed the House, 378 to 40, the Senate, 62 to 17. Then came the President's veto. It required a two-thirds vote in both bodies to pass over the veto. The House vote came first, 345 to 69. Later in the day came the Senate vote, 74 to 24.

Public Law 568 had cleared all the hurdles.

PUBLIC LAW 569

July 1 was the beginning of fiscal year 1961. As some of the 1961 apropriations had not been voted, Public Law 569 provided temporary appropriations on the basis of fiscal 1960, pending later enactments. It is the usual resolution on such occasions. Otherwise the Federal departments affected would have to shut down at midnight of June 30.

PUBLIC LAW 570

Public Law 570 directs the transfer by the Postmaster General and General Services of needed books and personal property to State and county agencies engaged in cooperative agricultural extension work.

PUBLIC LAW 571

Impoverished Americans becoming insane while in foreign countries are cared for and their return to the United States arranged. Public Law 571 provides for their hospitalization after their arrival in America and while en route to the State of residence.

PUBLIC LAW 572

Demand for warm-water fish to stock ponds, lakes, dams and wildlife refuges in the Southeast is growing. Public Law 572 authorizes a fish hatchery in Orangeburg County in South Carolina.

PUBLIC LAW 573

This gives owners of five lots on the Indian River in Florida another year to perfect their claims jeopardized by a surveyor's error. The error all added up to more work for the Congress.

PUBLIC LAW 574

When a country school at Stella, Mo., burned down, the Army met the emergency with the loan of a former officers' quarters at Fort Crowder, unneeded and no longer in use. Public Law 574 permits its continued use without payment of rent. Just another proof that Uncle Sam is the kind of person we like.

PUBLIC LAW 575

Public Law 575 helps out unsubsidized operators of American vessels in the coastwise and foreign tramp trade. It permits them to trade in their old vessels as part payment for benefit ships from the Government's reserve fleet.

PUBLIC LAW 576

United States owns 2.6 million acres in Texas for which it paid $151 million. Public Law 576 would permit exploration for and development of oil and gas deposits.

PUBLIC LAW 577

Public Law 577 makes mortgage insurance on fishing vessels more effective, puts it on the same footing as that on ship construction.

PUBLIC LAW 578

This provides housing for essential civilian employees of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

PUBLIC LAW 579

Washington is the headquarters of many trade and other associations. Public Law 579 amends the District of Columbia Life Insurance Act to permit writing of group life insurance to cover their employees.

PUBLIC LAW 580

Castillo de San Marcos, now a national monument in Florida, was built by the Spanish in 1672, was the outpost of the Spanish Caribbean empire in defense against the English and French, in the 1800's served as a military prison. It was visited by over 450,000 tourists in 1959. Public Law 580 authorizes addition to the monument of land containing part of the historic moat still in evidence.

PUBLIC LAW 581

This gives back to the Cheyenne River Sioux Indian tribe in South Dakota, 16 acres of land for which the Government has no further use.

PUBLIC LAW 582

Here is good news for service personnel who were awarded decorations, such as the Distinguished Service Cross or medal, and never received them, due to inadvertence or loss of the recommendations. Public Law 582 in such cases permits their delivery despite the time limitation has run.

PUBLIC LAW 583

Vessels of foreign construction are not permitted to operate in the coastwise trade of the United States. Public Law 583 closes a loophole by requiring that when American vessels in the trade are rebuilt the work all must be done in the United States.

PUBLIC LAW 584

Public Law 584 relates only to the District of Columbia. It adopts for the District the uniform law of many States for the transfer of securities to and by fiduciaries.

PUBLIC LAW 585

Public Law 585 gives return rights to career civilian employees of the Defense Department assigned to oversea posts. On return they will get their old jobs back with no reduction in seniority, status or tenure Purpose is to encourage rotation between positions overseas and positions at home.

PUBLIC LAW 586

Enlisted men on 85 vessels of the Coast Guard, small patrol boats, were overpaid from January of 1955 to April of 1956, according to the belated finding of the Comptroller General. Congress properly saved the enlisted men from digging up the money erroneously paid them 5 years ago. Public Law 586 validates the payments as made.

PUBLIC LAW 587

Public Law 587 broadens the coverage of existing law relative to payment of travel and transportation costs to attract needed scientists and engineers to the Federal service.

PUBLIC LAW 588

Most cotton grown in the United States is classed under the Smith-Doxey Act. Public Law 588 prohibits improper practices in cotton sampling and provides penalties.

PUBLIC LAW 589

Public Law 589 authorizes judge advocates, adjutants, and commanding officers of the Armed Forces in foreign service to act as notaries and administer oaths to civilian employees and dependents as well as to those in the services. This protects absentee ballots from the danger of being thrown out.

PUBLIC LAW 590

Public Law 590 allows reimbursement for ferry fares, bridge, road, and tunnel tolls (in addition to 5 cents a mile travel allowance) to VA beneficiaries and their attendants. Common sense. I never heard of a nickel toll.

PUBLIC LAW 591

Small business especially is interested in having products tested to determine whether they meet Government requirements. Public Law 591 authorizes the General Services Administration to accept funds for such testing.

Nixon Over Kennedy for Presidency Says WIU Pollster

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, according to the word from Western Illinois University where Dr. Victor Hicken, professor of Illinois and American history, has conducted a poll, NIXON will be the Republican nominee and KENNEDY will be the Democratic nominee—and NIXON will be elected in November.

About 71 percent of the total sample picked NIXON to win the November election—with about 59 percent saying he is most qualified. JOHNSON was scarcely in the running.

Professor Hicken said:

In 1954 I conducted a similar poll and hit the outcome of the race between Meek and DOUGLAS for Senator on the nose. By using a WIU sample—which draws students from the solid Democrat and the solid Republican section of the State—I have always gotten extremely accurate results with polls. There's a good economic representation here too.

During the past year WIU drew students from 75 counties. Ninety-seven percent are residents of Illinois. He polled students in his history classes—including graduate students, senior, junior, sophomore, and freshman students.

Eighty-two percent picked KENNEDY as the Los Angeles nominee of the Democrats. Yet about 7 percent said KENNEDY is the most qualified. Exactly 25 percent said Stevenson is most qualified to be President. One in forty-four said JOHNSON is most qualified to be President of the United States.

Students in the poll represent 13 Illinois counties: McDonough County, Knox, Sangamon, Morgan, Fulton, Cook, Whiteside, Woodford, Carroll, Montgomery, Iroquois, Hancock, and McLean. Some students were less specific, indicating middle Illinois, central Illinois, west Illinois, north central Illinois, and midwestern Illinois.

The group—while not asked to give their names—was asked about the family background: 13 claimed a farming background; 7 said labor—and the vote was 4 to 3 in picking the Democrats to win. The white-collar families voted 8 to 3 for the Republicans to win in November.

In addition, one family has a teaching background—and two more listed farming and teaching. Seven said middle class, two self-employed, one retired. And as to economic background of the family, one jotted down one word: Republican.

Hon. James E. Murray, of Montana

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS C. HENNINGS, JR.
OF MISSOURI
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a statement by me on the retirement from the Senate of the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY, of Montana.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HENNINGS ON THE RETIREMENT OF HON. JAMES E. MURRAY, OF MONTANA

Many of our colleagues have expressed their regrets over the decision by JIM MURRAY not to run for reelection but to retire from the Senate at the end of this Congress. Each one who spoke undertook a most difficult task for it is impossible to put into words what it means to serve in the Senate with a man of JIM MURRAY'S stature. Each of us has learned to look to JIM time and time again for direction.

I have been most fortunate to serve with him on the Democratic policy committee where his wise counsel and experience has been invaluable to us all. In the remaining days of this Congress we will all be looking to JIM MURRAY for continued leadership.

I should like to say a few words about my own firsthand knowledge and experience in working closely with JIM MURRAY—an experience which I shall always cherish. Within a very few months after I became a Member of the Senate, a devastating flood swept over the land in the Missouri River Basin. I urged President Harry S. Truman to establish a Commission to survey the basin with respect to the preservation and development of its water and land resources. The President established the Missouri Basin Survey Commission consisting of three Members of the Senate, three Members of the House of Representatives, and six lay members. JIM MURRAY was asked to serve on the Commission and even though at that time he was older in years than most Members of the Senate, he never hesitated one instant to give up the many months of the recess period which as we know is normally at the disposition of a Senator to use as he may, to take part in this survey.

The Commission with its headquarters at Lincoln, Nebr., held 60 public and executive sessions. The public hearings were held all along the Missouri River. JIM MURRAY'S service to the Commission was indefatigable and faithful as we worked to solve the problems of water and land resources for one-sixth of our Nation.

During those days together on the Commission, I came to know him not only as a warm and friendly man of highest character and devotion to public service but also a man of keen intellect who very quickly grasped the many technical and difficult agricultural, economic, and engineering problems with which the Commission had to deal. Since that time I have always felt very close to JIM MURRAY.

We will miss JIM MURRAY, but we will never forget him nor will the American people. In his 25 years in the Senate, he has left us a rich legacy of accomplishment. His name is a hallmark in the legislative annals, in the fields of health, of education, of labor, of conservation, and of natural resource development. In fact, I cannot think of a field in which over the years JIM MURRAY'S vision and dedication has not guided and enriched us.

I want to wish JIM MURRAY Godspeed and many years ahead of health and happiness which he so richly deserves in his retirement from public life.

Public Laws 449–493

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BARRATT O'HARA
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am extending my remarks to include a digest of Public Laws 449 to and including 493, as given in my reports to my constituents in the Second District of Illinois:

PUBLIC LAW 449

H.R. 8601, Civil Rights Act of 1960

Public Law 449 (1) prescribes criminal penalties for obstructing the execution of school desegregation orders, (2) makes it a Federal crime, punishable by imprisonment up to 5 years, to flee across State lines to avoid prosecution for "hate bombings" of schools, churches, synagogues, (3) implements Federal investigations of denial of voting rights by requiring local election officials to retain voting records for 22 months after any Federal election and to surrender them to the Attorney General on demand, (4) strengthens the power of the Civil Rights Commission to administer oaths and take statements from witnesses, (5) permits the U.S. Commissioner of Education to provide schools for armed services children in areas where public schools have been closed to avoid compliance with desegregation orders, and (6) provides Federal machinery affirmatively to assist persons who have been denied the right to vote because of their race or color.

This is how title VI will work:

(a) Where in any area, with a large Negro population, few, if any, nonwhites are registered and participating voters, there is a presumption of "a practice pattern" of voting discrimination, accomplished by intimidation, arbitrary and discriminatory tests or by downright refusal to accept registrations. The court first must find that such "practice or pattern" exists.

(b) After the judicial finding that there is such "practice or pattern" any person of the race discriminated against may obtain on proper showing a court order permitting him to vote. Any election official then refusing to permit him to vote shall be punished for contempt of court.

(c) The court is empowered to appoint one or more persons as "voting referees" to accept the applications and determine the qualifications of Negro citizens who have been denied registration. The voting referees will receive testimony, ex parte, from any person denied the right to vote, and the applicant's statement under oath, "shall be prima facie evidence as to age, residence, and his prior efforts to register or otherwise qualify to vote."

(d) The findings of the voting referees will be reviewed by the Federal courts and voting certificates issued to qualified applicants.

Important: One of the strong provisions is that literacy "and understanding of other subjects" shall be determined solely on the basis of answers included in the report of the voting referee. This should go a long way in protecting against rigged examinations.

PUBLIC LAW 450

This gives 7 acres of land ($285 value) to the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians in Wyoming for an extension agency.

PUBLIC LAW 451

H.R. 10234, Department of Commerce appropriation

Public Law 451 carries $645,922,375 in appropriations for the Department of Commerce and $83,702,000 for related agencies for fiscal 1961. This is a cut of $70 million under the budget.

An additional $50 million is given the revolving fund for Small Business. With the carryover this means $174 million will be available (mostly for small business loans) in fiscal 1961.

PUBLIC LAW 452

This extends to June 30, 1960, the life of the Lincoln Sesquicentennial Commission in order to complete volume III of "Abraham Lincoln: A Chronology, 1809–65."

PUBLIC LAW 453

Public Law 453 suspends for 2 years import duty on amorphous graphite or plumbago, valued at $50 a ton or less.

PUBLIC LAW 454

Bureau of Ships has the job of construction and repair of the ships of the Navy. It spends a billion or more dollars annually. Public Law 454 repeals an outmoded requirement that the Chief of the Bureau shall be an engineering expert, the Deputy Chief an architectural specialist, or visa versa. Now any qualified officer of the Navy can be assigned.

PUBLIC LAW 455

H.R. 10401, Interior appropriations

Public Law 455 appropriates $557,667,600 for the Department of the Interior for fiscal 1961. Our public lands and forests produce over $500 million in Federal revenues annually. Public Law 455 provides funds for more intensified management, also for increased research programs in forestry, fisheries and wildlife, and mine safety. It also gives the Geological Survey more money for water resources investigation. The appropriations total some $7 million over the budget.

PUBLIC LAW 456

This continues until September 1963, the suspension of duty on istle or Tampico fiber, used chiefly in the manufacture of brushes.

PUBLIC LAW 457

H.R. 11713, Atomic Energy Commission

Public Law 457 authorizes $211.4 million for fiscal 1961 for the Atomic Energy Commission, including $13 million for power reactor plants for the Antarctic and $5 million for stepped-up biomedical research into effects of radiation and radioactive fallout.

The Joint Committee disappointingly reports the failure of the Euratom program (of which so much was expected) to come up with a single project.

PUBLIC LAW 458

This is an aftermath of WPA. It disclaims any interest of the United States in land in Orange County, Calif., donated in 1936 by the American Legion for a WPA project, to give jobs to the unemployed.

PUBLIC LAW 459

Public Law 459 is especially interesting to automobile, real estate, and other dealers, and to finance companies that buy their installment notes. It provides transitional provisions for income tax treatment of dealer reserve income.

PUBLIC LAW 460

Public Law 460 designates two blocks in the District of Columbia as "Plaza of the Americas." In this area are the magnificent Pan American Union Building, statues to Simon Bolivar (South American liberator), and Jose Artegas (national hero of Uruguay), and other monuments to inter-American friendship and cooperation. A good gesture of hemispheric solidarity.

PUBLIC LAW 461

In its half century of existence the Commission of Fine Arts has enlisted the services, free of charge, of 64 noted architects, 8 painters, and 11 sculptors. Its members serve without pay, but the annual operating expenses now slightly exceed $35,000. Public Law 461 removes the authorization limitation.

PUBLIC LAW 462

Public Law 462 honors the memory of William Horatio McAlpine, dean of the civilian engineers employed by the Corps of Engineers, by giving his name to the lock and dam on the Ohio River at Louisville.

PUBLIC LAW 463

S. 1062, bank mergers

Public Law 463 is major legislation in the field of banking. It requires Federal bank mergers to have the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, the Comptroller of the Currency or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Purpose is to assure against monopoly and resultant absence of competition in a banking system serving the industry and commerce of an area. There has been a strong trend toward mergers in recent years. (I was interestingly reminded in the debate that the largest bank in the Nation is in California, the next 4 in New York, and the 8th and 10th in Chicago. Of the 50 largest banks 13 are in New York, 4 in Chicago.

PUBLIC LAW 464

H.R. 10550, Export Control Act

Public Law 464 extends for 2 years to June 30, 1962, the authority of the President to control exports of strategic and critical materials. The authority now, however, is little used except for security reasons with the Sino-Soviet bloc.

PUBLIC LAW 465

Public Law 465 will interest officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey who were specially commended for gallantry in actual combat. Hereafter they can on retirement be advanced one grade the same as officers of the Navy and Marine Corps. The naval service calls these "tombstone promotions."

PUBLIC LAW 466

Living conditions of our agents enforcing the customs and immigration laws on the Mexican and Canadian borders are rugged. Public Law 466 raises to $80,000 the maximum allowance for construction of buildings on the border for combined office and living quarters.

PUBLIC LAW 467

Somebody misplaced until too late a bill of $765 rendered by a water district in Nassau County in New York for service to the Federal civil defense. So Congress enacted Public Law 467 to authorize the payment and keep Uncle Sam's honor unsullied.

PUBLIC LAW 468

Public Law 468 extends loan provisions of Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Act to other soil conservation projects. This is expected to hasten completion of 11 major watersheds, work on which started some 12 years ago.

PUBLIC LAW 469

Library of Congress is one of the top research libraries of the world. At present it is housed in a main building and an annex, but with its tremendous content of books, sheet maps, phonograph records, newspapers, microfilm, and other formats it is bursting at the seams. Public Law 469 provides for preliminary plans for an additional building.

PUBLIC LAW 470

H.R. 9660, medical expenses of aged parents

Many persons past 65 either live with or are entirely provided for by their children. Because of the age factor the medical bills frequently are considerable. Public Law 470 permits a personal income tax deduction of all such medical expenses. If your or your spouse's father or mother are dependent upon you and are past 65, you can now charge off all their medical expenses (not covered by insurance) as a deduction. I know you will approve of my casting of your vote for this good legislation.

PUBLIC LAW 471

H.R. 10474, new naval craft

You will be interested in the program of our Navy to meet the challenge of the Soviet Navy, with its 450 high-powered submarines and rapidly increasing number of cruisers and destroyers. In fiscal 1961 we will construct or modernize a total of 35 ships and 22 craft, already authorized. Public Law 471 adds authorization for (1) one amphibious transport and dock which will carry 900 troops with transport helicopters and landing craft; (2) two escort vessels for locating and destroying enemy submarines, and (3) one fast combat support ship to provide continuous replenishment of fuel, ammunition, and food.

PUBLIC LAW 472

H.R. 11510, Mutual Security Act of 1960

Public Law 472 extends the Mutual Security Act for 1 year and authorizes $1.3 billion for economic assistance, technical cooperation, and special programs. This is in addition to $2 billion for military assistance and $700 million for the development loan fund already authorized. It is $136 million under the President's request, $42 million less than last year.

The act, drawn up by the Committee on Foreign Affairs after months of intensive study, tightens up the program and provides for closer supervision. It continues aid to Israel on the same measure and authorizes a special $20 million program to assist the newly emerging nations of Africa to meet the responsibilities of sovereignty. This is the program recommended by the Subcommittee on Africa, of which your Representative is chairman and Congressman WILLIAM MURPHY a member.

I was happy to be one of the sponsors in our committee of a statement of policy that puts our country squarely on record against Egypt's denial to the ships of Israel of passage through the Suez Canal. It states that "the purposes of this act are negated and the peace of the world is endangered" when nations helped by us wage economic warfare against other nations friendly to us "by boycotts, blockades, and restrictions of the use of international waterways."

Happily, this statement, originating in the committee of which your representative is a member, survived a drive by Senator FULBRIGHT to eliminate it in the Senate. Senator PAUL DOUGLAS led the successful fight to head in Senator FULBRIGHT.

The House passed the bill 243 to 130. Your vote was "aye."

PUBLIC LAW 473

H.R. 8042, ships for China

In 1948 the Republic of China purchased four cargo-passenger vessels from the United States for $4,400,000. It made a downpayment of $1,100,000, installment payments of $188,000 and spent another $1 million in American shipyards reconditioning the vessels. But before the vessels ever left the American coast for the China trade the Republic of China, driven from the mainland, was unable to meet payments and the ships were repossessed. Public Law 473 does the fair thing by permitting the payments previously made to apply on 2 of the 4 vessels. The vessels are 17 years old and at present are in mothballs.

PUBLIC LAW 474

H.R. 9449, Coast Guard

Coast Guard, as we in the Second District well know, performs a necessary and useful service in protection of lives. Its workload has been greatly increased by the rapid increase in the number of small motorboats and the enactment of the Federal Boating Act of 1958.

Public Law 474(1) increases the limitation on enlistment from 4 to 6 years, (2) raises the number of commissioned officers from 3,000 to 3,500, (3) improves the civilian teaching staff at the Coast Guard Academy, and (4) elevates the rank of Commandant from vice admiral to admiral.

PUBLIC LAW 475

Our country has the finest transportation system in the world. Public Law 475 sets aside the third week in May every year as "National Transportation Week" as a tribute to the men and women who move goods and people throughout the United States.

PUBLIC LAW 476

Explosion and crash of an Air Force jet near Little Rock, Ark., on March 31, 1960, killed or injured many civilians, damaged 123 homes and 12 automobiles. Damage will exceed $500,000. Public Law 476 removes $5,000 limitation on settlements as some of the claims will be over that amount.

PUBLIC LAW 477

The International Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America is erecting a $5 million building on land worth $2 million bordering the Capitol grounds in Washington. Public Law 477 permits the contractor to move his materials over adjacent Capitol grounds during construction. Any use of the grounds of the Capitol requires congressional approval.

PUBLIC LAW 478

Public Law 478 amends special excise taxes in the Internal Revenue Code on short-barreled firearms and machineguns. It is expected to serve the good purpose of making it more difficult for gangsters to get the types of weapons they like best. A tax of $200 is imposed on the sale of each "gangster weapon" and both buyer and seller are made liable.

PUBLIC LAW 479

This extends to June 30, 1963, the suspension of duty on crude chicory and reduction of duty on ground chicory. Since 1954 no chicory has been grown in the United States.

PUBLIC LAW 480

Public Law 480 authorizes the sale at market value to the State of Florida of 500 acres of land in Sumter County as site for a prison. Uncle Sam bought the land for $5 to $6 an acre, will get for it an estimated $54 an acre.

PUBLIC LAW 481

H.R. 10809, aeronautics and space

Public Law 481 authorizes $970 million for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for fiscal 1961, itemized $170,760,000 for salaries and expenses, $621,453,000 for research and development, and $122,787,000 for construction and equipment.

It increases the number of positions paying up to $21,000 a year to 13, of $19,000-a-year positions to 290. These positions are filled by scientists and other professional and technical personnel. My understanding is that they as yet have not all been filled or committed.

House report No. 1333 is an interesting and factual recital in 55 printed pages, of progress and plans in our race with the Soviet to conquer space.

PUBLIC LAW 482

Public Law 482 extends for another 5 years the loan of a small destroyer to the Republic of China. It also authorizes the loan of a submarine to Canada for training a cadre of personnel to operate Canadian submarines when they are built. At present the Canadian Navy, equipped for antisubmarine warfare, has no subs of its own.

PUBLIC LAW 483

September 13, 1960, is the 100th birthday of Gen. John J. Pershing, who symbolizes the men of the AEF who fought under him in World War I. Public Law 483 authorizes the Army and Federal agencies to join with patriotic organizations in observance of the day.

PUBLIC LAW 484

House Joint Resolution 502, Mary McLeod Bethune

Mary McLeod Bethune (1875–1955) was a prominent Negro educator (founder of Bethune-Cookman College for Negroes at Daytona Beach, Fla.), and one of the remarkable women of her times. Public Law 484 authorizes the National Council of Negro Women to erect on public grounds in the District of Columbia a memorial honoring Mary McLeod Bethune and commemorating the 100th anniversary of the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation. The council will raise the money for the memorial by popular subscription.

When I cast your vote for this resolution I remembered a tremendously moving article by the talented Ethel Payne on Mary McLeod Bethune that I had read in the Chicago Defender of May 25, 1957, and had put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 27, 1957. You might find it in the public library.

It will interest you to know that this will be the second monument in Washington commemorating the signing of the historic proclamation. The first was dedicated on April 14, 1876, the 11th anniversary of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. It cost $18,000, every cent of which was contributed by persons emancipated by the proclamation. It is a statue of Lincoln, his right hand holding the proclamation, his left hand held over a kneeling Negro who has been released from the shackles of slavery.

PUBLIC LAW 485

House Joint Resolution 546, flag of our country

Hawaii, as you know, is the 50th State of the Union. Public Law 485, a nice sentiment, presents to Hawaii for preservation the first 50-star flag flown over the Capitol.

Illinois was the 21st State. Question: When was the 21-star flag first flown and is it now existent? Answer: It was first flown on July 4, 1819, and I have checked here in Washington with the National Museum and Smithsonian Institute, neither of which has a 21-star flag. I am continuing my search. You can help by checking with the Chicago Historical Society.

The 21-star flag was the official flag of our country for only 1 year, from July 4, 1819, to July 4, 1820. In a sense it is Illinois' very own. It is doubtful that there was a 22-star flag, the Library of Congress informing me that the records were not too well kept. Alabama was admitted in December of 1819 and Maine in March of 1820. So it is likely that the official flag replacing Illinois' 21 stars had 23 stars.

PUBLIC LAW 486

S. 2130, money for Japanese

In view of recent events in Japan this is of timely interest. It was signed by the President only a few days before he started on his trip to the Orient.

The Bonin Islands lie 700 miles south of Tokyo. During the war its 7,000 civilians were evacuated to the Japanese home islands. They have not been permitted to return to their old homes for security reasons as the Bonin Islands now are part of the defense system of the United States. Unfortunately, many have not been integrated into the Japanese economy and are in need.

Public Law 486 authorizes a payment of $6 million in full settlement of the claims of Japanese nationals who cannot return to their farms and old employments because we have taken over the Bonins. It follows the pattern at home where farmer owners are compensated when property is taken over for public use.

I am happy to report that Shig Wakamatsu, national president of the Japanese American Citizens League, and one of our esteemed neighbors in the great Second District, came to Washington to confer with Congressman MURPHY and your representative when this measure was before the Foreign Affairs Committee. He made a large contribution to the enactment of equitable legislation removing an irritant and advancing the cause of friendship with the Japanese people.

PUBLIC LAW 487

S. 1833, Bent's Old Fort

Public Law 487 establishes a national historic site at Bent's Old Fort near La Junta, Colo., as part of our rich and rewarding system of national parks. The land acquisition will run less than $50,000.

Bent's Old Fort, on the Santa Fe Trail, was considered one of the great outposts of civilization in the vast plains area. It was erected about 1833, a trapezoid adobe building with protective walls 2 feet in thickness, a fortress against the Indians, a hostelry, a trading post, a rendezvous for trappers, a stopping place for caravans. In 1845 John Fremont made it his base of operations for his third expedition. In 1846 General Kearny and his army stopped there. It did service in the war with Mexico as military storehouse and hospital.

All the romantic past in the conquest and settlement of the West is dramatized for the present generation in the restoration and preservation of such historic spots as Bent's Old Fort. They keep afresh the spirit of our pioneers and imbed the traditions of our country.

PUBLIC LAW 488

S. 44, San Luis water supply project

Public Law 488 authorizes $500 million construction of San Luis unit of Central Valley water supply project in California. It provides for a cooperative partnership of the Federal Government and the State of California in the development of California's waterpower for irrigation, industrial and all-inclusive purposes. There was little, if any, controversy, on the soundness of the project and the working together of State and Federal Governments, and the House passed the measure by voice.

But first an amendment was adopted on rollcall, 214 to 181, to delete a section that would have removed the 160-acre limitation in the basic reclamation laws. Your vote was aye. I think you will agree with me that the benefits of public works should be widely spread.

I also voted for an amendment, which carried to prohibit the delivering of water to newly irrigated lands in years when the supply of farm products was in excess of normal. Some 500,000 acres will get water for irrigation, probably to grow crops not under the support program. Nevertheless I thought it prudent to guard against the possibility of further swelling of costly CCC surpluses.

PUBLIC LAW 489

Nebraska and Kansas divide the waters of the Big Blue River and its tributaries. Public Law 489 grants the consent of Congress (required by the Constitution) to a compact of the two States to arrange an equitable apportionment.

PUBLIC LAW 490

Public Law 490 gives a break to veterans who are awarded additional compensation for dependents, based upon 50 percent or more disability rating. The additional compensation will start on the date of the increased percentage allowance instead of waiting for receipt of basic proof.

PUBLIC LAW 491

Also of interest to veterans' Public Law 491 makes uniform the marriage date requirement for service-connected death benefits to widows. Widows, otherwise eligible, who were married for 5 or more years or the mothers of children, will not be affected.

PUBLIC LAW 492

Formula for fixing the compensation of widows in service-connected cases is $112 plus 12 percent of base pay of veterans. Public Law 492 provides that the base pay may be that of the highest rank held for at least 6 months in service. This among others will benefit widows of persons who prior to June of 1948 reverted to lower ranks in order to retire from the service.

PUBLIC LAW 493

H.R. 8238, exhausts of motor vehicles

Public Law 493 directs the Surgeon General to conduct a 2-year study of the effects on the public health of exhausts from motor vehicles. With some 50 million cars on the streets and highways (by 1970 it will be 90 million) the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare is genuinely alarmed. Emissions from automobiles are carbon monoxide, oxides of nitrogen and organic substances.

Celebration of Swiss Independence Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ABRAHAM J. MULTER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, on August 1 the citizens of that great and free friend of the United States—Switzerland—celebrate their national Day of Independence. This small country can commemorate a longer period of democracy and independence than any other nation in the world.

In the year 1291 the independence of Germanic Europe was threatened by the rise of the Hapsburg dynasty. The strength and might of this new monarchy were overpowering. Yet three small communities, the forest cantons of Uri, Shwyz, and Unterwalden all a part of present-day Switzerland, chose to fight rather than lose their freedoms. Thus, on that historic August 1 so long ago, the free men of these valley communities took a solemn oath of brotherhood. Here was formed the "Everlasting League" that was to become the foundation for the Swiss Confederation that exists today. While barbarism still ruled most of the world, while Mongol hordes still ravaged much of Asia and Europe, these valiant men pledged mutual defense against tyranny, the peaceful arbitration of disputes, and the establishment of formal processes of law.

This is the great heritage which has never been forgotten by the Swiss people. Indeed, through the centuries since then other free and courageous men like William Tell have helped to keep this tradition ever shining and bright.

Through those centuries this small nation has demonstrated the possibility of a multinational state; for it has successfully combined under a free and democratic government three major cultural and lingual peoples—French, German, and Italian Swiss.

Here in America, we have been greatly benefited by the contributions made by the descendants of these free Swiss. Swiss-Americans have helped to insure our American freedoms from the Revolutionary War to Korea. Men like Albert Gallatin, Jean-Louis Agassiz, John Sutler, Louis Chevrolet, to name but a few, have left their indelible mark on our land.

Thus, we join wholeheartedly with the Swiss in recognition of the unquenchable beacon of freedom which they have held aloft to light the whole world.

May the mountain valleys of that beautiful land never again echo to the march of tyrants; and may the Swiss forever celebrate in their daily free lives that Day of Independence.

Summary of Veterans' Legislation, 86th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. OLIN E. TEAGUE
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, of which I am chairman, has received many inquiries from Members of Congress with respect to legislation affecting veterans which has been enacted during the 86th Congress. In order that this material may be readily available, I insert material showing the status of veterans' legislation as of July 15, along with certain general information relative to the various veterans' programs which I believe will be helpful to Members:

COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, OLIN E. TEAGUE, CHAIRMAN—SUMMARY OF VETERANS' LEGISLATION REPORTED, 86TH CONGRESS

LAWS ENACTED

Public Law 86-73 (H.R. 2256): Makes $100 million available to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, upon his request, for immediate use in the direct-loan program for for the purpose of reducing existing waiting lists. Provides that the interest rate on guaranteed and direct loans may be set at a rate not to exceed 5¼ percent per annum and repeals provision of law requiring that VA interest rate be not less than one-half of 1 percent below FHA rate. Makes certified agents of Federal Housing Administrator eligible to make VA automatic loans if approved by the Veterans' Administration. Authorizes the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to refuse to appraise homes for builders and lenders suspended by FHA. (Approved August 11, 1959.)

Public Law 86-103 (H.R. 5447): Extends for a period of 10 years, to June 30, 1970, the existing authority of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to maintain offices in the Republic of the Philippines. (Approved August 25, 1959.)

Public Law 86-109 (H.R. 5446): Requires that Veterans Canteen Service pay reasonable charges for the use of space, buildings, and structures furnished by the Veterans' Administration, the amount of charges to be determined by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. (Approved August 25, 1959.)

Public Law 86-113 (H.R. 3269): Liberalizes statutory bar to benefits available to a veteran discharged during a period of hostilities on his own application or solicitation as an alien by presuming that he was not so discharged in the absence of affirmative evidence establishing the fact. (Approved August 25, 1959.)

Public Law 86-116 (H.R. 269): Grants to employees of the Manila, Republic of the Philippines, office of the Veterans' Administration, who are U.S. citizens, certain allowances and benefits similar to those enjoyed by Foreign Service personnel—transportation, home leave, etc. (Approved August 29, 1959.)

Public Law 86-146 (H.R. 6319): Restricts payment, upon death of an incompetent veteran, of gratuitous veterans' benefits deposited in the "personal funds of patients' trust fund" to wife, child, and dependent parent rather than paying to personal representative. Provides that an incompetent veteran receiving hospital care at public expense and having neither wife nor child shall have any gratuitous VA payments stopped when his estate reaches $1,500 and such payments shall not be resumed until the estate is reduced to $500. Payments may be made for the needs of a dependent parent or parents. Where State institutions charge for the care of a veteran patient, payment out of the benefit is permitted. (Approved September 1, 1959.)

Public Law 86-150 (S. 906): Provides that, for veterans of the Korean conflict, receiving education or training under the "Korean GI bill," a change from the pursuit of one program to the pursuit of another will not be considered a change of program if the first program is prerequisite to, or generally required for, entrance into pursuit of the second. As an example, where a veteran may have declared his educational objective to the attainment of a master's degree and he later decides that he wishes to attain a doctor's degree, this change of objective would not be considered a change of program. (Approved September 1, 1959.)

Public Law 86-152 (S. 1694): Extends authority of the Veterans' Administration to provide hospital and medical care abroad to include U.S. citizens temporarily residing abroad who require hospital care and medical treatment for peacetime service-incurred disabilities. (Approved August 11, 1959.)

Public Law 86-187 (H.R. 267): Increases the presumptive period for service connection for the disease of multiple sclerosis from the present 2-year period to 3 years. (Approved August 25, 1959.)

Public Law 86-188 (H.R. 271): Provides that Hansen's disease (leprosy) developing to a degree of 10 percent within 3 years from the date of a veteran's separation from the service shall be considered to be service connected. (Approved August 25, 1959.)

Public Law 86–195 (H.R. 2405): Includes as a "child" for purposes of laws administered by the Veterans' Administration (except those relating to insurance and the disposition of personal property of a decedent left upon the premises of a VA facility), one who was a member of the veteran's household at the time of his death and who was adopted by the veteran's spouse within 2 years after the death, unless at the time of the veteran's death the child was receiving regular contributions toward his support from some individual other than the veteran or his spouse, or from any public or private welfare organization furnishing services or assistance to children. (Approved August 25, 1959.)

Public Law 86–211 (H.R. 7650): Modifies the pension programs for veterans of World War I, World War II, and the Korean conflict, and their widows and children.

1. Provides a sliding scale of pensions based on the income and dependency status of the recipient. Such scale of pension rates applies to veterans, and to widows and children, as indicated below:

Veteran, no dependents

Annual income		Monthly pension
More than—	But equal to or less than—
	$600	$85
$600	1,200	70
1,200	1,800	40

Veteran with dependents

Annual income		Monthly pension
More than—	But equal to or less than—	Veteran and 1 dependent	Veteran and 2 dependents	Veteran and 3 or more dependents
	$1,000	$90	$95	$100
$1,000	2,000	75	75	75
2,000	3,000	45	45	45

Above rates increased by $70 when veteran needs regular aid and attendance. In addition, for this group the Administrator may furnish an invalid lift. (Invalid lift benefit applies to all wars.)

Widows and children

WIDOW, NO CHILD

Annual income		Monthly pension
More than—	But equal to or less than—
	$600	$60
$600	1,200	45
1,200	1,800	25

WIDOW, 1 CHILD [1]

Annual income		Monthly pension
More than—	But equal to or less than—
	$1,000	$75
$1,000	2,000	60
2,000	3,000	40

[1] Plus $15 for each additional child.

NO WIDOW, 1 OR MORE CHILDREN

Annual income equal to or less than (earned income excluded)—	Monthly pension
$1,800	$35 for 1 child and $15 for each additional child.

2. All income, regardless of source, counts except:

(a) payments of the 6 months' death gratuity;

(b) donations from public or private relief or welfare organizations;

(c) payments by VA of pension, compensation, and dependency and indemnity compensation;

(d) payments under policies of U.S. Government life insurance or national service life insurance, and payments of servicemen's indemnity;

(e) lump sum social security death payments;

(f) payments to an individual under public or private retirement, annuity, endowment, or similar plans or programs equal to his contributions thereto;

(g) amounts equal to amounts paid by a widow or child of a deceased veteran for—

(1) his just debts,

(2) the expenses of his last illness, and

(3) the expenses of his burial to the extent such expenses are not reimbursed by VA;

(h) proceeds of fire insurance policies.

3. The income of the spouse (if not estranged) may count as the veteran's income. In determining annual income, where a veteran is living with his spouse, all income of the spouse which is reasonably available to or for the veteran, except $1,200 of such income, shall be considered as the income of the veteran, unless in the judgment of the Administrator to do so would work a hardship upon the veteran.

4. All waived income counts.

5. Discretionary authority granted VA for a finding on the net worth of the veteran or the widow or child which could lead to a determination that the applicant is not eligible for pension because of net worth.

6. Places World War II and Korean conflict widows and children on same basis as widows and children of World War I for purposes of pension eligibility.

7. The pension of a veteran being furnished hospital or domiciliary care by the Veterans' Administration will be reduced to $30 a month after the expiration of 2 full months but the Administrator may apportion to the wife or children the balance of the pension.

8. Under the savings provision, the amendments to title 38, United States Code, will not apply to pensioners on the rolls on the day before the effective date unless they seek and are granted pension under the amended title 38. Thus, no person on the pension rolls on the day before the effective date shall have his pension reduced or shall be removed from the pension rolls because of the enactment. All persons on the pension rolls on the day before the effective date will be permitted election to the higher rates if they qualify under the new program or may elect to remain on the rolls under the old law.

The rate under the old law, which may be continued if the veteran chooses, is $66.15 per month, except that where the veteran shall have been rated permanently and totally disabled and has been in receipt of pension for a continuous period of 10 years or reaches the age of 65 years and is permanently and totally disabled, the rate is $78.75 per month. A rate of $135.45 per month is authorized in the case of an otherwise eligible veteran who is helpless or blind or so nearly helpless or blind as to need or require the regular aid and attendance of another person. Such pension is not payable to any unmarried person whose annual income exceeds $1,400 or to any married person or any person with minor children whose annual income exceeds $2,700.

In the case of widows and children, the rates under the old law are as follows:

Widow	Widow, 1 child	Each additional child	No widow, 1 child	No widow, 2 children	No widow, 3 children	Each additional child
$50.40	$63	$7.56	$27.30	$40.95	$54.60	$7.56

(Subject to income limitations of $1,400 per year if widow has no child and $2,700 if she does; $1,400 for each child if there is no widow.)

9. Effective July 1, 1960.

Of all single veterans now receiving pensions, 278,000 or 78 percent will receive more money. Sixty percent or 262,000 of the veterans with dependents receive more while 70 percent or a total of 298,000 widows and orphans benefit by passage of this law. Eighty-seven percent of veterans receiving aid and attendance will be increased.

Of all pensioners, married and single veterans, widows and orphans, almost 70 percent, or 838,000 cases, will get a raise; 72,000 cases would be added to the rolls because of the higher income limits; 206,000 cases would be added to the rolls because of equalization of death pension eligibility. The total cases helped would be 1,116,000.

This law makes no change in requirements under the old pension program as to disability, length of service, age, and unemployability of a veteran. These requirements are as follows:

A veteran of World War I, World War II, or the Korean conflict is eligible for pension if he is permanently and totally disabled from nonservice-connected disability not the result of willful misconduct or vicious habits. He must either have served in the active military, naval, or air service for a period of 90 days or more during the applicable period and have been discharged under conditions other than dishonorable, or have been discharged for a service-connected disability.

The determination of permanent total disability is made on a liberal basis. Such rating is granted (where the requirement of permanence is met) when there is a single disability of 60 percent, or two or more disabilities one of which is 40 percent in degree, combined with other disability or disabilities to a total of 70 percent, and unemployability attributed thereto.

Although age alone is not a basis for entitlement to pension, it is considered in association with disability and unemployability in determining permanent and total disability. The aforementioned percentage requirements are reduced on the attainment of age 55 to a 60-percent rating for one or more disabilities, with no percentage requirements for any one disability; at age 60 to a 50-percent rating for one or more disabilities; and at age 65 to one disability ratable at 10 percent or more. When these reduced percentage requirements are met and the disability or disabilities involved are of a permanent nature, a permanent and total disability rating will be assigned, if the veteran is determined to be unable to secure and follow substantially gainful employment by reason of such disability.

A widow's age, disability, or unemployability is not considered in determining her eligibility for a pension, either under existing law or under the provisions of Public Law 86–211. Under the old law, a widow of World War I, World War II, or the Korean conflict is required to meet an annual income limitation of $1,400 if she has no dependents or $2,700 if she has dependents. In addition, the deceased husband of a widow of World War II or the Korean conflict must have had a service-connected disability, although his death was not caused by this disability. Public Law 86–211 removes this latter requirement and places the widows of World War II and the Korean conflict in the same status as widows of World War I veterans. (Approved August 29, 1959.)

Public Law 86–212 (H.R. 255): Makes applicable to a competent veteran who disappears the provisions of existing law which provide that where an incompetent veteran who is receiving compensation for a service-connected disability disappears, the Veterans' Administration may pay to his wife, children, and parents the compensation otherwise payable to such veteran, amounts payable to each not to exceed the amount payable if the veteran had died from a service-connected disability. (Approved September 1, 1959.)

Public Law 86–222 (H.R. 7106): Prior to passage of Public Law 86–222, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs had authority to forfeit the rights of veterans, widows, children, and dependent parents to all gratuitous benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration. Forfeiture was authorized in two categories:

(1) Where the Administrator finds the one claiming benefits has been guilty of mutiny, treason, sabotage, or rendering assistance to an enemy;

(2) Where a false or fraudulent statement has been made concerning any claim for benefits.

The forfeiture decision of the Administrator was final and not subject to review in the courts. Forfeiture, if adjudged, forfeits all benefits and continues for the lifetime of the forfeited individual, unless pardoned by the President.

This law continues the authority of the Administrator to forfeit in all cases where the guilty person resides, or is domiciled, outside the jurisdiction of the U.S. courts.

Where the accused resides, or is domiciled, within the United States at the time of the offense, the new law eliminates the authority of the Administrator to impose a forfeiture based upon false or fraudulent statements. Forfeitures previously imposed are not affected. This law also provides for automatic forfeiture of rights to gratuitous veterans' benefits in all cases of conviction of certain specified offenses involving loyalty or security. A Presidential pardon restores the right to benefits.

Authority of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to make an apportionment award disability compensation to dependents of veterans in cases of administrative forfeiture for fraud or forfeiture for offenses involving loyalty or security is terminated. (Approved Sept. 1, 1959.)

Public Law 86–236 (H.R. 2773): Provides war orphans' educational assistance to children of veterans of the Spanish-American War who die as the result of a disability incurred or aggravated during that period of war service. (Approved Sept. 8, 1959.)

Public Law 86–239 (H.R. 7373): Expands the program of assistance for severely disabled veterans in acquiring homes equipped with special facilities made necessary by the character of their service-connected disabilities. The bill brings into this program those with compensable permanent and total disabilities incurred when such disability includes (1) blindness in both eyes, having only light perception, plus (2) loss, or loss of use, of one lower extremity such as to preclude locomotion without the aid of a wheelchair. Also, it removes the limitation that where eligibility is based on loss, or loss of use, of both lower extremities that such loss must have been due to certain specified conditions. (Approved Sept. 8, 1959.)

Public Law 86–490 (H.R. 276): Authorizes payment to veterans of additional compensation for dependents (based on establishment of a disability rating of not less than 50 percent) from the effective date of the increased percentage evaluation, provided basic proof of dependents is received by Veterans' Administration within 60 days from date of notification of rating action. (Approved June 8, 1960.)

Public Law 86–491 (H.R. 641): Authorizes payment of service-connected death compensation to an otherwise eligible widow of a veteran if she was married to him before the expiration of 15 years after the termination of the period of service in which the injury or disease causing his death was incurred or aggravated. (Approved June 8, 1960.)

Public Law 86–492 (H.R. 7502): The service-connected death benefit of dependency and indemnity compensation is payable to a widow at a monthly rate equal to $112 plus 12 percent of the "basic pay" of her deceased husband. Generally, such basic pay is computed by using the rank of the veteran at the time of his death in active service or last discharge therefrom. The bill would change the method of computing basic pay for dependency and indemnity compensation purposes by using a higher rank held in service than that held at the time of a veteran's death in service or his discharge therefrom, if the use of such higher rank would result in a greater benefit to the widow. It would apply to cases where the veteran had satisfactorily served on active duty for 6 months or more in such higher rank and was so serving within 120 days of death or discharge. (Approved June 8, 1960.)

Public Law 86–494 (H.R. 9785): Grants gratuitous national service life insurance in a maximum amount of $10,000 to any enlisted person who died as the result of an aviation accident incurred in line of duty while undergoing flight training in the active service of the Army or Navy after October 7, 1940, and before August 4, 1942, if such person would have been eligible for life insurance with premiums paid by the United States had he been serving under an appointment as an aviation cadet. Upon application filed generally within 2 years, the insurance would be payable effective from the date of enactment of the bill in monthly installments to a limited class of beneficiaries, if living, and no payment would be made to the estate of any person. Liability for such payments would be borne by the national service life insurance appropriation. (Approved June 8, 1960.)

Public Law 86–495 (H.R. 9788): Prohibits the payment or furnishing of benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration to or on account of any child by reason of the death of more than one parent in the same parental line. However, it would permit a child to elect one or more times to receive benefits by reason of the death of any one parent in the same parental line, thus allowing the child to receive the greater of two or more benefits. The bill would apply only to cases where the death of a parent occurs after the date of enactment thereof. (Approved June 8, 1960.)

Public Law 86–497 (H.R. 10703): Grants waiver of payment of national service life insurance premiums, upon application, in any case in which an insured, during World War II or the early Korean conflict, became totally disabled in line of duty after making application for insurance and prior to the effective date thereof and remained continuously totally disabled to date of death or the date of enactment, whichever is earlier. A waiver of premiums under this bill would render the insurance nonparticipating while the waiver is in effect. (Approved June 8, 1960.)

Public Law 86–499 (H.R. 10898): Authorizes payment of additional $12 per month for each child of service-connected disabled war veterans who qualify to receive dependents' allowance (50 percent disabled or more) and 80 percent of that rate for peacetime veterans. (Approved June 8, 1960.)

Public Law 86–501 (H.R. 113): Prohibits the severance of a service-connected disability which has been in effect for 10 or more years, except when based on fraud or when military records clearly show that the individual did not have the requisite character of discharge or service. To be effective January 1, 1962. (Approved June 10, 1960.)

Public Law 86–590 (H.R. 10108): Authorizes reimbursement for ferry fares, and bridge, road, and tunnel tolls, in addition to the mileage allowance payable for the travel of certain Veterans' Administration beneficiaries and their attendants. (Approved July 5, 1960.)

Public Law 86–598 (H.R. 7966): Provides for the furnishing of needed services of optometrists by the Veterans' Administration to veterans having service-connected eye conditions. The Veterans' Administration today is authorized to furnish outpatient medical care for veterans with service-connected disabilities. This care is furnished primarily in Veterans' Administration clinics but is supplemented by using the services of fee-basis private physicians where it is not feasible to care for veterans at the clinics. It is expected that enactment of this legislation will cause the Veterans' Administration to materially expand its use of the services of optometrists in its outpatient fee-basis program. (Approved July 7, 1960.)

Public Law 86–625 (H.R. 10596): Reimburses State homes at the rate of $2.50 per veteran per day (or a maximum of $912.50 a year per veteran) rather than at the rate of $700 per annum, for care of veteran members who are eligible for care in Veterans' Administration hospital or domiciliary facilities. (Approved July 12, 1960.)

Public Law 86–626 (H.R. 11776): Veterans' Administration appropriations, fiscal year beginning July 1, 1960, and ending June 30, 1961. (For details, see: "Veterans' Administration Appropriations." This legislation reported from House Appropriations Committee.) (Approved July 12, 1960.)

Public Law 86–639 (H.R. 7965): Authorizes the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to furnish medical services for a non-service-connected disability when reasonably necessary in preparation for admission of a veteran in need of hospital care. Outpatient treatment reasonably necessary to complete treatment incident to a veteran's hospital care also would be permitted. (Approved July 12, 1960.)

Public Law 86–663 (H.R. 7211): Establishes a new statutory rate of disability compensation for certain service-connected seriously disabled veterans. A monthly rate of $265 would be authorized for a veteran who has a service-connected disability rated as total and (1) has additional service-connected disability or disabilities independently ratable at 60 percent or more, or (2) by reason of his service-connected disability or disabilities is "permanently housebound." (Approved July 14, 1960.)

Public Law 86–665 (H.R. 7903): Extends the World War II loan guaranty program and the World War II and Korean conflict direct loan program for 2 years, from July 25, 1960, to July 25, 1962. It also authorizes an additional year for processing loan guaranty applications received by July 25, 1962, and permits the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to close direct loans subsequent to July 25, 1962, on the basis of commitments issued before that date. Authority for Treasury advances to the direct loan revolving fund in the aggregate amount of $150 million per fiscal year (but not more than $50 million in any one quarter) would be continued through fiscal years 1961 and 1962. Committee amendment adopted on House floor provides (1) for issuance of guarantee when veteran has in fact occupied house as his home but occupancy certifications were not completed; (2) that a veteran's deposit or down-payment be held by seller in a trust account until the loan is closed; and (3) that a revolving fund be established in the Veterans' Administration. (Approved July 14, 1960.)

Public Law 86–670 (H.R. 9786): Permits Indian war and Spanish-American War veterans to elect to receive aid-and-attendance pension at the rates and under the conditions (except service requirements) applicable to World War I veterans. (Approved July 14, 1960.)

PASSED HOUSE AND PASSED SENATE WITH AMENDMENT, RETURNED TO HOUSE FOR CONSIDERATION OF AMENDMENT

H.R. 11045: Provides a new plan of insurance for national service life insurance (NSLI) policyholders. The plan is modified life insurance which provides a level premium throughout the life of the insured but the face value of the policy will be automatically reduced by 50 percent at the end of the day preceding the insured's 65th birthday. The face value of any extended term insurance in force under the modified life policy would also be reduced by 50 percent at that time. The plan is permissive. Policyholders may elect to retain the insurance otherwise lost at age 65 by paying premiums for age 65 without medical examination. The modified life plan will provide permanent plan insurance at a lower premium rate than the existing permanent plans of insurance. This is true because the protection is cut in half at age 65 and a more realistic table is used for calculation of premiums on participating insurance. A comparison of premiums per $1,000 of participating insurance is as follows:

Age	Annual premium for the modified life plan	Annual premium, present rates		Level premium after age 65
		5 LPT	O.L.	If 50 percent face continued	If 100 percent face continued
30	$9.83	$8.41	$18.47	$9.83	$43.22
35	11.72	9.00	21.31	11.72	45.11
40	14.09	10.06	25.10	14.09	47.48
45	17.17	11.72	30.07	17.17	50.56
50	20.84	15.04	36.94	20.84	54.23
55	25.22	20.95	46.53	25.22	58.61
65		47.00	78.97

Senate amendment permits issuance of national service life insurance to persons eligible to apply between October 8, 1940, and December 31, 1956, both dates inclusive. Application to be submitted in writing within 1 year after January 1, 1961, with proof of good health at time of application. Veterans who served between April 26, 1951, and December 31, 1956, with service-connected disabilities may obtain a special type of policy. Administrative cost and cost of physical examination to be borne by veteran.

House Report: No. 1543; April 21, 1960.

Passed House: May 2, 1960.

Referred: Senate Finance Committee; May 3, 1960.

Senate Report: No. 1485; May 26, 1960.

Passed Senate: June 2, 1960, with amendment.

H.R. 3313: Amends the Soldiers and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940 to provide that facts may be established by written unsworn statements, declarations, verifications, or certificates which are certified to be true under penalty of perjury. These statements would be in lieu of affidavits which are today required in any court action or proceeding where there is default of any appearance by the defendant. In such a case the claimant shall, prior to entering a judgment, file in the court an affidavit setting forth either (1) that the defendant is not in military service, or (2) that the defendant is in military service, or (3) that the plaintiff is unable to determine the status of the defendant insofar as military service is concerned.

Senate amendment extends vocational rehabilitation program until July 25, 1965, for service-connected disabled veterans of World War II who have been prevented from entering or completing training because: (a) they had not attained, retained, or regained medical feasibility for training because of disability; (b) they had not met the requirement of an honorable discharge but character of discharge was later changed by appropriate authority; or (c) they had not timely established the existence of a compensable service-connected disability. Program is also extended for those veterans in training on June 1, 1960, until such time as training is completed.

BILLS PASSED BY HOUSE, REFERRED TO SENATE COMMITTEES

H.R. 268: Adds "deafness of both ears, having absence of air and bone conduction" to the other types of service-connected disabilities specified in the law pertaining to veterans' disability compensation for which an additional award in the amount of $47 monthly is provided.

House Report: No. 411; June 2, 1959.

Passed House: August 31, 1959.

Referred: Senate Finance Committee; September 1, 1959.

Senate committee action: Tabled; April 4, 1960.

H.R. 270: Increases from $10 to $100 the monthly pension payable to holders of the Congressional Medal of Honor, permits payment at any age instead of the present requirement of attaining the age of 65 years, and pays holders of the medal whether or not they are on active duty.

House Report: No. 413; June 2, 1959.

Passed House: July 20, 1959.

Referred: Senate Finance Committee; July 21, 1959.

Senate committee action: Ordered reported, with amendments; April 4, 1960.

H.R. 283: Provides that if a veteran, as a result of service-connected disability, has suffered the anatomical loss or loss of use of one foot, or one hand, or both buttocks, or blindness of one eye, having only light perception, the rate of compensation therefor shall be $47 per month for each such loss or loss of use independent of any other compensation provided in subsections (a) to (j). At present this provision limits payment thereunder to one statutory award of $47 per month for all such losses, except where the losses are in addition to other combinations of disabilities specified in subsections (l) to (n). Under the bill as reported, the total payment in any case may not exceed $309 and the loss of more than one creative organ would, for this purpose, be considered a single "loss." In peacetime cases the rates are 80 percent of the above-mentioned rates.

House Report: No. 415, with amendments; June 2, 1959.

Passed House: August 31, 1959.

Referred: Senate Finance Committee; September 1, 1959.

Senate committee action: Tabled; April 4, 1960.

H.R. 5996: Authorizes payment in a lump sum of the total amount of compensation, representing the statutory awards of $47 monthly for the anatomical loss or loss of use of a creative organ and $67 monthly for arrested tuberculosis disease, which would have been payable for the period August 1, 1952, to date of bill's enactment had claim therefor been filed on August 1, 1952 (the effective date of Public Law 427, 82d Congress, which first provided such statutory awards for World War II and Korean conflict veterans). Applies to all cases in which the condition was determined, before August 1, 1952, as service connected, and would require reduction of the amount payable by any such statutory awards paid during that period.

House Report: No. 419; June 2, 1959.

Passed House: July 20, 1959.

Referred: Senate Finance Committee; July 21, 1959.

Senate committee action: Tabled; April 4, 1960.

H.R. 8098: Permits the combination, or tacking, of two or more separate periods of service during more than one period of war in satisfying the 90-day service requirement for payment of non-service-connected disability or death pension to veterans and their widows and their children.

House Report: No. 1536; April 21, 1960.

Passed House: May 2, 1960.

Referred: Senate Finance Committee; May 3, 1960.

H.R. 9792: Provides that the salaries of managers of Veterans' Administration hospitals, domiciliaries, and centers shall be not less than $16,500 per annum and the salaries of directors of professional services shall be $16,250 per annum.

House Report: No. 1539; April 21, 1960.

Passed House: May 16, 1960.

Referred: Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service; May 17, 1960.

BILLS REFERRED TO HOUSE COMMITTEE FOLLOWING PASSAGE BY SENATE

S. 1138: Provides readjustment benefits to persons with more than 180 days of service, entering the service after January 31, 1955, and before the termination of compulsory military service (July 1, 1963), as follows:

(1) Education and vocational training;

(2) Vocational rehabilitation (for veterans with service-connected disabilities); and

(3) Guaranteed and direct-loan assistance for the purchase of a home or farmlands, livestock, machinery, etc., to be used in farming operations conducted by the veteran.

Total [3]	3,079,000,000	312,000,000	2,767,000,000

[1] This estimate assumes enactment early in fiscal year 1961, prior to the beginning of the school year. Amounts which might be expended because of retroactive payments for training subsequent to Sept. 1, 1959, as currently provided in the proposal, are not included in the estimate. With retroactive payments for fiscal year 1960, approximately $46,000,000 additional would be expended for grants, and approximately $10,000,000 of the total expenditures shown for fiscal year 1961 would be for loans.

[2] Assumes persons taking loans would take as much as they would have received on a grant basis.

[3] Total is through fiscal year 1973 only. Additional expenditures for direct benefits beyond fiscal year 1973 have not been estimated. The program will continue for several years beyond fiscal year 1973.

S. 1138, 86TH CONG. (AS PASSED BY THE SENATE ON JULY 21, 1959)

TABLE 2.—Sec. 3. Vocational rehabilitation—Estimate of expenditures for direct benefits and monthly average trainees [1]

Fiscal year	Expenditures for direct benefits	Monthly average trainees
1961	$6,000,000	3,200
1962	13,000,000	6,800
1963	18,000,000	9,000
1964	19,000,000	9,800
1965	19,000,000	9,900

[1] These estimates assume that there will be no concurrent readjustment education and training program. Participation and cost would be reduced to approximately ½ the amounts shown if there is a concurrent readjustment education and training program.

Administrative costs, including counseling and beneficiary travel, would approximate one-sixth of the direct benefits cost.

S. 1138, 86TH CONG. (AS PASSED BY THE SENATE ON JULY 21, 1959)

TABLE 3.—Sec. 4. Home and farm loan benefits

Participating veterans [1]	1,000,000–1,250,000
Administrative cost	$40,000,000–$50,000,000

[1] Assumes that the number of entries into the Armed Forces continues at approximately the present rate and that from 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 veterans will become eligible for the loan benefits.

The cost to the Government of the proposed extension of the loan guaranty benefits is not subject to precise estimate. It is quite problematical whether a one-half of 1 percent fee (the maximum permitted by the bill) would be adequate for offsetting the expenses resulting from claims under the guaranty and the subsequent expenses which might result from acquisition of properties, their management and sale. To the extent that the mortgage guaranty fund, which would be derived primarily from such fees, proved inadequate to meet these expenses, they would be paid out of appropriated funds.

No additional direct loan funds would be provided by the bill beyond those which will be available under present law for the World War II and Korean veterans. Hence, no additional direct loans would be authorized, but there would be an increased demand for the limited amount of direct loan money available.

Senate Report: No. 514; July 14, 1959.

Passed Senate: July 21, 1959, with amendment.

House committee action: Hearings; February 23, 24, 25; March 3, 4, 9, and 14, 1960.

S. 2201: Proposes to amend the definition of the term "Veterans' Administration facilities" contained in 38 U.S.C. 601(4)(C) to include private contract facilities for veterans of any war in a State if (1) no Veterans' Administration hospital is located in the State on the effective date of the act, and (2) no Veterans' Administration hospital is located within 500 miles of the border of the State.

This would permit the use of private contract hospitals for the care of war veterans with non-service-connected disabilities in the State of Alaska. Hawaii having become a State, private hospitals there could also be used for hospitalization of veterans with non-service-connected disabilities.

BILLS REPORTED BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

H.R. 12566: Requires that decisions of the Board of Veterans' Appeals shall be in writing and shall contain findings of fact and conclusions of law separately stated.

House Report: No. 2030; June 29, 1960.

H.R. 12653: Establishes a Court of Veterans' Appeals consisting of five judges to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. Judges are to be appointed for 10-year terms.

The bill also authorizes the court to appoint not more than 50 commissioners. The commissioners shall perform such duties as the court may prescibe, including the conducting of hearings, the receiving of evidence, and the making of such reports as the court may prescribe.

The court is given exclusive jurisdiction to review by appeal decisions of the Board of Veterans' Appeals except in cases involving life insurance contracts, housing, or business loans where jurisdiction is now vested in the U.S. courts.

The decisions of the court shall be final. This, for the first time, subjects decisions of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to review by a separate and independent agency.

VETERANS IN AMERICA

Population of veterans

America's population of living veterans is about 22,500,000.

About two-thirds, or more than 15 million served in World War II. They average 41 years of age.

More than 5,500,000—average age 31—served during the Korean conflict period. Approximately 960,000 of them are "double duty" veterans, serving both in World War II and the Korean conflict.

Less than 2,700,000—average age 66—served in World War I.

Spanish-American War veterans—average age 83—number 37,000. Only about 50 old-timers—in their 80's and 90's—served in the Indian wars,

The Nation's veterans, together with their families, make up about 45 percent of the total population of the United States.

MEDICINE

VA operates 170 hospitals for the care of ill and disabled veterans. On any average day, VA's patient load exceeds 114,000. During an average year, VA admits nearly half a million veterans in its hospital program.

Admissions are under a priority system.

First call goes to veterans with service-connected conditions. Generally, the service-connected are admitted immediately.

And next—if beds are available—come veterans with non-service-connected ailments who are unable to pay for private hospitalization. In addition to signing a statement of inability to pay, they also must submit a statement of their assets and liabilities.

INSURANCE

Approximately 6 million veterans today hold GI insurance policies valued at over $42 billion. The breakdown:

Nearly 5 million World War II veterans hold $34.7 billion of participating national service life insurance; 620,000 Korea veterans hold $5.9 billion of special nonparticipating national service life insurance; 43,000 disabled Korea and post-Korea veterans hold $380 million of special nonparticipating insurance—the only type that may now be newly issued; 275,000 World War I veterans hold $1.4 billion of participating U.S. Government life insurance.

GI LOANS

Eligibility: Any person who served in the armed services at any time on or after September 16, 1940, and prior to July 26, 1947, or on or after June 27, 1950, and prior to February 1, 1955, discharged under conditions other than dishonorable after active service of 90 days or more or because of disability incurred in line of duty is eligible. Generally loans, or applications for guarantee, must be made prior to July 26, 1960, for World War II veterans; veterans of Korea have until January 31, 1965. Widows of deceased veterans whose death was due to service may also qualify.

Amounts: Non-real-estate loans up to $2,000 and real-estate loans in certain cases up to $7,500, or a prorated portion thereof, or loans of both types or combinations thereof, may be guaranteed with interest at not more than 5¼ percent per annum, repayable in not more than 30 years, except in the case of farm realty, which may run for 40 years. (Maturity on non-real-estate loan may not exceed 10 years.) If the proceeds of the loan are to be used for the acquisition of residential property, the amount guaranteed may be 60 percent of the loan but not over $7,500. Banks or other lending institutions make the loans, with the Government guaranteeing 50 or 60 percent of the loan, but in no case to exceed the above amounts. Under certain conditions, Veterans' Administration is authorized to lend, until July 25, 1960, up to $13,500 directly to the veteran when private sources are not available.

Under this program, veterans of World War II and the Korean conflict have borrowed more than $48 billion for homes of their own. VA has guaranteed more than half of this amount, or $26 billion.

The record established by veterans in meeting their GI loan obligations is unparalleled.

So far, veterans have repaid in full nearly 1,600,000 GI loans having a total value of $10 billion.

Defaults on GI loans—for which VA has had to make good the guaranteed portions to lenders—number a mere 61,000, or slightly more than 1 percent of the total number of loans granted.

EDUCATION

More than 10½ million veterans so far have trained under the four programs. That's more than three times the total enrollments in every college and university in the United States of America.

Of the 10½ million total more than 7,800,000—one-half of all World War II veterans—trained under the World War II GI bill. Of them, 44 percent went to schools below the college level (such as trade and technical schools); 29 percent studied in college, and the rest trained on the job and on the farm.

Another 2,330,000—more than 2 out of every 5 Korean veterans—trained under the Korean GI bill. Their number will grow (the program doesn't end until 1965).

A new trend has developed under the Korean GI bill. Fewer veterans have attended schools below the college level (36 percent), and more have gone to college (more than 50 percent). Enrollments in on-the-job and on-the-farm courses account for the balance.

Another 615,000 disabled World War II veterans and 64,000 disabled Korean veterans have received vocational rehabilitation training. Some 40 percent have trained for top-level jobs in professional and managerial fields.

It has helped raise the educational level of veterans to better than 4 years of high school, whereas the level of nonveteran males, same age group, is but 2 years of high school. "Your every voter, as surely as your Chief Magistrate, exercises a public trust," said Grover Cleveland. Through more education, veterans have become better prepared to exercise this public trust.

It has helped build up America's reservoirs of trained manpower, so urgently needed for our Nation's strength and well-being. This country has gained immeasurably from the 478,000 engineers, 391,000 schoolteachers, 275,000 in the medical and related fields (130,000 doctors, dentists, nurses), and 140,000 scientists who learned their skills under the GI bill and the vocational rehabilitation programs.

Approximately 20,000 war orphans have trained since the war orphans educational assistance program began in the fall of 1956. Of these, 79 percent trained in college and the rest in schools below the college level. Approximately 1 in 6 had selected objectives in the scientific field. Of the 1,400 training in the medical and related fields, more than 900 were female students most of whom selected the field of nursing. Almost all of the 1,100 training to be engineers were males. More than 500 trained to be scientists. Approximately 2,300 trained to be schoolteachers.

Public Laws 494–552

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. BARRATT O'HARA

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent I am extending my remarks to include my report to my constituents in the Second District of Illinois on Public Laws 494 to and including 552 of the 2d session of the 86th Congress:

PUBLIC LAW 494

Public Law 494 grants gratuitous national service life insurance up to $10,000 to enlisted personnel who died in aviation accidents while undergoing flight training in Army or Navy from October 7, 1940, to August 4, 1942. This puts them on the same basis as those serving in capacity of aviation cadets, which seems to me only fair. Money will be paid in monthly installments only to (1) widow or widower, (2) children, or otherwise (3) to parents.

PUBLIC LAW 495

Public Law 495 is aimed at halting a windfall when a widow of one veteran marries another veteran and on his death collects for her children twice the benefits, such as compensation or pension. It prohibits duplicate benefits. Most extreme case was that of a widow who married three times, each husband a veteran, and her children drew three allowances, based upon the deaths of three individuals.

PUBLIC LAW 496

Public Law 496 revises the method for treatment of railroad corporation income resulting from discharge of indebtedness in receivership or bankruptcy.

PUBLIC LAW 497

Public Law 497 waives payment of premiums on national life insurance policies for veterans who become totally disabled in line of duty after applying for insurance and prior to its effective date. It applies only to World War II and Korean veterans.

PUBLIC LAW 498

This extends for 2 years payments in lieu of taxes on real property transferred by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to other Government departments.

PUBLIC LAW 499

Veterans with total (service-connected) disabilities get additional compensation for one to three children. Public Law 499 grants additional compensation of $12 monthly for each child of totally disabled veteran in excess of three and of partially disabled veteran in lesser amount. Some 1,275,000 veterans will be benefited at estimated annual cost of $12 million. VA said no, Congress with one voice said yes.

PUBLIC LAW 500

H.R. 10777, military construction

Public Law 500 authorizes $1.1 billion of construction projects for fiscal 1961 at Army, Navy, and Air Force installations in this country and abroad. Fifth Army (headquarters of which are in our district) gets $13,977,000, the greater part for housing and facilities at Fort Leonard Wood in Missouri. Authorization of over a billion dollars in 1 year for military construction alone emphasizes the high cost of defense.

PUBLIC LAW 501

H.R. 113, veterans

Public Law 501, urged by all veteran organizations, prohibits the severance after January 1, 1962, of a service-connected disability which has been in effect for 10 or more years, except when based on fraud. Since 1954 VA has been conducting a comprehensive review of all service-connected cases, has severed 21,500, increased ratings in 9,551 cases, decreased in 71,125 instances. Review will be completed next year. After that Public Law 501 takes over and if veteran has gone 10 years and there is no fraud he is permanently set.

PUBLIC LAW 502

S. 2611, Small Business Investment Act

In 1958 Congress passed the Small Business Investment Act to bring equity-type capital and long-term credit within easier reach of small businesses through the formation of small business investment companies. Since that time 95 of such investment companies, including 2 in Metropolitan Chicago, have been licensed. Public Law 502 advisedly amends the act to remove obstacles that have prevented the formation of many more companies. Anything to strengthen the credit position of small business in its tough fight to survive is in the public interest, I think you will agree.

PUBLIC LAW 503

S. 2977, Central Bank for Cooperatives

Public Law 503 increases from 7 to 13 the directors of the Central Bank for Cooperatives. This will give representation each of the 12 regional banks, the 13th director being appointed by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration with the approval of the Federal Farm Credit Board.

PUBLIC LAW 504

Inflation has hit even bankruptcy. Public Law 504 increases the closing fee of a trustee in bankruptcy from $5 to $10 and the cost of filing a reorganization petition from $100 to $120.

PUBLIC LAW 505

Navajo and Hopi Indian tribes in Arizona seem to be riding on the crest. Public Law 505 gives consent to the tribes for sale of 100,000 acres, recently acquired, and to make 99-year leases, looking forward to a $7-million sawmill, a $150-million powerplant, byproducts industries, and home construction project.

PUBLIC LAW 506

Public Law 506 authorizes the lease of lands in the Colorado River Indian Reservation in Arizona pending a judicial determination of just what tribes own the land.

PUBLIC LAW 507

H.R. 10996, certified mail

Some 3,600,000 pieces of Government mail annually are sent by registered mail. Public Law 507 gives Federal Departments option of using either registered mail or certified mail, which costs about 36 percent less. Annual saving of $774,000 is anticipated.

PUBLIC LAW 508

West Virginia, which the Civil War brought into the Union, is planning a whooping centennial celebration in 1963. Public Law 508 directs the cooperation of the Federal Government.

PUBLIC LAW 509

H.R. 7681, Hoover reorganization plan

Public Law 509, fathered by Congressman DAWSON, embodies the substance of Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1959 of the Hoover Commission on economy and efficiency in Government. It transfers certain duties relative to forest land mineral rights from the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of Agriculture.

PUBLIC LAW 510

This amends an old law, enacted in 1876, to permit streets in the Palace of Fine Arts area in San Francisco to be used for park, recreational, and cultural purposes. Time brings changes and when Uncle Sam is concerned the demand for another public law.

PUBLIC LAW 511

Public Law 511 gives the Secretary of the Navy the same authority exercised by the Secretary of the Army and the Secretary of the Air Force in meritorious cases to cancel an enlisted member's indebtedness to the United States on his honorable discharge. Fair enough. Sailors should have the same treatment as soldiers and flyers, they all serve in the Armed Forces.

PUBLIC LAW 512

Surveyors made a mistake in mapping major highways in Alaska, so Congress had to pass Public Law 512 to right things. Strips of land totaling 14 or 15 acres are all that is involved.

PUBLIC LAW 513

Public Law 513 requires publishers of magazines enjoying second-class mail privileges to file sworn statements of average number of copies going to paid subscribers. This always has been required of publishers of newspapers.

PUBLIC LAW 514

This authorizes the sale of 22 acres of land to Port Hueneme in California to help out in its harbor development program. Uncle Sam acquired the entire waterfront in World War II.

PUBLIC LAW 515

Water pollution in the historic Potomac River here in Washington is, as elsewhere, a hazard and a problem. Public Law 515 authorizes a sanitary sewer from Dulles International Airport to District of Columbia system.

PUBLIC LAW 516

New England fishing industry is in dire straits due to imports of frozen fish and aged trawlers needing replacement. Public Law 516 provides a $2.5 million program, part in subsidies to meet foreign ocmpetition, part in loans for construction of new and modern trawlers.

PUBLIC LAW 517

Our national forests are a valuable asset. Public Law 517 directs an administration of them on the basis of multiple use (recreation, range, timber, watershed, wildlife, and fish) so that they best will meet the needs of all the American people. It also provides for sustained yield of products.

PUBLIC LAW 518

H.R. 10646, $2.5 billion in new ships

American merchant marine has started on a replacement program calling for construction of 275 new vessels at cost of $2.5 billion under operating-differential subsidy contracts. Public Law 518 increases life expectancy of vessels from 20 to 25 years. Reason: increased costs and depressed freight rates (due to worldwide excess of ocean tonnage over demand) make amortization of construction loans under 25 years all but impossible.

PUBLIC LAW 519

Public Law 519(1) eliminates the requirement that bankruptcy claims be filed under oath, and (2) makes a false claim not under oath a crime.

PUBLIC LAW 520

This relates only to insurance companies operating in the District of Columbia. It regulates the issuance of variable annuity contracts, a recent insurance innovation.

PUBLIC LAW 521

Headquarters of Mount Rainier National Park is at Longmire, Wash., where average snow depth is 53 inches. Public Law 521 changes the location to Ashford, near the Nisqually entrance. Reason: less snow, Ashford seldom having as much as 4 inches.

PUBLIC LAW 522

Alien employees of international organizations are exempt from paying Federal income tax. In New York, headquarters of the United Nations, they are exempt from paying State income tax by a State law. Public Law 522 extends the immunity (from the District of Columbia income tax) to alien employees of the Organization of American States, and other international organizations, resident in Washington.

PUBLIC LAW 523

Public Law 523 reflects a growing public awareness to the loss of important prehistoric sites in the construction of dams and other large public works. It provides for the salvage of historical and archeological data in advance of construction in order to preserve the Nation's heritage.

PUBLIC LAW 524

Registration of births in the District of Columbia is pretty much a mess, as it was in Chicago until the Bureau of Vital Statistics of Cook County bent to it. Public Law 524 gives parents in the District 3 months in which to report name of newborn child for official recording.

PUBLIC LAWS 525, 526, 527, 528

These (as Public Law 524) apply only to the District of Columbia. Congress, as you know, serves Washington and the District both as city council and State legislature.

PUBLIC LAW 529

Public Law 529 authorizes the construction of a reservoir on Little River near Norman in Oklahoma to furnish water for municipal, domestic, and industrial purposes. Fourth of the population of Oklahoma lives within 50 miles of reservoir site and Tinker Air Force Base is in the area. Plans for the project include fish, wildlife, and recreational benefits.

PUBLIC LAW 530

Public Law 530 relates only to the District of Columbia and is another illustration of how the Congress serves the District of Columbia as a State legislature. It (1) provides for use of modern tables of mortality in connection with life insurance, and (2) allows policies on females to make allowances for the 3-year greater life expectancy. Many State legislatures already have similarly adopted recommendations of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners.

PUBLIC LAW 531

This establishes a Legal Aid Agency (annual cost $75,000) to provide lawyers for indigents in the courts of the District of Columbia. With 7,500 poor persons annually without adequate representation, situation was so bad House Report No. 1372 termed it "intolerable." Cook County for many years has had a public defender and staff.

PUBLIC LAW 532

H.R. 12117, Department of Agriculture appropriations

Public Law 532 carries the appropriations for fiscal 1961 for the Department of Agriculture. The appropriations total $1,323,963,600, $17,557,590 less than the budget.

This is for the regular activities of the Department only. The act also carries $1,226,500,000 capital funds for the Commodity Credit Corporation, and $1,443,634,000 for reimbursement for its special activities, including about $107 million for famine relief to friendly peoples and $881 million for sale of surplus products for foreign currencies. Thus the total appropriations for fiscal 1961 for agriculture are $3,994,075,600, some $141 million under the budget.

PUBLIC LAW 533

Public Law 533 saves Uncle Sam some money by eliminating 40 or 50 annual reports various departments of the Federal Government were required to make to Congress but which no longer served any useful purpose and often were duplications. They took time, personnel, and money to prepare. A good job of housecleaning, I would say.

PUBLIC LAW 534

Public Law 534 designates September of 1960 as "National Wool Month." Wool is grown in every State of the Union, including Alaska and Hawaii. The American wool industry, we were told, represents $5 billion a year measured by retail value of its products.

PUBLIC LAW 535

Public Law 535 makes a supplemental appropriation of $6 million for unemployment compensation for veterans and Federal employees for fiscal 1960. The demand was greater than anticipated—not a healthy economic sign.

PUBLIC LAW 536

In 1880 Congress authorized a harbor at Waukegan, 38 miles from Chicago. With the advent of the St. Lawrence Waterway the Waukegan Port Authority has ambitious plans for further development. Public Law 536 helps out. It permits Federal land conditionally ceded to the city to be transferred to the authority.

PUBLIC LAW 537

Pesticide chemicals are widely used on fresh fruits and vegetables to cut down staggering losses due to decay in marketing. Public Law 537 requires the shipping container to declare the presence of pesticide chemicals, but removes the requirement that the declaration shall be posted when the fruit and vegetables are out of the container and on display for retail sale. Food and Drug Administration, tried and true guardian of the public health, approved.

PUBLIC LAW 538

In 1897 Ford City in Pennsylvania built a sewer system into the Allegheny River. In 1928 a Federal dam on the Allegheny all but put the sewer system out of business. Public Law 538 waives the statute of limitations and permits Ford City to sue.

PUBLIC LAW 539

In 1958 Congress awarded members of the Lower Brule Sioux Indians $977,000 for 8,000 acres of tribal lands, taken for construction of a dam. Public Law 539 protects individual Indians from liens for money owed the Government when such would result in hardships.

PUBLIC LAW 540

This relieves minor members of the Otoe and Missouria Indian Tribes of having legal guardians appointed so that they can share in the million-dollar judgment against the United States. Per capita share is only $581. Cost of guardian appointment is $250.

PUBLIC LAW 541

Highland Falls in New York needs a new cemetery to bury its dead. Public Law 541 accommodates by permitting sale to the village of 8 acres of land of the Military Academy at West Point and across the street from the tank firing range used by the cadets.

PUBLIC LAW 542

This is stopgap legislation extending for another year the operation of steamship conferences with dual-rate exclusive patronage contracts, pending the completion of exhaustive inquiries by two committees of the House.

PUBLIC LAW 543

In 1958 the Standing Rock Sioux Indian Tribe was awarded $5,252,000 for land taken over for a dam. Public Law 543 protects needy individual Indians from liens for money owing the Government. Similar to Public Law 539.

PUBLIC LAW 544

This relates to the Crow Creek Sioux Tribe, which received $1,395,800 for land taken for dam construction, and is similar to Public Laws 539 and 543.

PUBLIC LAW 545

Crowded court dockets are delaying Federal watershed projects for months and sometimes years. Public Law 545 permits work to start on issue of court's order without waiting for final adjudication and transfer of property.

PUBLIC LAW 546

Public Law 546 brings the judicial review provisions of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 and the Food Additives Amendment of 1958 under the uniform provisions of Public Law 85–791 relating to the record on review of agency orders.

PUBLIC LAW 547

Public Law 547 extends from June 30, 1960, to August 1960, the effective date of the Humane Slaughter Act. Reason: delay in delivery of needed equipment ordered by packinghouses.

PUBLIC LAW 548

This authorizes the Kickapoo Indians of Oklahoma to use some $1,600 to their credit with the Government to rebuild their tribal community house.

PUBLIC LAW 549

Public Law 549 gives to the Zia and Jemez Pueblo Indians, in trust, 640 acres of land no longer needed by the Government to add to their 78,371 acres in New Mexico for cattle operations.

PUBLIC LAW 550

I think this will be of interest to you, as it was to me. Inhabitants of the territory of American Samoa are the only Americans who are not citizens. They are legally classified as American nationals. Hence they were not eligible for the scholarships and graduate fellowships of the National Science Foundation. Public Law 550 amends the Science Foundation Act to read: "Persons shall be selected for such scholarships and fellowships from among citizens or nationals of the United States."

PUBLIC LAW 551

In 1958 Congress directed the Administrator of General Services to sell to Wisconsin the property at La Crosse formerly used as a rifle range. But Wisconsin doesn't want to buy. So Public Law 551 repeals what Congress did in 1958. The property now probably will be sold to the higher bidder.

PUBLIC LAW 552

Public Law 552 extends for 3 years the time for holders of desert land entries on public lands in the Lower Palo Verde Mesa in California to complete reclamation and cultivation as required by the Desert Land Act.

Captive Nations Week

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HAROLD C. OSTERTAG

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. OSTERTAG. Mr. Speaker, a year ago the Congress adopted a resolution calling upon the President to proclaim "Captive Nations Week." This was done and the proclamation has been renewed this year. In the week of July 17, 1960, we will again observe Captive Nations Week.

The Soviet Union, whose fondness for branding other nations as imperialists represents the depths of hypocrisy and deceit, has forcibly thrust its evil Communist doctrine upon more than 20 nations throughout the world. It has subjugated these nations by force and subversion and created a Communist empire of nations which are, in truth, captives. We think of the fate of Hungary, Poland, East Germany, Czechoslovakia, the Baltic States, Bulgaria, and many more.

If these captive nations could choose, they would choose independence and freedom rather than Communist subjugation. For no nation has ever freely chosen communism. Who would prefer bondage to freedom? This evil system has gained power only by violence, subversion, deceit, and force.

We in the United States are well aware of the sentiments of these captive peoples. We understand and support their aspirations for liberty and independence. We know that so long as any nation is oppressed and subjugated, no nations can be entirely free.

The Captive Nations Resolution last year caused great consternation in the Soviet Union for it struck an area which the Communists anxiously desire to keep submerged. They know the captive nations represent a major weakness in the Communist system. Instead of the great monolithic system which the Communists pretend exists, the Communist empire is held together by chains.

We have faith that the desire for freedom and independence will not remain suppressed indefinitely by brute force. The United States supports the cause of freedom everywhere and the right of self-determination for all peoples. We look forward with hope to the day when these noble principles will again prevail in the captive nations of the world.

Captive Nations Week

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, by resolution of this Congress, and by proclamation of the President, July 17–23 is Captive Nations Week.

This solemn occasion is a truly historic one. The value and impact of the resolution was clearly demonstrated last July, when, as we recall, its passage evoked an explosive and vituperative reaction from Nikita Khrushchev.

The forthcoming observance will poignantly portray to the Nation as well as to the world, the plight of the nations who live in Soviet captivity. These nations, let us recall, do not just exist outside of the Soviet Union, where the heavy hand of Russia systematically exploits the resources and relentlessly treads upon the liberties of the valiant peoples of central Europe. The U.S.S.R. itself is built upon the captivity of 100 million non-Russian people who endure, in secret rebellion, the excesses of the Soviet Empire.

Let us remember that, despite the tactics of the police state, and despite merciless attempts at Russification, these peoples also struggle to retain the vestiges of their national identity. Brute force, which has achieved a surface unity, has at the same time only strengthened the will of the people for self-determination and freedom.

The depth of the desire for liberty was tragically demonstrated by the revolts in Poland and the bloodbath of Hungary. The people of the captive nations have never accepted the Soviet tyranny, nor have they forgotten the priceless freedom that once, however briefly, was theirs.

I anticipate that the week of July 17 will bring demonstrations, rallies, and parades throughout the Nation. By these observances Americans will give heart and courage to the peoples in captivity and will remind the world, as well as their oppressors, that we have forgotten their suffering no more than they have forgotten their precious dream of freedom.

When President Eisenhower issued the captive nations proclamation, he stated that such observances shall take place each year "until such time as freedom and independence shall have been achieved for all the captive nations of the world." Let us hope and pray that, with God's help, we shall soon see the day when the need for a Captive Nations Week exists no more.

Captive Nations Week, 1960

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FLORENCE P. DWYER
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mrs. DWYER. Mr. Speaker, a look at any map of the world through the eyes of political freedom will reveal an area extending eastward from East Germany, through Eastern Europe, European Russia, across the vastness of Asia, down into southeast Asia as far as North Vietnam, and across the China Sea to North Korea—a huge area of many countries and cultures and peoples.

These are the captive nations, and their many hundreds of millions of people are the captive peoples.

In the colors of political freedom, this large sector of the map is painted red—red for the color of international communism, red for the color of the blood shed in defense of lost freedoms.

Since 1917, Mr. Speaker, the process of Communist subjugation has gone on. One by one, nations have fallen to the twin weapons of communism: internal subversion and external force. In exchange for national independence, Moscow and Peiping have brought the most ruthless tyranny in history. Slavery and death have been the rewards of those who fought to preserve their freedom.

It is a grim and disheartening picture, Mr. Speaker. But it is a picture from which we must not look away. The lessons taught in the Ukraine, in Poland and Hungary, in China, Korea, and Tibet must be learned well and never forgotten.

This is the purpose of Captive Nations Week. This is the reason why the Congress authorized the designation of the third week in July as "Captive Nations Week," and why the President—acting under that authority—has proclaimed it so.

We owe it to ourselves and to our own freedom, and to our brothers who have lost their freedom, to rededicate ourselves at this time to the cause of freedom and justice throughout the world. Only by understanding what they are, how they can be lost and what can be done to strengthen them, can we be worthy of the cause.

The whole world looks to us for the leadership and the sense of direction which can bring our cause alive and rekindle in the hearts of people everywhere the hope and assurance of freedom and justice and true peace.

This is the moral of Captive Nations Week. This is the issue of our time.

Area Redevelopment

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LOUIS C. RABAUT
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, on May 4 of this year the House of Representatives once again passed an Area Redevelopment Act. Two days later the Senate passed the same bill and sent it to the White House for Presidential signature. Seven days after that the efforts of Congress to assist the depressed areas of this country were rewarded with a Presidential veto of this important legislation. It is perhaps significant that this veto came on Friday the 13th because it was certainly bad news for the unemployed persons throughout the country and for those many areas where unemployment and underemployment have become a chronic tragedy. Nor was this the first time that such a bill had been vetoed. You will recall that an area redevelopment bill was passed by Congress in 1958 only to be thwarted by Presidential veto. I wonder if you also recall this 1958 veto came at a time when the unemployment in Detroit had reached 18 percent of the work force. Think of it—18 percent. When you consider that unemployment at the end of April of this year was 8.1 percent of the labor force, you must remember that depressed area legislation was more than twice as significant when it was first vetoed.

To me, one of the most significant aspects of the passage of the Area Redevelopment Act of this year is that Congress has spoken once again and has once again made clear its feeling and intent on this question. The passage this year represents favorable action on this type of legislation in three consecutive sessions of Congress. A bill was passed in 1958, the Senate passed another bill last year, the House passed this Senate bill with some changes this year, and the Senate agreed to the changes and passed the House version within 2 days. The congressional action of this year has but reechoed the previous sentiments of Congress on this matter for all the Nation to hear. Considering that Congress expresses the will of the people of these United States, I ask you how, in good conscience, can the leaders of this Nation ignore or reject this will when it has been so clearly expressed and so consistently repeated?

One of the more frequent phrases used in describing the workings of the Congress is the phrase: "the legislative process." This phrase, however, has a cold and impersonal sound to it and makes the operations of the Congress sound something like the mechanical motions of automatic machinery. This, of course, is not how Congress works. A piece of legislation can be a personal thing with the Congressman who introduces it. This is the case with respect to area redevelopment legislation as far as I am concerned. As much as any bill that I have sponsored in my 24 years in Congress, the area redevelopment bills that I have sponsored in the past several Congresses are a personal thing with me. I was born in Detroit. I have lived here all my life. This is my city, just as it is your city. I have seen it grow. I know its people. I know its problems. And when it is afflicted with problems that only Congress can do something about, it is then that I feel the greatest pride in being the elected representative of the people of my district. This is the case with the conditions of chronic unemployment and underemployment that have come to be termed "depressed areas." Detroit is one of these areas and this is a problem that only Congress can solve. This is the reason that I have introduced and reintroduced area redevelopment bills. This is the reason I have testified again and again before various committees of the Congress and spoken on the floor of the House of Representatives in support of this legislation. I recall the last time I spoke in Congress on this subject. It was on May 4, this year—the same day that the House passed the Area Redevelopment Act. I said at that time that it is always gratifying to have one's efforts in behalf of needed legislation culminate in successful passage. But I said also that this is a type of gratification that goes far beyond personal satisfaction. Allow me, if you will, to repeat myself by quoting a few of my own sentences on that occasion because they will best explain the basic point I wish to make today:

> It reaches to the fundamental realization that in passing this bill we have extended the hand of assistance to millions of our fellow citizens so direly in need of help. This is the American way. We have always helped the fellow who is down. And at a time when we are doing so much to help such people in all parts of the world, there is certainly no reason why we should not help our own fellow citizens in this, their time of great need. This is the gratification of which I speak: the gratification that the American way has prevailed; that we have refused to turn our backs on the plight of our own countrymen; that we have decided to continue our great tradition of helping the down guy, instead of putting dollars above human values.

Area redevelopment legislation, as previously conceived and passed, is good legislation that answers a crying need in a sensible and realistic fashion. The Congress, in its time-tested wisdom, has recognized this fact. This recognition will take the form of action once again in the next Congress. I shall continue, in fact, I shall increase, my personal efforts in behalf of my own area redevelopment bill or any other area redevelopment bill that answers the problem in a direct and concrete manner. This is my determination and I think I can safely say that it is the determination of the Congress. The will of the people, as expressed through the Congress, cannot be ignored or discounted. We cannot, and we shall not, sacrifice the needs of millions of our fellow citizens on the altar of the balanced budget.

Bureau of Senior Citizens: An Immediate Necessity

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, in the past months we have seen national attention focused on the problem of medical care for the aged. An issue which has been too long neglected has finally received the emphasis it deserves. The scope of the problem has been thoroughly investigated, the need for a solution has been firmly established, and a number of divergent plans have been proposed and explored.

The degree of attention which this problem has received leaves us every expectation that the problem will be solved when Congress returns in August. I am personally hopeful that the legislative solution will be an effective and adequate one, which is fully cognizant of the medical needs of the senior citizen and which is soundly based in a workable financial framework.

The impending solution to this problem, however, does not permit us to ignore the complex of other problems which our elder citizens presently face. Adequate health insurance is only the first step. Financial security, housing, employment opportunities and psychological adjustment are all areas which still require direct and vigorous action.

These are problems which concern every single individual in the United States. Not only the 16 million people who are now over 65, but the rapidly increasing number of people who approach retirement age, as well as the increasing number of families who support and care for aging parents, are deeply and poignantly affected.

How we choose to meet the problems thus created is a primary challenge of present-day America. These problems can no longer be ignored or pushed aside.

I do not see how anyone, for example, can fail to be stirred by the following plea from a typical senior citizen who, having completed almost a half century of gainful employment, has now reached the age of 70. This individual writes:

> Has the State or Federal Government any aid for indigent or about to become indigent folks, without too much embarrassment?
>
> I would like to use myself as an example. On July 1, 1950, the General Electric Co. retired me because I became 65 years of age too soon. The Federal social security allowed me at that time has worked itself up to where I get $91.30 and my wife's allowance is $45.20. In addition to that I receive a General Electric pension of $49.80 which brings the three payments to a total sum of $186.30.
>
> The above amount is hardly enough to pay the present rent, food, clothing, gas, electricity, telephone bills, medical care, dental and optical costs and personal tax.
> The different governments have failed to take care of their old taxpayers and the rise of cost of living has been the same to them as those who are young enough to be employed and receive increase in their earnings.

One of the greatest difficulties, in my opinion, is the fact that the elder population has no official spokesman to represent them and their needs. There is at present no executive department or office which focuses full-time attention on our senior citizens. The absence of such a central agency may well be partially responsible for the fact that the problems of the elderly are still so far from solution. It may be, indeed, that the medical care situation might have resolved itself before this, had we had a permanent agency with the responsibility for stimulating interest and for undertaking positive action on a national scale.

It is for this reason that I have introduced a bill to establish a Bureau of Senior Citizens. This Bureau is to function solely with regard to the problems of the senior citizen, and with the interrelationships of their needs. It will serve as a central clearinghouse for studies, programs and projects relating to the senior population. In addition, the Bureau shall be required to bring the needs of senior citizens to national attention, as well as to make specific recommendations by way of solution.

The primary responsibility for caring for our senior population must, of necessity, remain with the States. For this reason, my bill provides that one of the major functions of the Bureau will be to work closely with States and local communities, make available informational and technical assistance, and stimulate the development of local programs. The Bureau will also administer Federal grants, provided for in this bill, to assist the States in the planning and operation of their projects.

The return of Congress gives us an excellent opportunity to take concrete action during this session. I should like to see this bill enacted prior to the White House Conference on the Aging, which will be held in January of 1961. The studies and recommendations of the Conference can provide the Bureau with an immediate base of information from which to proceed, and at the same time will insure that the results of the Conference will have some measure of continuity.

The enactment of a bill to establish a central bureau of senior citizens should not, of course, preclude us from taking steps to solve those problems to which we can now supply ready solutions.

We know, for example, that the financial means of many of our senior citizens are pitifully inadequate, and that the answer lies in liberalizing the social security program. We know, too, that housing facilities to meet the economic, physical, and social requirements of elderly people are in most instances unavailable, and that the answer lies in an expanded public and private housing effort on a national scale.

As we meet these specific problems, let us at the same time give thought to the establishment of a full-time agency which will concentrate upon the "Geshtalt." We need an authoritative office which will speak out on behalf of those 16 million people who are over 65, and those 49 million over 45, whose interrelated problems cry out for prompt attention and solution.

Hon. Tom Martin, of Iowa

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS C. HENNINGS, JR.
OF MISSOURI
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a statement by me on the retirement from the Senate of the Honorable THOS. E. MARTIN, of Iowa.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HENNINGS ON THE RETIREMENT OF HON. TOM MARTIN, OF IOWA

I wish to join with my colleagues in the Senate and House of Representatives in expressing regret that my friend, TOM MARTIN, is retiring from the Senate this year. Specializing in matters dealing with taxation, agriculture, and national defense, he has made many steady, significant, and lasting contributions in these areas.

He is a man of courage, integrity, and understanding. A good and solid citizen with human sympathy, he has served exceedingly well the people of America and his constituents in Iowa. The people of Iowa whom he has represented for 22 years, as well as his fellow Members of Congress, will miss his honorable and constructive service.

TOM MARTIN has left an indelible imprint on the destiny of the Nation. Modest, firm, and skillful, he has been faithful in his devotion to Congress. He typifies the public servant who comes to Congress and diligently attends to business without seeking publicity or headlines. He has worked untiringly to protect the liberties of our Nation.

As he retires to private life, he carries with him the continuing admiration and affection of his colleagues on both sides of the aisle. I fully understand and respect his desire to return to private life after so many years of dedicated public service. He has earned the best of everything. I wish for him and for his loved ones many more years of good health, great happiness and success.

Puerto Rican Constitution Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ABRAHAM J. MULTER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, on July 25, 1952, the people of Puerto Rico entered into a new relationship with the United States. On that day the island became the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or, as the Puerto Ricans call it, an associated free state.

This transformation took place in accordance with a freely negotiated compact between the Puerto Ricans and the Federal Government. Under its terms, the islanders drafted a constitution which was approved first by the U.S. Congress and then by an overwhelming majority of Puerto Rico's population.

Our own ANTONIO FERNÓS-ISERN, Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico here in the House of Representatives, served as chairman of the convention that drafted the constitution. Knowing and admiring Mr. FERNÓS-ISERN as we do for his very great abilities, we are not surprised that the convention he led produced a constitution imbued with political wisdom.

This year we celebrate the eighth anniversary of that constitution, the eighth year of a new and exciting era for our fellow citizens, the Puerto Ricans. American troops first landed on Puerto Rico 62 years ago, and in 1917 Puerto Ricans were granted American citizenship. From the day of the first landing the island's inhabitants have been moving inexorably toward that fuller understanding and experience of democracy embodied in the American ideal. They have dedicated themselves to a mastery of local autonomy that is both the root and the fruit of the American way of life.

We need look no further than the preamble of the Puerto Rican Constitution for a brilliant summary of the lofty aims of these people:

> We consider as determining factors in our life our citizenship of the United States of America and our aspiration continually to enrich our democratic heritage in the individual and collective enjoyment of its rights and privileges; our loyalty to the principles of the Federal Constitution; the coexistence in Puerto Rico of the two great cultures of the American Hemisphere; our fervor for education; our faith in justice; our devotion to the courageous, industrious, and peaceful way of life; our fidelity to individual human values above and beyond social position, racial differences, and economic interests; and our hope for a better world based on these principles.

With these words Puerto Rico proclaimed its new political status. A new sense of stability, confidence, and urgency accompanied the birth.

In its role as a Commonwealth, Puerto Rico has maintained complete control of its own internal affairs and, at the same time, has enjoyed the benefits of United States protection in foreign relations, defense, and full American citizenship.

The desire and ability for self-government on the part of the Puerto Rican people had long been evident. With the adoption of their constitution, they assumed responsibility for that local control that has been one of the most important factors in the growth of democracy in the United States. In the operation of that constitution, Puerto Ricans have demonstrated beyond question the political equilibrium and community enterprise that is the mark of a mature and progressive society.

This maturity is in no way better illustrated than in the choice of leaders Puerto Ricans have made. I have already mentioned the splendid work of our colleague, Mr. FERNÓS-ISERN. Puerto Ricans have also been fortunate to have in their midst a towering political figure.

Gov. Luis Muñoz Marín served as Puerto Rico's first elected Governor before the Commonwealth and continues in that office to this day, holding the significant distinction of governing the island for a longer period than any other current executive in Latin America. And he has maintained his tenure through the support of large majorities of his people, as exhibited in free elections.

The ideal of leadership in newly self-governing areas, Governor Muñoz Marín deserves the primary credit for Puerto Rico's current stability and, more especially, for Puerto Rico's phenomenal economic and social development.

Statistics dramatically illuminate these advances. Puerto Rico's death rate decreased 62 percent between 1940 and 1957; it is now lower than that of the continental United States. Puerto Rico's per capita income has leaped so far upward that it is now the highest in the Caribbean area and second in all of Latin America only to that of oil-rich Venezuela. Family income almost quadrupled between 1940 and 1956.

Under Operation Bootstrap Puerto Rico has been setting world records in raising itself from the depths of poverty and illiteracy. This great effort, though it still leaves Puerto Rico far from being a wealthy state, nevertheless has elevated the island to a position that is the envy of underdeveloped countries all over the world. Representatives of these nations come regularly to Puerto Rico to study the methods by which this miracle of growth was accomplished, and still continues.

Puerto Rico's economic problems once seemed unsurmountable. The island was cursed, as are many Caribbean lands, with a one crop economy, a limited supply of land, and almost no industry worthy of the name. Puerto Rico's leaders recognized that the land could never become prosperous without industry. The Government exerted itself, therefore, to attract American firms to set up branch factories on the island, offering as incentives capital loans, factory buildings at low rent, the promise to train labor in the necessary skills, and 10-year tax exemptions. The net gain of more than 400 new factories since the introduction of Operation Bootstrap is testimony to the skill, initiative, and determination of the Puerto Rican people.

These qualities convince me that we need not fear for the economic future of the island. Puerto Rico can be made prosperous, and Puerto Ricans have demonstrated that they have the skill and intelligence to accomplish that metamorphosis.

The Commonwealth's political future needs more thought on our part. The exact legal nature of Puerto Rico's status has not yet been determined by our courts. But whatever that status is, we know that numerous voices have been raised for change. Some advocate independence. Others press for statehood.

We must never forget that Puerto Ricans are American citizens, living on American soil. We must never forget that they have made significant contributions to our culture, in the arts, sciences, and professions. We must never forget that thousands of Puerto Ricans served valiantly in the Armed Forces of the United States during two World Wars and the Korean conflict.

My conviction is that we must consider carefully all aspects of Puerto Rico's political relationship with the United States. If we find that Puerto Rico is ready for statehood, and if we find that the Puerto Ricans sincerely desire statehood, it is our duty to grant such status to the island.

These problems will, I am certain, be considered at the proper time, and with sympathetic attention. I want to reiterate my congratulations to the Puerto Rican people on the anniversary of their constitution and to wish them every success for the future.

Adm. John S. McCain, Jr.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN P. SAYLOR
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed emotions that I have just learned that Adm. John S. McCain, Jr., is leaving his assignment as Chief of Legislative Affairs for the Navy. The admiral is moving to duty as Commander Amphibious Group II in Norfolk. We on Capitol Hill are all sorry to see him go, and want to take this opportunity to wish him happiness and success in his new assignment. Members of Congress have come to know Admiral McCain as an able and enthusiastic friend and he has been a great aid to them in conducting their legislative duties. He has never been too busy to lend assistance at any time on matters pertaining to the Navy.

Admiral McCain has an outstanding war record as commanding officer of submarines during World War II, during which time he won the silver star medal and the bronze star medal and two letters of commendation for meritorious duty in both the Atlantic and Pacific. Admiral McCain has always upheld the finest traditions of the Navy as exemplified by his father who is remembered by many as an outstanding carrier task force commander of World War II. As he leaves this assignment, we all wish him farewell and Godspeed.

First 25 Public Laws of Second Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. BARRATT O'HARA

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, since I have been in the Congress I regularly have reported to my constituents in the Second District of Illinois new public laws as they were enacted. Necessarily, in the digesting of the new laws I have had to put in many hours of night work, since attention to my legislative duties afforded no time during the hours of the day. I have felt, however, that the effort was well worthwhile since, by the inclusion of relatively minor legislation as well as that of major importance, the reports gave to my constituents at home a better understanding of their Congress and the nature and scope of its work. Furthermore, the reports served to give notice to my constituents of new laws affecting them and which otherwise might be unknown to them for a long time. Often reports of new laws were mailed my constituents within minutes after their official numbering.

For the convenience of my colleagues, and others, who wish to have for reference a digest of the laws of the 2d session of the 86th Congress, I am extending my remarks to include Public Laws 384 to 408, the first 25 public laws of the 2d session of the 86th Congress. In the 1st session of the 86th Congress there were 383 public laws enacted; hence the numbering for the 2d session starts with 384.

The digest of laws follows:

PUBLIC LAW 384

S. 2231, protection of childhood

Public Law 384 authorizes an appropriation of $100,000 for fiscal 1961 and 1962 to meet the obligation of the United States as a member of the Inter-American Children's Institute. Our country pays 40 percent of the expenses of the Institute, other countries on the American hemisphere a total of 60 percent. The organization, formerly known as the American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood (a name pretty hard to handle in these busy days, even when initialed AIIPC), appears to have done a good job during the years in a joint hemispheric undertaking. Its most recent achievement was a comparative study of family laws and the problem of abandoned children in the American countries, also a study of correctional systems in Latin America and a translation into Spanish of much helpful material previously available only in English.

As all peoples share a common interest in the welfare of children our cooperation with our American neighbors in this work probably pays richer dividends than much larger investments in winning their hearts and minds. Anyway, I do not see how we abruptly could draw out of the joint program for the welfare of all children of the hemisphere without unfriendly repercussions.

PUBLIC LAW 385

S. 623, veterans and wheat

Veterans of World Wars I and II, homesteading in the Tulelake area in California, find that durum wheat is one of the few crops that can be grown successfully. Public Law 385 increases their acreage for crop years 1960 and 1961 provided the additional acres are planted with durum wheat, which is in large demand by manufacturers of macaroni and spaghetti and in limited supply because it is grown in only five States.

PUBLIC LAW 386

S. 2379, Nez Perce Indians

In 1909 the United States paid $562 for 11 acres of land in Idaho as a site for a day school for the Nez Perce Tribe of Indians. Now other arrangements have been made for educating the Indians, and the land is surplus. Public Law 386 donates it to the tribe, which expects to make some money for tribal welfare from tourists. Reason: The final link of a historic highway following the route of the Lewis and Clark Expedition from St. Louis to Oregon will be completed in 1961 and the former school property will be a main tourist attraction because the Lewis and Clark Expedition spent an entire winter there. Perhaps someday when you take the family touring along this historic highway you'll contribute your bit to the welfare of the Nez Perce Indians and get the thrill of standing where the hardy pioneers spent that hard winter when the history of the Northwest was in the making.

PUBLIC LAW 387

S. 713, Zion National Park in Utah

Public Law 387 adds some 3,420 acres to the Zion National Park in Utah which the Department of the Interior describes as containing "a grandeur of colorful canyons and mesa scenery that ranks high among the superlative scenic areas of the world." The additional land will serve to preserve a notable terraced lava field and provide more grounds for campers.

Your Representative consistently has voted for legislation that makes the great out of doors available to the people and for national parks and historic shrines that dramatize for visiting tourists the story of our country and its development. He is cosponsor in the House of Senator DOUGLAS' bill to enclose the priceless scenic and geological treasures of the dunes within a national park. Although opposition is formidable, hope has not been abandoned.

PUBLIC LAW 388

H.R. 8171, San Francisco-Oakland Bridge

Public Law 388 permits the use of tolls collected on the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge for the construction and operation of a rail transit crossing across the Bay of San Francisco. Original plans contemplated use of the bridge both as a rail transit crossing and a highway crossing. But highway traffic has grown so tremendously it now needs all the space. So under the new plan the rails will go underground, crossing the bay by tunnel and leaving the bridge entirely to highway traffic. No Federal funds are involved, and the bridge will be toll free when the cost of the combined project (bridge plus tunnel) has been paid off.

PUBLIC LAW 389

H.R. 9664, stabilizing tobacco prices

Tobacco growing is the chief source of income for 800,000 American farm families. The industry has been adversely affected in competitive foreign markets by an excessive price established under the price control formula. So the growers began by voluntarily reducing their plantings, then petitioned Congress for exemption from the operation of a parity formula that would force tobacco prices more and more into an unrealistic and noncompetitive position. Public Law 389 is intended to serve this end. It stabilizes support levels against disruptive fluctuations, keeps the support level for 1960 at the same level as 1959 and thereafter ties the parity price of tobacco directly to the parity index (the cost of things farmers buy) rather than to the 10-year moving average of farm prices.

From our standpoint as urban dwellers, where much tobacco is consumed but none grown, interest in Public Law 389 is that it will keep tobacco prices stabilized and (very important to all taxpayers) substantially reduce the drain on the Commodity Credit Corporation, the high cost of which is a matter of concern.

PUBLIC LAW 390

S. 2033, placer mining

When the mining law of 1872 was enacted placer mining was a simple operation of washing gravel and separating gold. That romantic era long has passed into the story books. Today mining of gold in the United States is a lost art. Placer mining now is concerned with the production of nonmetallic minerals (gypsum, limestone, quartzite and related clay minerals and building materials) for industrial use.

Instead of the simple washbasin with which the placer miner worked in the old gold days, there is need of extensive building, complex machinery and storage facilities that run into the millions of dollars. These require space. So Public Law 390 provides for the inclusion of 5 acres of nonmineral land (adjacent to the site of the actual mining) in patents to placer claims, same as permitted in patents to lode claims. How the world has moved since 1872.

PUBLIC LAW 391

S. 2061, hunt for phosphate in public domain

At the present time there are 73 leases for phosphate in lands belonging to the United States, covering a total of 48,418 acres. The phosphate found in some of the land is of a low grade, and there is the difficult problem of getting economical electric power. Public law 391 is intended to improve the picture by encouraging prospecting for new locations of phosphate deposits.

It provides for permits to prospect and explore for phosphate in up to 2,560 acres of the public domain with the inducement that if phosphate is discovered within 2 years the permittee shall have the preferential right to a lease of the land. The 2-year period may be extended to 6 years on a proper showing of diligence and need of further exploration.

PUBLIC LAW 392

S. 2268, giving land back to Indians

In 1877 the Fort Apache Military Post in Arizona was established on 7,579 acres of land of the White Mountain Apache Indian Reservation. In 1922 the military post was abandoned and the land turned over to the Theodore Roosevelt Indian School. Today only 410 of the 7,579 acres are being used for school purposes. Public Law 392 turns back the remainder to the Indians.

PUBLIC LAW 393

S. 2431, Kansas centennial

Kansas will be 100 years old on January 29, 1961, and Public Law 393 anticipates the happy event by authorizing the Federal mint to strike out suitable medals and sell them to the Kansas Centennial Commission for not less than cost, including overhead and everything.

History of Kansas really goes back to 1541 when Francisco Vasquez de Coronado led Spanish adventurers in a hunt for gold in the fabled cities of Cibola. Lewis and Clark, Fremont, Kit Carson, passed through Kansas. In Medicine Lodge in Kansas a famous Indian treaty was signed and from Medicine Lodge later came Carry A. Nation, a lady who made her hatchet more famous than the tomahawk. Her hatchet smashed right and left at demon rum in the fight for prohibition and at least once a week made the first pages of the Nation's newspapers.

Also from Kansas came "Sockless Jerry" Simpson, a colorful Member of the Congress, Lewellan, literally taken from the plow to become Governor in the era of the Populist Party, smiling Charles Curtis who became Vice President of the United States, and Al Landon, who tried for the White House but fell by the roadside under the magic of F.D.R.

The finishing touch to the greatness of Kansas was painted by Senator SCHOEPPEL, in his day an all-American football great, in this language:

"Gunslingers and marshals known throughout the world—Wyatt Earp, Wild Bill Hickock, and Matt Dillon—tangled in the cowboy capitals of Dodge City, Abilene, and Wichita." Abilene was the boyhood home of President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Kansas is a great and a proud State, and I am sure we all will join heartily in 1961 in celebration of her centennial. Looking back over the last century of the history of our country gives us confidence in facing the challenges of the next century.

PUBLIC LAW 394

S. 2454, pony express

Public Law 394 authorizes the mint to strike 500,000 medals for sale at cost to the National Pony Express Centennial Commission, which is cooperating with the Federal Government and eight States of the Union in commemorating the 100th anniversary of the founding of the pony express.

I found the story of the pony express, as related to us, intensely interesting. It was described as one of the most colorful episodes in the history of our country and of far greater significance than merely a life of glorious adventure to some 80 young men so often depicted in western films. It served to bind the country together, proved the superiority of the central (rather than the southern) route across the continent, and paved the way for the first railroad to span the continent 9 years later.

The pony express only existed 19 months, from April 3, 1860, when the first buckskin pouch left St. Joseph, Mo., to the completion of the first telegraph system across the Nation November 20, 1861, when the last delivery left Sacramento, Calif., eastward bound. Buchanan's farewell address and Lincoln's first inaugural address were carried by the pony express, from Missouri to California in 8 days. Usually, however, the 1,966-mile journey took much longer.

Here is how it was done:

1. There were some 80 riders, average age 20, some including the famous Buffalo Bill, barely 15; they were carefully selected, from youths of slender build weighing not over 130 pounds (one exception weighed 160) and trained for constant vigilance against Indians and bandits; risks and salaries were equally great, the riders receiving $50 to $150 a month, fabulous amounts 100 years ago.

2. Relay stations, totaling 190, were spaced 10 miles apart. Here the riders stopped a maximum of 2 minutes to change to fresh mounts and were off again with the wind. The men rode in relays, changing horses at each station. The usual day's stint was 75 miles.

3. Russell, Majors & Waddell, a private company in the express and freight business, poured into the venture an enormous outlay of men, horses, and equipment. It was reimbursed by the Government, somewhat as air companies are now, for service in carrying the mails.

This coming summer there will be a reenactment of the pony express run from St. Joseph to Sacramento. It will follow the original route through Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, and California. I thought you would like to have this briefing in advance.

PUBLIC LAW 395

Senate Joint Resolution 115, Pan American Health Organization

Pan American Health Organization, with headquarters in Washington since 1902, when it was formed, is the oldest continuing international health organization in the world. It now is the regional office of the World Health Organization. Public Law 395 authorizes the purchase of land in Washington (estimated cost, $875,000) as the site for a new $4 million building the organization plans to erect with its own funds. This assures PAHO headquarters remaining in the United States despite attractive inducements to relocate in Mexico, Panama, and Peru.

In the 58 years of its existence PAHO has made a notable record (1) in combating disease, especially yellow fever and malaria, (2) in strengthening friendly relations between the United States and her sister Republics, and (3) in furthering the concept of hemispheric solidarity.

Money for use in conquering disease plagues and in protecting the health of people is the wisest investment we make in promoting real friendship with the peoples of the world. I am sure you will agree.

PUBLIC LAW 396

S. 1712, Motor Boat Act

In 1958 Congress strengthen the Motor Boat Act to assure greater safety in the operation of small motor boats, the number of which has multiplied many times. The law applied to "the United States, its Territories and the District of Columbia." That by inadvertence left the Virgin Islands, Guam, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico without the protection of required life preservers and fire extinguishing apparatus since they are neither States nor territories. Public Law 396 extends the act to include them.

You will be interested to know that the correct legislative language to include all the United States is: "The United States, its territories and possessions, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia."

As I mentioned in an earlier report, we have now run out of territories, but we do have Guam and the Virgin Islands, which are classified as unincorporated territories, in reality possessions. I am supporting legislation to give Guam and the Virgin Islands nonvoting representation in the House and also the proposal of House representation for the District of Columbia. That I think is in the tradition of our country.

PUBLIC LAW 397

S. 2483, Weather Bureau in the Arctic

Public Law 397 takes yesterday's administrative handcuffs from the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Weather Bureau in the world of today by authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to fix the rate of pay for extra compensation for such jobs as going into the arctic region to conduct meteorological investigations for the Weather Bureau or going to sea as bombers and fathometer readers for the Coast and Geodetic Survey. An old statute fixed a ceiling for certain work of $1 a day. Trouble was where to find qualified $1-a-day personnel.

PUBLIC LAW 398

S. 2185, Saga of the "Meredith Victory"

Public Law 398 authorizes a Gallant Ship Unit Citation and plaque to the steamship Meredith Victory and a citation ribbon bar to each member of her crew participating in the saga of December of 1950.

This is an heroic story of the sea that will live forever in the history of the American merchant marine. When the Meredith Victory reached the harbor of Hungnam in Korea on December 21, 1950, the city was under enemy gunfire, surrounded by Communist troops with the word out that all persons in the city when captured would be beheaded.

The captain of the SS Meredith Victory instructed the crew to load evacuees until no more could be taken aboard. The vessel was small, a 7,600-ton cargo ship with accommodations for only 12 passengers. In all, over 1,400 Korean civilians were packed aboard, goodness knows how. There was no doctor, no interpreter, very little food, very little water. The vessel sailed 3 days, part of the time over a minefield, with the ever-present danger of being blown into bits. During the trip no one died, but five babies were born. Thus when it docked at Pusan on Christmas eve it discharged five more passengers than it had taken on at Hungnam.

I was impressed by the language of Vice Admiral Will, commander of the Military Sea Transportation Service, in recommending passage of the measure:

"Few epics of the sea captured the imagination as did the saga of the Meredith Victory. She not only saved the actual lives of 1,400 persons on a single voyage, but even more than that, she and her gallant crew became symbols of the American attitude that human lives are more precious than ideologies."

PUBLIC LAW 399

S. 601, Bardwell Reservoir in Texas

Storms and floods in the Trinity River Basin in northeast Texas occasion an average $500,000 annual loss. Public Law 399 authorizes the construction of the $7 million Bardwell Reservoir on Waxahachie Creek in the river basin, local interests contributing some $2 million. The legislation was recommended by the Army Engineers, upon whom we depend for guidance in matters of flood control.

PUBLIC LAW 400

S. 1159, slum clearance in District

Public Law 400 repeals the provision that the District of Columbia Housing Authority cannot purchase land for slum clearance at private sale at a price exceeding 30 percent of assessed value, which is about half of market value. Reason: few owners would sell by negotiation at a price 15 percent of market value and the Authority was forced into costly and time-consuming condemnation proceedings.

PUBLIC LAW 401

H.R. 24, Indian land in Nevada

This gives back to the Fort McDermitt Paiute and Shoshone Indian Tribe in Nevada 160 acres of land used from 1905 to 1956 as the site of an Indian boarding school. The school now is closed.

PUBLIC LAW 402

This permits the entry duty free of all ground, powdered or granulated seaweed on the same basis as seaweed kelp. Principally affected is seaweed of the Irish moss variety, used by American processors in the production of a powdered extractive for jellying and thickening foods.

PUBLIC LAW 403

In 1860 the surveyor of the lands of the Lac du Flambeau Indian Reservation in Wisconsin by error omitted some 45 acres from his plat. A century later the Congress of the United States had the job of quieting title to the land the surveyor overlooked. Public Law 403 permits the tribe to sell the land to the present occupants at fair market value.

PUBLIC LAW 404

In 1951 the construction of the Platoro Dam and Reservoir in Colorado was completed, but unprecedented droughts prevented its utilization for irrigation. Hence the Conejos Water Conservancy District was unable to meet the first of its 40 annual repayments to the Government on the cost of the construction. Public Law 404 extends the repayment periods for 5 years. It is expected that with this help and improved conditions the debt eventually will be paid in full.

PUBLIC LAW 405

H.R. 7456, casein

Public Law 405 extends for 3 years the suspension of import duty on casein. Edible casein is made from skim milk, and since 1952 the milk price support program has discouraged the conversion of skim milk into casein. Industrial casein, which is almost entirely imported, is used in the manufacture of coated paper, cold water paints, and mucilage.

PUBLIC LAW 406

H.R. 4483, lands for Geological Survey

I was interested to learn the Geological Survey maintains an invaluable record of ground water conditions by measuring the fluctuations of water levels in some 12,000 wells throughout the country.

Unfortunately, most of the wells are privately owned and can be closed to use by the Geological Survey at will of their owners. When this happens the Survey's work is badly jammed up. Public Law 406 sensibly authorizes the Survey to purchase the sites of the wells so that its good work can go on uninterrupted.

PUBLIC LAW 407

H.R. 5270, returning gift to the giver

In 1949 the Metropolitan Water District of Salt Lake City, Utah, gave some 8 acres of land to the Federal Government for a proposed project that never materialized. Public Law 407 returns the land to the giver.

PUBLIC LAW 408

H.R. 7889, rice-marketing quotas

Public Law 408 provides for rice-marketing quotas when the supply is normal instead of 110 percent of normal. Marketing quotas are designed to result in a normal supply, and quotas based upon a normal supply plus 10 percent in any year can result in excessive plantings and an abnormal supply the next year.

To us in urban areas the good news in Public Law 408 is that it will reduce the cost to the Commodity Credit Corporation and thus lighten the taxpayers' burden.

The Communist Conspiracy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES S. GUBSER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 2, 1960

Mr. GUBSER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I submit a speech which I gave before the United Veterans Council in San Jose, Calif., on Memorial Day, entitled "The Communist Conspiracy":

THE COMMUNIST CONSPIRACY

(By the Honorable CHARLES S. GUBSER)

We meet today to honor those who have given their lives in the defense of our country.

We meet under another great cloud of international tension and view shattered hopes which fell when a shameless ruler in the Kremlin used the U–2 as a readymade excuse for a decision he had already made—to torpedo the summit conference and with it the hopes of the world for peace.

There is only one way in which we can truly honor our war dead and that is to rededicate ourselves today to the preservation of the things for which they died.

They died to preserve liberty. Today we must rededicate ourselves to the same purpose.

Preservation of liberty requires strength—the strength to meet and conquer military aggression.

The much discussed U–2 plane flight to a depth of 1,300 miles over Russia clearly shows that our military strength has been underestimated in many circles. Our Strategic Air Command has been telling us for years that they have the ability to penetrate and destroy Russia. This ability has been described in detail to those of us who have access to classified material because of our membership on certain committees and it has also been given to the general public. But for some reason or other some have chosen to disregard the facts.

The U–2 incident shows that Russia can be penetrated and can be destroyed.

It is important to mention here that most criticism about our military defense system has been of the so-called missile gap. While it is true that Russia does possess more ICBM's than do our forces, it is also true that when everything is taken into consideration—all missiles, all planes, all ships, and all ability to retaliate, the United States is now, and will remain a superior force to that of the Soviet Union.

But there is another strength far less dramatic and far more difficult to achieve which we need if we are to preserve the liberty which the men we honor today fought for and earned. This is the strength to resist subversion.

I am sorry to say that I have serious doubts about our ability to resist Communist subversion. I never fear the ability of the American people to resist aggression when they expect it. This is the reason our people have willingly voted $40 billion defense budgets; because we know of the danger from Russian armament. But where the U–2 flights have given us the intelligence and the information necessary to build military strength, we have no reconnaissance flights to show us the strength and the danger of internal subversion. What small effort has been directed to alerting the American people of this danger from a Communist conspiracy has, I am sorry to say, been shot down by our own people.

In the book, "A Night to Remember," the story is told of the five iceberg warnings sent by wireless to the steamship Titanic. When the sixth message, "Look out for the icebergs," came in, the Titanic's wireless operator wired back, "Shut up, I'm busy." Thirty-five minutes later the ship, whose captain had said, "God himself could not sink it," was sinking.

The phrase "Remember Pearl Harbor" should remind us that we were cocksure and complacent before the afternoon of December 7, 1941. The much-maligned Dies committee reports of Japanese espionage by fishing vessels had been ridiculed as headline hunting—much as some of the effort of today to alert the public to the Communist conspiracy is also ridiculed. We even ignored the messages we intercepted in the broken Japanese code.

I well remember the famous commentator, Fulton Lewis, Jr., speaking in the San Jose Civic Auditorium in November of 1941. Asked about the possibility of a war with Japan he replied, "I can best answer that with a bit of blank verse. 'That noise you hear in the Orient, them ain't sabers, neighbor, them's knees'."

Since the close of World War II distinguished Americans have been warning us and one cannot help but wonder on this Memorial Day of 1960 if we shall heed these warnings.

In his speech to the 1957 national convention of the American Legion, Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the FBI, said, "To dismiss lightly the existence of the subversive threat in the United States is to deliberately commit national suicide. In some quarters we are surely doing just that."

Communist doctrine is known to be founded upon conspiracy. It has not changed.

The Communist master plan for world conquest was stated by Lenin in these words, "First we will take Eastern Europe, then the masses of Asia, then we will encircle the United States, which will be the last bastion of capitalism. We will not have to attack. It will fall like an overripe fruit into our hands."

On another occasion Lenin added, "As long as capitalism remains, we cannot live in peace. In the end one or the other will triumph."

In a speech to the Lenin School of Political Warfare in 1931 Dmitri Manuilski, at one time presiding officer of the United Nations Security Council, said, "War to the hilt between communism and capitalism is inevitable. Today of course we are not strong enough to attack. * * * So we shall begin by launching the most spectacular peace movement on record. * * * The capitalistic countries, stupid and decadent * * * will leap at another chance to be friends. As soon as their guard is down we shall smash them with our clenched fist."

Georgi Dimitrov advised the Lenin School of Political Warfare how to make use of innocents and dupes as he called them. "As Soviet power grows there will be a greater aversion to Communist parties everywhere. So we must practice the techniques of withdrawal. Never appear in the foreground; let our friends do the work. * * * A university professor, who without being a party member, lends himself to the interest of the Soviet Union, is worth more than a hundred men with party cards. A writer of reputation, or a retired general, are worth more than 500 poor devils who don't know any better than to get themselves beaten up by the police."

Have these views so long held by Communists changed in recent years?

As late as September 17, 1955, Nikita Khrushchev warned us: "If anyone thinks that our smiles mean abandonment of the teachings of Marx, Engels, Lenin, he is deceiving himself cruelly. Those who expect this to happen might just as well wait for a shrimp to learn how to whistle."

On November 18, 1956, the same Khrushchev said, "Whether you like it or not history is on our side. We will bury you."

And just a few weeks ago in Paris, Khrushchev heaped insults upon our President and the American people as he dashed the hopes of peace-loving people before the summit conference even commenced.

I don't believe anyone in his right mind can say that Communist intentions have changed—nor have Communist techniques.

There is a Communist conspiracy. And it is well protected by our own law.

It is ironic that the very liberties, which the men we honor on this Memorial Day died to preserve, have been twisted and perverted to protect and shelter subversives and Communists who would destroy that liberty. I speak of the new interpretation of the commonly used phrase "civil liberties."

Traditionally our interpretation of an individual's rights was to consider them sacred except when they were in conflict with the rights of the Nation or the rights of other people. Under this concept of individual liberty we are prohibited from dumping garbage on our neighbor's front lawn because such an act would endanger the health of others. The same concept prohibits us from driving too fast because in so doing we place others in jeopardy. But the new concept of individual rights and civil liberties seems to be that they are supreme even above the rights and the best interest of the Nation. Even our courts have held that the individual has the right to engage in subversion against his government. Look at some of our recent court decisions.

Our Supreme Court has denied the right of States to enforce their own sedition laws.

It has turned Communists loose who have taught the forcible overthrow of our Government with evil intent.

The Court has held that the State Department could not discharge a Government employee who had given secret military plans to the editor of a Communist magazine.

Our courts now say that a State attorney general does not have the right to ask a lecturer in a State university if he believed in communism.

It has said that the U.S. Attorney General did not have the right to ask an alien if he had recently attended Communist meetings.

The Court has ruled that Communists seeking the right to practice law need not answer questions about Communist affiliation.

It has questioned the right of Congress to investigate communism and suggested that it is broad scale intrusion into the lives and affairs of private citizens.

And to cap the climax the Court has ruled that the State Department must give a passport to Communists including one who was involved in the spy ring of Julius Rosenberg and was going to India to live with a Communist who had renounced his American citizenship.

With the greater strength that comes from this weakening of our laws, the Communists and their fellow travelers are hard at work at this very moment to achieve their objectives.

First of these objectives is the elimination of Federal and State security programs. Everyone admits that Government employment is not a right but a privilege. Yet the effect of many of the aforementioned Supreme Court decisions is to prevent the Federal and State Governments from withdrawing this privilege from those who associate with Communists and who are security risks. We are even required to give the dignity and protection of a U.S. passport to a Communist who leaves this country for the purpose of harming the country which issues the passport.

Many well meaning groups in this country whose loyalty is not in question, have swallowed the Communist propaganda campaign that security programs both Federal and State, smack of fascism and nazism. This genuine fear of a police state has been seized upon by Communist conspirators. Well meaning persons have, without knowing it, been fighting the Communist battle for them.

Another Communist objective is the recognition of Red China. The Communist espionage apparatus needs the diplomatic immunity of its embassies and consulates to set up spy centers. It needs the unbroken seal of the diplomatic pouch to transmit orders to its spies and couriers and to receive back their reports and microfilm documents.

Many well meaning individuals have swallowed the Communist line, hook, line and sinker and have said in effect, "The Chinese Communist nation exists, why must we refuse to admit it? Wouldn't it be better to meet them face to face and gain access to their country? As long as they exist we cannot continue to refuse to recognize their existence." To these people I say, the greatest mistake this Nation ever made was the recognition of the Soviet Union. Four American Presidents refused to recognize the Communist government of Russia and it remained weak and ineffective so long as it was unrecognized. Communism began to spread through the world as soon as the United States extended diplomatic recognition in 1933, because, in violation of all international morality and even of the executive agreement by which recognition was extended, Soviet Russia used her embassies and consulates as centers of espionage, subversion, and propaganda. In spite of this some Americans say that we were morally wrong in sending a U–2 plane 60,000 feet over Russia into air which, to my knowledge, no international lawyer has said belongs to Russia. And we do it for the purpose of learning the facts which are necessary to prevent the world from being plunged into another war.

Another objective is to halt nuclear tests, and well meaning and sincere individuals in this country support the same objective. In so doing they do not feel that they are supporting Russia but merely supporting what is good for mankind.

Obviously nuclear tests should be halted; but can they be halted without some assurance that the Russians will actually live up to agreements? Look at the record of Russian violation of their solemn commitments.

During the last 25 years the United States has had 3,400 meetings with the Communists. All this talk led to 52 major agreements and Soviet Russia has broken 50 of them.

The Communists have followed Lenin's dictum about treaties and agreements: "Promises are like piecrusts—made to be broken."

In the 3 years prior to 1958 the United States met 73 times at Geneva with the Chinese Reds to negotiate a release of 450 American prisoners. How many American servicemen have been accounted for or released?

In light of such a record, how can anyone plead for limiting our military potential by refusing to develop weapons through nuclear testing when we have no assurance that Russia will do the same? Suspending of nuclear tests unilaterally without guarantees that Russia will adhere to her agreement is exactly what Russia wants.

Some counter this argument and say, "Well, we are the peace-loving country, we should prove to the world that we are sincere by taking the first step to relieve tensions."

I am truly concerned about the attitude in some circles that the United States must take a succession of first steps. If we do and it is a step backward and Russia doesn't take a similar step, then we have a new and compromised position which isn't as good as the position we occupied before. Then there will be a new status quo and after a time you can expect these same people to urge a new and bold first step from the new position. Can't they see that such a policy means nothing in the world but a gradual retreat toward slavery?

Understand that I do not say for 1 minute that anyone who advocates unilateral suspension of nuclear testing is knowingly serving the Communist cause. But whether he knows it or not, and I am sure he does not in most cases, he is truly giving the Communists what they want.

Another Communist objective which is inadvertantly served by many innocent Americans is that of propaganda. Communists are spending $3 billion a year on propaganda which is reaching every city and hamlet in our Nation. In one day the Communist propaganda coming through New York City alone fills three large warehouses and not a single piece is labeled "Communist propaganda" as required by the Foreign Agents Registration Act.

In viewing my daily congressional mail it is amazing to me to see the same words crop up in the letters from sincere and unsuspecting constituents that one sees in this type of Communist propaganda. Reference to the FBI as "a Nazi-like gestapo," to the House Un-American Activities Committee members as Fascists and witch hunters are repeated each day by people who haven't the slightest idea how those phrases were planted in their minds. If they were to know, they would realize that this is the product of the Soviet propaganda machine operating on $3 billion per year.

Another objective of the Communist conspiracy is to humiliate the United States.

It is well known that Communists masterminded the insulting demonstration against Vice President NIXON which included spitting on him and the throwing of rocks and garbage.

Some may doubt, but I do not, that the deeds of Fidel Castro in Cuba are masterminded by the international Communist conspiracy.

Recently in our city of San Francisco, known Communist agitators were seen in the crowd whipping young college students into a frenzy to demonstrate against the House Un-American Activities Committee. It strikes me as something more than coincidence that these demonstrations were organized on the weekend which preceded the ill-fated summit conference and were prominently played up in the Russian press as a demonstration by the American people against their Government and one of its congressional committees. I doubt seriously that these young students demonstrating before the San Francisco city hall, some of them not ready to shave and some who refuse to as all good beatniks should, none of them dry behind the ears, actually knew that they were being used as tools of trained Communist organizers.

In the crowd of students and beatniks at San Francisco, were known Communist agitators who were passing out literature that had been mailed directly from the Congress of the United States.

Though it may be undignified I can only say that had one of the students been my child there would have been a very urgent date between me and that child in the woodshed.

Another objective of the Communist conspiracy is to stimulate a peace offensive. Let me quote once again the words of Dmitri Manuilski, "the bourgeoisie will have to be put to sleep. So we shall begin by launching the most spectacular peace movement on record."

Remember the Palo Alto Peace Club, now officially listed by the Attorney General of the United States as subversive? And there are many other organizations which fall for the Communist peace offensive and by no stretch of the imagination can be considered as disloyal or subversive. But disloyal or loyal they are still influenced and taken in by the Communist peace offensive. These people urge us to take bold first steps on the presumption that Khrushchev and other Kremlin leaders will negotiate in good faith and will keep their agreement. This belief is held in spite of the long record of Soviet violations of their solemn promises.

My words are not those of a warmonger. I sincerely do believe in peace and sincerely believe we should do everything reasonable to achieve it. But I repeat that a succession of unilateral first steps can mean nothing but a gradual retreat toward slavery. It is time the American people were alerted to what a Communist peace offensive really means and stopped serving it in their wishful thinking.

Another of the major Communist objectives is to nullify all anti-Communist legislation. On January 16, 1958, FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover, testified that 49 of the top 108 Communists convicted by Federal juries under the Smith Act have been set free by Supreme Court decisions. The Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950 has been nullified by decisions of our own courts, and so have the antisedition laws of 44 States. This is not preservation of civil liberties, this is giving it away.

And the last Communist objective which I will discuss is muzzling the FBI and congressional investigations. For years the Communist Party has poured out its most hysterical language against what the Reds call the gestapo-like FBI.

During the month of May 1959, high school seniors applying for admission to the University of California took an examination in which they were required to write a 500-word essay on 1 of 12 topics. The seventh topic of the 12 contained the following language: "What are the dangers to a democracy of a national policelike organization, like the FBI, which operates secretly and is unresponsive to public criticism?" This statement is absolutely untrue. In the first place the FBI is not a national police organization, but works with State and local police authorities. Secondly, it is responsive to public opinion because the Director of the FBI reports to the Attorney General who in turn reports to the President and who in turn is responsible to the people. It gets its funds from a Congress which certainly is responsive to public opinion.

The university has since disavowed the question and apologized to the FBI.

I shall not make the assertion that this question was deliberate service to the Communist conspiracy. But whether it was deliberate or not, the fact still remains that one of our great universities imprinted the fact upon young minds that the FBI was a sinister organization. This is the Communist line and whether it was intentionally planted or not is immaterial. The fact still remains that the Communist cause was served.

It is well known that card-carrying, identified Communists are registered as lobbyists in the Congress of the United States. Is it wrong for a congressional committee to expose this fact to the public and tell them about it?

Let me quote from a speech made in the House of Representatives on May 5 by my colleague from Ohio, the Honorable GORDON SCHERER, a member of the House Un-American Activities Committee. He says:

"To accomplish its objective of destroying the Committee on Un-American Activities, this Communist-controlled group (the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee) has sent its cohorts into cities throughout the United States in advance of committee hearings. Its paid agents have done everything possible in advance of, and even during, such hearings to stir up animosity, contempt, and hatred for the committee. Its agents have circulated petitions; appeared on radio programs; arranged meetings, rallies, and picket lines; issued press releases; and placed ads in newspapers."

Mind you this speech was made on May 5, which is exactly 1 week before the recent hearings of the Committee on Un-American Activities in the city hall at San Francisco. Wouldn't you say from hearing that quotation that my colleague from Ohio was a prophet? Certainly there were petitions, there were radio programs, meetings arranged, there were rallies and picket lines, there were ads in newspapers.

Unfortunately these ads and these petitions told outright lies. What is more unfortunate is that those lies came from a speech by a Member of the House on the floor of the House of Representatives. This speech said, "that the committee had subpenaed 110 public schoolteachers in early June 1959. Most of the subpenas were served on the teachers at school at 9 in the morning on June 5."

Ladies and gentlemen, this is not th truth. Upon checking the files of the committee it is found that of 101 subpenas served, 97 teachers were actually served in their homes. Only four were served at their schools, and it is my understanding from unofficial resources that these four were not served in their classrooms.

Recall for a moment the recent San Francisco hearings of the Un-American Activities Committee. What fact enters your mind first? The rioting. Who stirred up the rioting? Known Communists.

What would have happened without the demonstrations? The hearing would have been orderly and brief newspaper reports would have been written instead of glaring headlines.

If reputations were damaged, the rioting and the resulting headlines did it. And who incited the riots? Known Communists. It necessarily follows that the object of the demonstrations, whether participants knew it or not, was not to preserve civil liberties, but to discredit the committee.

Forget for a moment the Communists who participated and the gory details of the San Francisco incident. Ask this question: What is the justification for this committee?

Here it is in simple terms: The security of the United States is the business of Congress. Most Congressmen feel that the Communist conspiracy is a threat to our security. Therefore, Congress should have a committee to investigate communism to alert the public to its danger and to revise our laws to cope with that danger.

This objective and this tactic of the Communist Party of discrediting the committee which seeks to expose the Communist conspiracy is to me the most serious threat to our efforts to resist internal subversion.

It was Pope Pius XI in 1937 who said, in response to a searching question about communism, "How is it possible that such a system long since rejected scientifically and now proved erroneous by experience, how is it, we ask, that such a system could spread so rapidly in all parts of the world?" He answered his own question in these words: "The explanation lies in the fact that too few have been able to grasp the nature of communism."

When our enemy was Nazi Germany our Government and military leaders studied every detail of the enemy and his strategies. One of our great generals was George S. Patton. Early in World War II when the Germans were advancing, General Patton was asked one day if he wasn't discouraged. His answer was precise: "I have studied the German for 40 years. I have read the memoirs of his great men. I have studied every detail of all his military campaigns. I have attended some of his staff courses. I know exactly how he will react under any given set of circumstances. He does not know what I will do. For this reason when the time comes I shall beat the hell out of him."

And this he did.

We can no more save our Republic from communism merely by saying we are against communism than we can cure a cancer by saying we are against cancer. To conquer the cancer we must kill it or it must kill us.

But to cure cancer, to cure any disease, or to defeat communism we must know how serious it is. Knowing how serious it is, we will not fall prey to the overgeneralization that civil liberties must not be restricted even when they are against the interest of the entire Nation. We will continue the Un-American Activities and other congressional committees and give them freedom to investigate Communists and pro-Communists. We will keep present anti-Communists laws and we will strengthen them. We will strengthen security provisions and the laws which keep Communists out of our government. We will restore to the executive branch the right to question aliens awaiting deportation and give it the right to deny passports for those who refuse to sign non-Communist affidavits. We will say to ourselves that no man, regardless of his occupation, is immune from investigation when there is reasonable cause to believe that his actions are aiding the Communist conspiracy.

If we do these things we will act positively against communism and repudiate our past policy of reacting too late with too little.

With such an attitude, and only with such an attitude, can we lick the Communist conspiracy and keep faith with those we honor today—the men who have given their lives in order that we might live as free men and women.

I recall the story of the lost child on a Kansas prairie on one of the coldest nights the prairie had known in years. After hours of searching the neighbors of the frightened family decided they would all join hands and walk across the prairie in an effort to find the little boy. In so doing they covered every square inch of the prairie. After a short time they found the boy but unfortunately he had succumbed to the cold and was dead. The bereaved father gathered the boy into his arms and through his sobs and tears said, "God, why didn't we join hands sooner?"

SENATE

MONDAY, AUGUST 8, 1960

The 8th day of August being the day prescribed by Senate Concurrent Resolution 112, 86th Congress, 2d session, for the reconvening of the 2d session of the 86th Congress, the Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

RICHARD M. NIXON, of California, Vice President of the United States, called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D.D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our Father, God, maker of all things, judge of all men, hallowed be Thy name.

In these epic days we would be the servants of Thy will.

With the gaze of the Nation and of the world fixed upon this Chamber of governance, first of all we would write at the top of the record, "In the beginning God."

We would solemnly reaffirm the reverent declaration of those who long ago with radiant hope stepped upon the shores of this new land, "In the name of God, Amen."

We thank Thee for the things that unite us—the passion for freedom, the hatred of tyranny whose aim is to erase Thine image on each individual soul, the steadfast belief that in Thy providence a purged America has come to the kingdom for such a time as this, for the vision splendid of a redeemed earth when gnawing hunger and blighting superstition and needless pain and misery will be but haunting memories. We thank Thee for the things that unite us.

We thank Thee for the things that divide us—for the unfettered clash of mind on mind, for the right even to be wrong, for the summons to mobilize our own convictions to meet in intellectual and moral combat ideas that war against our own, none daring to molest or make us afraid. We are grateful for the things that divide us, for they are the hallmarks of men who are not cowed into coerced conformity.

For the triumph of the global crusade now raging, whose victory will mean that men everywhere will live in freedom, we set up our banners; and in this, Thy glorious day, we lift our living Nation a single sword to Thee.

We ask it in the name of the Christ whose truth is marching on. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, July 2, 1960, was dispensed with.

SENATOR FROM NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I am informed that a Democratic Senator-elect is in the Chamber, and that the certificate of his election is at the desk. Is it in order at this time that he appear and take the oath?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] has the certificate of election. If he will send it to the desk——

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. President, I send to the desk and present the certificate of election of QUENTIN BURDICK, to succeed the late Senator Langer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The certificate will be read.

The certificate of election was read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 28th day of June, 1960, QUENTIN BURDICK was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of North Dakota a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the unexpired term ending January 2, 1965, occasioned by the death of the Honorable William Langer.

Witness: His Excellency our Governor, John E. Davis, and our seal hereto affixed at Bismarck, N. Dak., this 21st day of July 1960.

By the Governor:

JOHN E. DAVIS,
Governor.

Attest:

BEN MEIER,
Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator-elect will present himself at the desk, the oath of office will be administered to him.

Mr. BURDICK, escorted by Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota, advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath of office prescribed by law was administered to him by the Vice President, and was subscribed by the new Senator.

[Applause, Senators rising.]

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

REPORT ON LEND-LEASE OPERATIONS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, transmitted to the Secretary of the Senate on August 1, 1960, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 29, 1960.

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith the Forty-first Report to Congress on Lend-Lease Operations for the calendar year 1959.

During the year under review, collections and credits on lend-lease accounts amounted to $32,581,446.31. In addition, 804,000 fine troy ounces of lend-lease silver were returned to the United States. (This figure does not include shipments reported to contain 4,587,687 fine troy ounces which had not been assayed by the close of 1959.)

During the final part of the year, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics accepted the United States proposal to resume negotiations on a settlement for some of the lend-lease aid received from the United States prior to V–J Day. Discussions began on January 11, 1960, and were discontinued on January 27, 1960, because agreement could not be reached on a common ground for continuing.

More details on these and other lend-lease items are contained in the report.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 2178. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Army to make certain changes in the road at Whites Branch, Grapevine Reservoir, Tex.;

H.R. 2467. An act to authorize the reimbursement of owners and tenants of land acquired by the Federal Aviation Agency for their moving expenses;

H.R. 10841. An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to place bamboo pipestems on the free list;

H.R. 12595. An act to clarify the law with respect to transportation of airmail, and for other purposes;

H.R. 12659. An act to suspend for a temporary period the import duty on heptanoic acid;

H.R. 12699. An act to cancel a deed of trust to the United States from the predecessor in name of Gallaudet College and any evidences of indebtedness related to the same transaction, to quiet the college's title to property belonging to it, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 12747. An act to increase the salaries of assistant U.S. attorneys and certain other attorneys appointed by the Attorney General.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated:

H.R. 2178. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Army to make certain changes in the road at Whites Branch, Grapevine Reservoir, Texas; to the Committee on Public Works.

H.R. 2467. An act to authorize the reimbursement of owners and tenants of land acquired by the Federal Aviation Agency for their moving expenses; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

H.R. 10841. An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to place bamboo pipe stems on the free list; and H.R. 12659. An act to suspend for a temporary period the import duty on heptanoic acid; to the Committee on Finance.

H.R. 12595. An act to clarify the law with respect to transportation of airmail, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

H.R. 12699. An act to cancel a deed of trust to the United States from the predecessor in name of Gallaudet College and any evidences of indebtedness related to the same transaction, to quiet the college's title to property belonging to it, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

H.R. 12747. An act to increase the salaries of assistant United States attorneys and certain other attorneys appointed by the Attorney General; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LIMITATION OF DEBATE DURING MORNING HOUR

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, under the rule, there will be the usual morning hour; and I ask unanimous consent that statements in connection therewith be limited to 3 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

LEGISLATIVE PROPOSALS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (S. DOC. NO. 115)

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I understand that the President has communicated a message to the Congress. I ask that it be laid before the Senate and that the clerk be instructed to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the standing committees having jurisdiction over matters therein, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I welcome the return of the Congress. There is much important legislative work still pending that cannot await the selection and assembly of a new Congress and a new administration. The executive and legislative branches must act together on these pressing needs these next few weeks. I shall do my part. I am sure that the Congress will be similarly disposed.

First, the world situation, with its great significance to us.

Fundamentally, it is as it was. The free world still faces a Communist imperialism fixed upon conquest of all the world.

Vigilance, therefore, must still be our watchword. Continuing strength—military, economic, spiritual—must remain our reliance. Our basic objective—to secure a permanent peace—is yet to be won. Our programs have long been keyed to this situation. They must continue.

During the congressional recess events have dramatized tensions that still plague the world.

We have seen an intensification of Communist truculence.

Indeed, the Soviet dictator has talked loosely and irresponsibly about a possible missile attack on the United States.

An American aircraft has been attacked over international waters. Our resolution requesting an investigation of this matter has been vetoed by the Soviets in the United Nations Security Council. Surviving crew members are still being held prisoner.

The Soviet delegation has walked out of the Geneva disarmament negotiations.

The Communists continue to exploit situations of unrest, flagrantly striving to turn to their ends the struggles and hopes of peoples for a better world. These Communist efforts have recently reached new extremes in central Africa.

All of us know about Cuba.

As a result of continuous appraisal of changing Communist tactics and attitudes, I have ordered the military services to take certain practical measures affecting the readiness and posture of our military commands. These include the deployment of additional aircraft carriers to the 6th and 7th Fleets. A number of B–47 medium bombers and their accompanying tankers, which had been scheduled to be phased out of our forces, will be retained in service for the time being; and the tempo of operation of the Strategic Air Command will be increased and its deployment further dispersed. The readiness of our ground forces will be further improved by expanding the number and scope of strategic field and airborne exercises.

I have also directed expansion of certain long-range programs. The Strategic Air Command capability to conduct a continuous airborne alert will be further strengthened. More funds will be applied to the modernization of the Army combat equipment and to military airlift. Additional effort will be devoted to the development of the B–70 and the reconnaissance satellite Samos.

During the congressional recess we have made extraordinary progress in testing one of America's most important weapons systems—the Polaris ballistic missile submarine. It is with great satisfaction that I report to the Congress that the first test firings of the Polaris missile from the submerged nuclear submarine George Washington had rifle shot accuracy at great ranges. Never in my long military career has a weapon system of such complexity been brought from its original conception to the operational stage with such sureness and speed—an achievement that in its entirety has taken less than 5 years.

The time is now right to increase the scope of the Polaris program and five instead of three more submarines have been started this fiscal year. Furthermore, I have directed the development of a much longer range version of the Polaris missile, which will give America a weapon of even greater versatility, power and invulnerability.

The Defense Department will carry out these defense measures with its available resources insofar as possible. Measures pertaining to weapons systems programs will be carried out by utilizing appropriations already made in this session. Total resources are adequate, although a modest increase in military personnel and in operation and maintenance funds may prove to be necessary to carry out the readiness measures. If such an increase should be required, I shall promptly request the necessary funds.

Incidentally, provision will have to be made after the first of the year to fund the civilian pay increases imposed by Congress a few weeks ago. These will add permanently to our defense costs some $200 million a year.

Once again I assure the Congress that this Nation's military power is second to none and will be kept that way. Our long-range strategic bombers and air-to-ground missiles, our intermediate and long-range ballistic missiles, our Polaris submarines, our attack carriers, the tactical air units overseas, the air defense forces, and the atomic and conventional firepower of our ground forces worldwide are indeed a retaliatory and defensive force unmatched anywhere.

So much for administrative actions which I have recently taken. Congressional actions, too, are required.

Our national security needs encompass more than excellence and strength in our own military establishment. They include measures to build free world strength everywhere. These require, and I therefore request, appropriations of the full amount authorized by the Congress for the mutual security program. At this point in the legislative process, these appropriations have been cut by well over a half billion dollars. The Nation's security and our inescapable interest in a stable world require that these amounts be restored.

In addition, I request a $100 million increase in the authorization and appropriation for the mutual security contingency fund. This increase is needed to keep America poised for sudden developments such as those in the Congo where a U.S. airlift and other efforts were needed suddenly and critically. Happily, in this instance, we were able to respond in a matter of hours. We must maintain ourselves in a position to give rapid backing to the efforts of the United Nations in this troubled region.

At my direction, two other matters will be presented to Congress, their purpose being to promote free world stability by stimulating the hopes, morale and efforts of our friends everywhere. These programs are:

First, an authorization in the magnitude of $600 million to help our Latin American neighbors accelerate their efforts to strengthen the social and economic structure of their nations and improve the status of their individual citizens. This program, which should include further assistance for the rehabilitation of devastated Chile, will promote the dynamism and effectiveness of all our efforts in this hemisphere. I urgently request enactment of this authorization prior to the Economic Conference of the American Republics, which convenes at Bogotá on September 5, so that discussions leading to the development of detailed plans may be initiated there.

Second, a proposal to be presented in September before the General Assembly of the United Nations, whereby we and other fortunate nations can, together, make greater use of our combined agricultural abundance to help feed the hungry of the world. The United Nations provides a multilateral forum admirably suited to initiate consideration of this effort.

I consider it important that Congress approve a resolution endorsing such a program before the United Nations Assembly convenes.

Turning to domestic problems, clearly we face a legislative logjam, the possibility of which I suggested, by special message, on the 3d of May.

Only one major measure—civil rights—had then been passed, and this had two major deletions which I hope will now be restored in keeping with the bipartisan support evidenced for these items last month.

Legislating time is now short, and so far in this session only 6 of the 27 measures I cited last May as required by the Nation's interests have been enacted into law. Because those that fail of enactment before adjournment will go begging for months to come, I urge the Congress to attend to them now. In addition to those already mentioned, I cite these:

Federal assistance in the construction of facilities for colleges, universities, and elementary and secondary schools;

Assistance to older people to meet serious illnesses;

Expansion of coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act;

A moderate upward adjustment of the minimum wage;

Constructive measures to meet existing farm problems;

A sound area assistance program directed specifically to the areas in need;

The authorizing of 40 new judgeships to expedite the rendering of justice;

Proper financing to avoid delays in our interstate highway program;

An increase in the aviation fuel tax to facilitate proper financing of our airways modernization program;

Removal of the interest rate limitation on long-term Treasury bonds;

A postal rate increase to avoid saddling the next administration and taxpayers generally, wholly unjustifiably, with a postal deficit nearing a billion dollars a year;

Liberalization of our immigration laws;

Continuation of the long-established authority for the President to reorganize the executive branch;

And a grouping of measures generally in the conservation field.

Also still needed and long ago recommended are Senate ratification of the important Antarctic Treaty, amendments to speed our space exploration efforts, and a restoration of the traditional relationship between the active duty and the retired pay of our military personnel.

All of these items are at least as urgently needed for America as when first recommended. So I urge that we stay on the job until it is done.

Certainly we cannot adjourn the public interest.

I have a special comment on two of these matters.

First, agriculture. I reiterate the theme of my January 29 and May 3 messages on this subject. The well-being of our farm people still demands that we act with good sense on their pressing problems, notably wheat. The public will have every right to register its serious protest should the Congress adjourn without responsible action in this area.

The recent history of this problem has been deadlocked. The Congress has refused to accept my recommendations and insisted upon unrealistic programs which, of course, I have rejected.

Last January I made one further attempt to resolve this issue. I urged Congress simply to work its will, provided only that the end result fitted within broad guidelines assuring a truly beneficial result for the farmer and the Nation. My own preferred program leading to greater freedom for the farmer, is widely known. I repeat, however, what I have said many times—if a different approach is desired, and kept within the guidelines, I will unhesitatingly approve it.

Our farmers need constructive action and for years have been entitled to it. They know, as does all America, that this administration has been unable substantially to alter the existing type of wheat program because of lack of congressional cooperation. It has been a program attuned to calamity—war, depression, or drought—but which in these years of peace and great productivity has resulted in staggering surpluses which overhang the market, depress prices, and threaten the farmer's future.

The Congress should promptly provide the constructive remedies for agriculture so long and so urgently needed.

For 5 years in a row I have recommended area assistance legislation. Regrettably I had no choice but to veto the legislation the Congress did pass this session. It would have frittered the taxpayers' money away in areas where it was not needed and on programs that would not have benefited those truly in need of help.

A new area assistance bill, with administration backing, was introduced immediately after my veto. It would channel more help directly into stricken areas than any previous measure proposed. Failure to act will deny this help for months to come. Human distress demands action now. If later we find there should be changes either in the dollar amounts or the methods used, experience will dictate the kind of adjustments to be made.

Last January I estimated that, if the Congress would adhere to my appropriation and revenue recommendations, we could look forward to a budgetary surplus of $4 billion. Since then, however, the spending programs enacted and pending—coupled with the failure of Congress to enact proposed new revenue measures—threaten to consume the entire expected surplus.

This situation relates very importantly to your forthcoming deliberations because of the need of avoiding further deficit spending and of making, in years of prosperity, savings to be applied either to debt reduction or to tax reform.

In meeting this need I shall not abdicate my responsibility to use the Executive power to help keep the Nation's economy strong and sound while we carry forward our urgent work at home and in the world.

This means that I shall not be a party to reckless spending schemes which would increase the burden of debt of our grandchildren, by resuming, in prosperous times, the practice of deficit financing. I shall not fail to resist inflationary pressures by whatever means are available to me.

This truth we must take to heart: in good times, we must at the very least pay our way. This is the fundamental condition for a dependable future for our working men and women, for management, for consumers, and for the Government. If we will but handle responsibly the taxpayers' money, as I am firmly determined that we shall, private and public action can continue to move confidently ahead.

This simply means that we must adhere to necessary programs and sensible priorities. I have herein suggested those in which I believe.

If the Congress prefers other priorities at greater national cost, responsibility dictates that it accompany them with the additional taxes to pay the bill.

I recognize the magnitude of the task still before the Congress, and, of course, I am not unaware of the other matters attracting public attention in this year 1960.

But I repeat—if during the critical months ahead we hold to the standard of national interest, the future will be bright for America—indeed, for all the free world.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 8, 1960.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUSH in the chair). The message will be referred to the Committee on Armed Services and will be printed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President——

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Did I correctly understand the Chair to say that the message will be referred to the Committee on Armed Services?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that way because the greater part of the message deals with the national defense.

Mr. RUSSELL. A considerable part of the message deals with the national defense; and, of course, the Committee on Armed Services will be glad to give every consideration to that portion of the message. I may say that we have always tried to make certain that the Committee on Armed Services operated on a nonpartisan basis, and without any politics. For that reason, there are certain phases of the message which we will not be able to consider. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon will state it.

Mr. MORSE. Why does the message have to be referred to any committee, under the rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In accordance with the usual procedures of the Senate, the message is referred to a committee.

Mr. MORSE. Is that mandatory?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, it is not mandatory under the rules of the Senate; it is customary under the procedures of the Senate.

Mr. MORSE. Would it not be more appropriate to refer the message to each and every committee of the Senate because of the broad scope of the message?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Oregon please restate his question?

Mr. MORSE. Does not the Chair believe that it would be more appropriate to refer the message to each and every committee of the Senate because of the broad scope of the message?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent of the Senate would be required to do that.

Mr. MORSE. I think it would be appropriate to do that. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I see no real objection to referring the message to each and every committee of the Senate. There are very substantial agenda in the message. Almost every committee of the Senate is affected thereby. Under the type of procedure which prevails in the House, the message could be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, and then be sent to the Union Calendar. That procedure does not obtain in the Senate. Therefore, I see no objection to referring the message to every standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. MORSE. That is a fine suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senate that rule XXV, on page 26, provides as follows:

(c) Committee on Armed Services, to consist of 17 Senators, to which committee shall be referred all proposed legislation, messages, petitions, memorials, and other matters relating to the following subjects:

Mr. MORSE. My unanimous-consent proposal would result in that action, and it would do more, if we act by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Oregon is in order. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, for the consideration of the Antarctic Treaty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, may I ask the acting majority leader if, after his motion has been agreed to, as I am sure it will be, an opportunity will be afforded for a brief morning hour?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I desire to announce that it is the intention of the leadership, following a discussion with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], to have the usual morning hour, and at the conclusion of the morning hour to have the Senate, in executive session, proceed to the consideration of the Antarctic Treaty and other matters related or incidental thereto.

THE ANTARCTIC TREATY

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, at this time I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Antarctic Treaty.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive B (86th Cong., 2d sess.) signed at Washington, on December 1, 1959, which was read the second time, as follows:

THE ANTARCTIC TREATY

The Governments of Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Chile, the French Republic, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, the Union of South Africa, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America,

Recognizing that it is in the interest of all mankind that Antarctica shall continue forever to be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and shall not become the scene or object of international discord;

Acknowledging the substantial contributions to scientific knowledge resulting from international cooperation in scientific investigation in Antarctica;

Convinced that the establishment of a firm foundation for the continuation and development of such cooperation on the basis of freedom of scientific investigation in Antarctica as applied during the International Geophysical Year accords with the interests of science and the progress of all mankind;

Convinced also that a treaty ensuring the use of Antarctica for peaceful purposes only and the continuance of international harmony in Antarctica will further the purposes and principles embodied in the charter of the United Nations;

Have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

1. Antarctica shall be used for peaceful purposes only. There shall be prohibited, inter alia, any measures of a military nature, such as the establishment of military bases and fortifications, the carrying out of military maneuvers, as well as the testing of any type of weapons.

2. The present Treaty shall not prevent the use of military personnel or equipment for scientific research or for any other peaceful purpose.

ARTICLE II

Freedom of scientific investigation in Antarctica and cooperation toward that end, as applied during the International Geophysical Year, shall continue, subject to the provisions of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE III

1. In order to promote international cooperation in scientific investigation in Antarctica, as provided for in Article II of the present Treaty, the Contracting Parties agree that, to the greatest extent feasible and practicable:

(a) information regarding plans for scientific programs in Antarctica shall be exchanged to permit maximum economy and efficiency of operations;

(b) scientific personnel shall be exchanged in Antarctica between expeditions and stations;

(c) scientific observations and results from Antarctica shall be exchanged and made freely available.

2. In implementing this Article, every encouragement shall be given to the establishment of cooperative working relations with those Specialized Agencies of the United Nations and other international organizations having a scientific or technical interest in Antarctica.

ARTICLE IV

1. Nothing contained in the present Treaty shall be interpreted as:

(a) a renunciation by any Contracting Party of previously asserted rights of or claims to territorial sovereignty in Antarctica;

(b) a renunciation or diminution by any Contracting Party of any basis of claim to territorial sovereignty in Antarctica which it may have whether as a result of its activities or those of its nationals in Antarctica, or otherwise;

(c) prejudicing the position of any Contracting Party as regards its recognition or non-recognition of any other State's right of or claim or basis of claim to territorial sovereignty in Antarctica.

2. No acts or activities taking place while the present Treaty is in force shall constitute a basis for asserting, supporting or denying a claim to territorial sovereignty in Antarctica or create any rights of sovereignty in Antarctica. No new claim, or enlargement of an existing claim, to territorial sovereignty in Antarctica shall be asserted while the present Teaty is in force.

ARTICLE V

1. Any nuclear explosions in Antarctica and the disposal there of radioactive waste material shall be prohibited.

2. In the event of the conclusion of international agreements concerning the use of nuclear energy, including nuclear explosions and the disposal of radioactive waste material, to which all of the Contracting Parties whose representatives are entitled to participate in the meetings provided for under Article IX are parties, the rules established under such agreements shall apply in Antarctica.

ARTICLE VI

The provisions of the present Treaty shall apply to the area south of 60° South Latitude, including all ice shelves, but nothing in the present Treaty shall prejudice or in any way affect the rights, or the exercise of the rights, of any State under international law with regard to the high seas within that area.

ARTICLE VII

1. In order to promote the objectives and ensure the observance of the provisions of the present Treaty, each Contracting Party whose representatives are entitled to participate in the meetings referred to in Article IX of the Treaty shall have the right to designate observers to carry out any inspection provided for by the present Article. Observers shall be nationals of the Contracting Parties which designate them. The names of observers shall be communicated to every other Contracting Party having the right to designate observers, and like notice shall be given of the termination of their appointment.

2. Each observer designated in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article shall have complete freedom of access at any time to any or all areas of Antarctica.

3. All areas of Antarctica, including all stations, installations and equipment within those areas, and all ships and aircraft at points of discharging or embarking cargoes or personnel in Antarctica, shall be open at all times to inspection by any observers designated in accordance with paragraph 1 of this Article.

4. Aerial observation may be carried out at any time over any or all areas of Antarctica by any of the Contracting Parties having the right to designate observers.

5. Each Contracting Party shall, at the time when the present Treaty enters into force for it, inform the other Contracting Parties, and thereafter shall give them notice in advance, of

(a) all expeditions to and within Antarctica, on the part of its ships or nationals, and all expeditions to Antarctica organized in or proceeding from its territory;

(b) all stations in Antarctica occupied by its nationals; and

(c) any military personnel or equipment intended to be introduced by it into Antarctica subject to the conditions prescribed in paragraph 2 of Article I of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE VIII

1. In order to facilitate the exercise of their functions under the present Treaty, and without prejudice to the respective positions of the Contracting Parties relating to jurisdiction over all other persons in Antarctica, observers designated under paragraph 1 of Article VII and scientific personnel exchanged under subparagraph 1(b) of Article III of the Treaty, and members of the staffs accompanying any such persons, shall be subject only to the jurisdiction of the Contracting Party of which they are nationals in respect of all acts or omissions occurring while they are in Antarctica for the purpose of exercising their functions.

2. Without prejudice to the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article, and pending the adoption of measures in pursuance of subparagraph 1(c) of Article IX, the Contracting Parties concerned in any case of dispute with regard to the exercise of jurisdiction in Antarctica shall immediately consult together with a view to reaching a mutually acceptable solution.

ARTICLE IX

1. Representatives of the Contracting Parties named in the preamble to the present Treaty shall meet at the City of Canberra within two months after the date of entry into force of the Treaty, and thereafter at suitable intervals and places, for the purpose of exchanging information, consulting together on matters of common interest pertaining to Antarctica, and formulating and considering, and recommending to their Governments, measures in furtherance of the principles and objectives of the Treaty, including measures regarding:

(a) use of Antarctica for peaceful purposes only;

(b) facilitation of scientific research in Antarctica;

(c) facilitation of international scientific cooperation in Antarctica;

(d) facilitation of the exercise of the rights of inspection provided for in Article VII of the Treaty;

(e) questions relating to the exercise of jurisdiction in Antarctica;

(f) preservation and conservation of living resources in Antarctica.

2. Each Contracting Party which has become a party to the present Treaty by accession under Article XIII shall be entitled to appoint representatives to participate in the meetings referred to in paragraph 1 of the present Article, during such time as that Contracting Party demonstrates its interest in Antarctica by conducting substantial scientific research activity there, such as the establishment of a scientific station or the despatch of a scientific expedition.

3. Reports from the observers referred to in Article VII of the present Treaty shall be transmitted to the representatives of the Contracting Parties participating in the meetings referred to in paragraph 1 of the present Article.

4. The measures referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article shall become effective when approved by all the Contracting Parties whose representatives were entitled to participate in the meetings held to consider those measures.

5. Any or all of the rights established in the present Treaty may be exercised as from the date of entry into force of the Treaty whether or not any measures facilitating the exercise of such rights have been proposed, considered or approved as provided in this Article.

ARTICLE X

Each of the Contracting Parties undertakes to exert appropriate efforts, consistent with the Charter of the United Nations, to the end that no one engages in any activity in Antarctica contrary to the principles or purposes of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE XI

1. If any dispute arises between two or more of the Contracting Parties concerning the interpretation or application of the present Treaty, those Contracting Parties shall consult among themselves with a view to having the dispute resolved by negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement or other peaceful means of their own choice.

2. Any dispute of this character not so resolved shall, with the consent, in each case, of all parties to the dispute, be referred to the International Court of Justice for settlement; but failure to reach agreement on reference to the International Court shall not absolve parties to the dispute from the responsibility of continuing to seek to resolve it by any of the various peaceful means referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article.

ARTCLE XII

1. (a) The present Treaty may be modified or amended at any time by unanimous agreement of the Contracting Parties whose representatives are entitled to participate in the meetings provided for under Article IX. Any such modification or amendment shall enter into force when the depositary Government has received notice from all such Contracting Parties that they have ratified it.

(b) Such modification or amendment shall thereafter enter into force as to any other Contracting Party when notice of ratification by it has been received by the depositary Government. Any such Contracting Party from which no notice of ratification is received within a period of two years from the date of entry into force of the modification or amendment in accordance with the provisions of subparagraph 1(a) of this Article shall be deemed to have withdrawn from the present Treaty on the date of the expiration of such period.

2. (a) If after the expiration of thirty years from the date of entry into force of the present Treaty, any of the Contracting Parties whose representatives are entitled to participate in the meetings provided for under Article IX so requests by a communication addressed to the depositary Government, a Conference of all the Contracting Parties shall be held as soon as practicable to review the operation of the Treaty.

(b) Any modification or amendment to the present Treaty which is approved at such a Conference by a majority of the Contracting Parties there represented, including a majority of those whose representatives are entitled to participate in the meetings provided for under Article IX, shall be communicated by the depositary Government to all the Contracting Parties immediately after the termination of the Conference and shall enter into force in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of the present Article.

(c) If any such modification or amendment has not entered into force in accordance with the provisions of subparagraph 1(a) of this Article within a period of two years after the date of its communication to all the Contracting Parties, any Contracting Party may at any time after the expiration of that period give notice to the depositary Government of its withdrawal from the present Treaty, and such withdrawal shall take effect two years after the receipt of the notice by the depositary Government.

ARTICLE XIII

1. The present Treaty shall be subject to ratification by the signatory States. It shall be open for accession by any State which is a Member of the United Nations, or by any other State which may be invited to accede to the Treaty with the consent of all the Contracting Parties whose representatives are entitled to participate in the meetings provided for under Article IX of the Treaty.

2. Ratification of or accession to the present Treaty shall be effected by each State in accordance with its constitutional processes.

3. Instruments of ratification and instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Government of the United States of America, hereby designated as the depositary Government.

4. The depositary Government shall inform all signatory and acceding States of the date of each deposit of an instrument of ratification or accession, and the date of entry into force of the Treaty and of any modification or amendment thereto.

5. Upon the deposit of instruments of ratification by all the signatory States, the present Treaty shall enter into force for those States and for States which have deposited instruments of accession. Thereafter the Treaty shall enter into force for any acceding State upon the deposit of its instrument of accession.

6. The present Treaty shall be registered by the depositary Government pursuant to Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

ARTICLE XIV

The present Treaty, done in the English, French, Russian, and Spanish languages, each version being equally authentic, shall be deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America, which shall transmit duly certified copies thereof to the Governments of the signatory and acceding States.

IN witness whereof, the undersigned Plenipotentiaries, duly authorized, have signed the present Treaty.

TEXT OF UNITED STATES NOTE OF MAY 2, 1958 [1]

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to refer to the splendid example of international cooperation which can now be observed in many parts of the world because of the coordinated efforts of scientists of many countries in seeking a better understanding of geophysical phenomena during the current International Geophysical Year. These coordinated efforts of the scientists of many lands have as their objective a greatly increased knowledge of the planet on which we live and will no doubt contribute directly and indirectly to the welfare of the human race for many generations to come.

Among the various portions of the globe where these cooperative scientific endeavors are being carried on with singular success and with a sincere consciousness of the high ideals of mankind to which they are dedicated is the vast and relatively remote continent of Antarctica. The scientific research being conducted in that continent by the cooperative efforts of distinguished scientists from many countries is producing information of practical as well as theoretical value for all mankind.

The International Geophysical Year comes to a close at the end of 1958. The need for coordinated scientific research in Antarctica, however, will continue for many more years into the future. Accordingly it would appear desirable for those countries participating in the Antarctic program of the International Geophysical Year to reach agreement among themselves on a program to assure the continuation of the fruitful scientific cooperation referred to above. Such an arrangement could have the additional advantage of preventing unnecessary and undesirable political rivalries in that continent, the uneconomic expenditure of funds to defend individual national interests, and the recurrent possibility of international misunderstanding. It would appear that if harmonious agreement can be reached among the countries directly concerned in regard to friendly cooperation in Antarctica, there would be advantages not only to those countries but to all other countries as well.

The present situation in Antarctica is characterized by diverse legal, political, and administrative concepts which render friendly cooperation difficult in the absence of an understanding among the countries involved. Seven countries have asserted claims of sovereignty to portions of Antarctica, some of which overlap and give rise to occasional frictions. Other countries have a direct interest in that continent based on past discovery and exploration, geographic proximity, sea and air transportation routes and other considerations.

The United States for many years has had, and at the present time continues to have, direct and substantial rights and interests in Antarctica. Throughout a period of many years commencing in the early 1800's, many areas of the Antarctic region have been discovered, sighted, explored, and claimed on behalf of the United States by nationals of the United States and by expeditions carrying the flag of the United States. During this period, the Government of the United States and its nationals have engaged in well known and extensive activities in Antarctica.

In view of the activities of the United States and its nationals referred to above, my Government reserves all of the rights of the United States with respect to the Antarctic region, including the right to assert a territorial claim or claims.

It is the opinion of my Government, however, that the interests of mankind would best be served in consonance with the high ideals of the Charter of the United Nations, if the countries which have a direct interest in Antarctica were to join together in the conclusion of a treaty which would have the following peaceful purposes:

A. Freedom of scientific investigation throughout Antarctica by citizens, organizations, and governments of all countries; and a continuation of the international scientific cooperation which is being carried out so successfully during the current International Geophysical Year.

B. International agreement to insure that Antarctica be used for peaceful purposes only.

C. Any other peaceful purposes not inconsistent with the Charter of the United Nations.

The Government of the United States is prepared to discuss jointly with the governments of the other countries having a direct interest in Antarctica the possibility of concluding an agreement, which would be in the form of a treaty, for the purpose of giving legal effect to these high principles. It is believed that such a treaty can be concluded without requiring any participating nation to renounce whatever basic historic rights it may have in Antarctica, or whatever claims of sovereignty it may have asserted. It could be specifically provided that such basic rights and such claims would remain unaffected while the treaty is in force, and that no new rights would be acquired and no new claims made by any country during the duration of the treaty. In other words the legal status quo in Antarctica would be frozen for the duration of the treaty, permitting cooperation in scientific and administrative matters to be carried out in a constructive manner without being hampered or affected in any way by political considerations. Provision could likewise be made for such joint administrative arrangements as might be necessary and desirable to insure the successful accomplishment of the agreed objectives. The proposed treaty would be deposited with the United Nations, and the cooperation of the specialized technical agencies of the United Nations would be sought. Such an arrangement would provide a firm and favorable foundation for a continuation of the productive activities which have thus far distinguished the International Geophysical Year; would provide an agreed basis for the maintenance of peaceful and orderly conditions in Antarctica during years to come; and would avoid the possibility of that continent becoming the scene of international discord.

In the hope that the countries having a direct interest in Antarctica will agree on the desirability of the aforesaid high objectives, and will work together in an effort to convert them into practical realities, the Government of the United States has the honor to invite the Government of _____ to participate in a Conference for this purpose to be convened at an early date at such place as may be mutually agreeable.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

FINAL ACT

The Governments of Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Chile, the French Republic, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, the Union of South Africa, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America.

Having accepted the invitation extended to them on May 2, 1958, by the Government of the United States of America to participate in a Conference on Antarctica to be attended by representatives of the twelve nations which cooperated in the Antarctic Program of the International Geophysical Year;

Appointed their respective Representatives, who are listed below by countries:

ARGENTINA

Representative His Excellency Adolfo Scilingo (Head of Delegation).

Alternate Representative Dr. Francisco R. Bello.

AUSTRALIA

Representatives The Right Honorable Richard Gardiner Casey, C.H., D.S.O., M.C., M.P. (Head of Delegation); His Excellency the Honorable Howard Beale, Q.C. (Deputy Head of Delegation).

Alternate Representatives J. C. G. Kevin, M. R. Booker.

BELGIUM

Representative His Excellency Viscount Obert de Thieusies (Head of Delegation).

Alternate Representatives Jean de Bassompierre, Alfred van der Essen.

CHILE

Representatives His Excellency Marcial Mora (Head of Delegation), His Excellency Enrique Gajardo, His Excellency Julio Escudero.

Alternate Representative Horacio Suarez.

THE FRENCH REPUBLIC

Representative His Excellency Pierre Charpentier (Head of Delegation).

Alternate Representative Guy Scalabre.

JAPAN

Representatives His Excellency Koichiro Asakai (Head of Delegation), Takeso Shimoda.

NEW ZEALAND

Representative The Right Honorable Walter Nash, C.H. (Head of Delegation), A. D. McIntosh, C.M.G. (Deputy Head of Delegation).

Alternate Representative G. D. L. White, M.V.O.

NORWAY

Representatives His Excellency Paul Koht (Head of Delegation), Torfinn Oftedal (Deputy Head of Delegation).

---

[1] Addressed to the Foreign Ministers of each of the 11 other countries participating in the International Geophysical Year activities in Antarctica: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Chile, France, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, the Union of South Africa, the U.S.S.R., and the United Kingdom. Each note was signed and delivered by the American ambassador to that country.

Alternate Representatives Dr. Anders K. Orvin, Gunnar Haerum.

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

Representatives The Honorable Eric H. Louw (Head of Delegation), His Excellency W. C. du Plessis (Deputy Head of Delegation).

Alternate Representatives J. G. Stewart, A. G. Dunn, D. Stuart Franklin.

UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS

Representatives His Excellency Vasili V. Kuznetsov (Head of Delegation); Grigory I. Tunkin.

Alternative Representatives Alexander A. Afanasiev, Vice Admiral Valentin A. Chekurov, Mikhail M. Somov, Mikhail N. Smirnovsky.

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND

Representatives Sir Esler Dening, G.C.M.G., O.B.E. (Head of Delegation); His Excellency Sir Harold Caccia, G.C.M.G., K.C.V.O.

Alternate Representatives H. N. Brain, C.M.G., O.B.E., The Viscount Hood, C.M.G., The Honorable H. A. A. Hankey, C.V.O.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Representative The Honorable Herman Phleger (Head of Delegation).

Alternate Representatives The Honorable Paul C. Daniels, George H. Owen.

The Conference met at Washington on October 15, 1959. It had before it as a basis for discussion working papers considered in the course of informal preparatory talks among representatives of the twelve countries who had met in Washington following the aforesaid invitation of the Government of the United States of America.

At the opening Plenary Session of the Conference the Honorable Herman Phleger, Head of the United States Delegation, was elected Chairman of the Conference. Mr. Henry E. Allen was appointed Secretary General of the Conference and Rapporteur.

The Conference established two Committees under rotating chairmanship to deal with the items on the agenda of the Conference. Following initial consideration of such items, these Committees were reconstituted as a Committee of the Whole. There were also established a Credentials Committee, a Drafting Committee, and a Committee on Style.

The final session of the Conference was held on December 1, 1959.

As a result of the deliberations of the Conference, as recorded in the summary records and reports of the respective Committees and of the Plenary Sessions, the Conference formulated and submitted for signature on December 1, 1959, the Antarctic Treaty.

The Conference recommended to the participating Governments that they appoint representatives to meet in Washington within two months after the signing of the Treaty and thereafter at such times as may be convenient, pending the entry into force of the Treaty, to consult together and to recommend to their Governments such interim arrangements regarding the matters dealt with in the Treaty as they may deem desirable.

In witness whereof, the following Plenipotentiaries sign this Final Act.

Done at Washington this first day of December, one thousand nine hundred and fifty-nine, in the English, French, Russian, and Spanish languages, each version being equally authentic, in a single original which shall be deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America. The Government of the United States of America shall transmit certified copies thereof to all the other Governments represented at the Conference.

SIGNATURES AFFIXED TO THE FINAL ACT OF THE CONFERENCE ON ANTARCTICA, WASHINGTON, DECEMBER 1, 1959

For Argentina: Adolfo Scilingo, F. Bello.

For Australia: Howard Beale, J. C. G. Kevin, M. R. Booker.

For Belgium: Obert de Thieusies.

For Chile: Marcial Mora M., E. Gajardo V., Julio Escudero.

For the French Republic: Pierre Charpentier, Guy Scalabre.

For Japan: Koichiro Asakai, T. Shimoda.

For New Zealand: G. D. L. White.

For Norway: Paul Koht.

For the Union of South Africa: Wentzel C. du Plessis.

For the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: V. Kuznetsov [Romanization], G. Tunkin [Romanization].

For the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland: Harold Caccia.

For the United States of America: Herman Phleger, Paul C. Daniels.

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the Final Act of the Conference on Antarctica signed at Washington on December 1, 1959, in the English, French, Russian, and Spanish languages, the signed original of which is deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America.

In testimony whereof, I, Christian A. Herter, Secretary of State of the United States of America, have hereunto caused the seal of the Department of State to be affixed and my name subscribed by the Authentication Officer of the said Department, at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, this second day of December, 1959.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is now operating in executive session, as proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes, Mr. President, but it is understood that in the executive session the morning hour will be continued, and at the conclusion of morning business the Antarctic Treaty and related matters will be taken up.

I may say that this procedure is being followed on the basis of a promise made by the majority leader, the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON], to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT]; and the promise is being kept in accordance with the agreement made. It is unfortunate that for the time being, because of his absence in an official capacity, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is unable to be present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to proceeding with morning business as though in legislative session, in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, is it understood that in spite of the fact that the Senate is operating in executive session, the morning hour is being extended?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, as in legislative session. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

REPORT OF GENERAL SALES MANAGER, COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the General Sales Manager, concerning the policies, activities, and developments, including all sales and disposals, with regard to each commodity which the Commodity Credit Corporation owns or which it is directed to support, for the month of March 1960 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORT ON COOPERATIVE PROGRAM WITH MEXICO FOR CONTROL AND ERADICATION OF FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

A letter from the Under Secretary of Agriculture, reporting, pursuant to law, that there have been no significant developments to report for the months of May and June, 1960, relating to the cooperative program of the United States with Mexico for the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORT ON AGREEMENTS CONCLUDED UNDER AGRICULTURAL TRADE DEVELOPMENT AND ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1954

A letter from the Deputy Administrator, Foreign Agricultural Service, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C., reporting, pursuant to law, on agreements concluded during June 1960, under title I of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, with the Governments of Chile, Yugoslavia, Spain, Israel, and Vietnam (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN ALIENS

Two letters from the Commissioner, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Department of Justice, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of orders suspending deportation of certain aliens, together with a statement of the facts and pertinent provisions of law pertaining to each alien, and the reasons for ordering such suspension (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Hawaii; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

"SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 3

"Concurrent resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to sponsor in Honolulu, State of Hawaii, an international conference on tsunamis

"Whereas situated in or bordering on the vast Pacific Ocean are many heavily populated countries; and

"Whereas during the past several centuries, numerous tsunamis have swept across the Pacific Ocean and have disastrously struck many of these countries, causing the death of and injury to thousands of men, women, and children, and the destruction of millions of dollars worth of real and personal property; and

"Whereas the avoidance of such loss of and injury to lives and destruction of property can be best accomplished through the exchange of information on tsunamis and the establishment of an international warning system; and

"Whereas such information may be exchanged and such warning system perfected at an international conference on tsunamis; and

"Whereas in the interest of protecting life and property and creating good will throughout the world, it is urgent that the United States as the world leader, at its expense, sponsor an international conference on tsunamis; and

"Whereas the State of Hawaii, being situated in the center of the vast Pacific Ocean and directly affected by tsunamis, is the logical site for such an international conference: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the First Legislature of the State of Hawaii, first special session of 1960, (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is respectfully requested, to take such action as is deemed necessary to sponsor an international conference on tsunamis to be held in the immediate future in Honolulu, State of Hawaii; and be it further

"Resolved, That duly authenticated copies of this concurrent resolution be sent to the President of the United States of America, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America, to the Honorable HIRAM L. FONG, Senator from the State of Hawaii, to the Honorable OREN E. LONG, Senator from the State of Hawaii, and to the Honorable DANIEL K. INOUYE, Representative from the State of Hawaii.

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Hawaii; to the Committee on Public Works:

"SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 5

"Concurrent resolution requesting the Federal Government to provide protective measures for the city of Hilo, county of Hawaii, State of Hawaii, against Tsunamis

"Whereas the city of Hilo, county of Hawaii, State of Hawaii has been inundated repeatedly by tsunamis resulting in great loss of life and property damage; and

"Whereas the U.S. engineers and other agencies of the Federal Government are seriously contemplating the construction of protective barriers in the form of seawalls, levees or terraces, etc., for said city; and

"Whereas the people of said city are desirous of and deem necessary that acceptable and adequate measures to protect said city from tsunamis be undertaken; and

"Whereas the Legislature of the State of Hawaii is in full accord with the wishes of the people of said city: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the First Legislature of the State of Hawaii, first special session of 1960 (the House of Representatives concurring), That it does hereby respectfully request the U.S. Congress, the U.S. Engineers and such other Federal agencies interested, to take immediate and appropriate action in the planning for and construction of such protective measures acceptable to the people of the city of Hilo and adequate for the protection of said city against the ravages of tsunamis; and be it further

"Resolved, That an authenticated copy of this concurrent resolution be sent to the Honorable William F. Quinn, Governor of the State of Hawaii, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America, to the Honorable HIRAM L. FONG, Senator from the State of Hawaii, to the Honorable OREN E. LONG, Senator from the State of Hawaii, to the Honorable DANIEL K. INOUYE, Representative from the State of Hawaii, to Lt. Gen. RESOLUTION OF NORTHERN ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION, VIRGINIA, MINN.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a resolution adopted by the membership of the Northern Electric Cooperative Association of Virginia, Minn., at its annual meeting on June 11, 1960, in opposition to increased interest rates on REA loans, be printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the present Federal administration has gone on record for increasing the interest rate on REA loans; and

Whereas an increase in the interest rate would cause a definite curtailment in REA operations and expansion: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Northern Electric Cooperative Association go on record as favoring the continuance of the present rate of interest on REA loans; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Members of the U.S. Senate and the House of Representatives from this State and area.

EMIL H. SANDE, Secretary.

RESOLUTIONS OF MINNESOTA DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, during the Minnesota department convention of the Disabled American Veterans held in Faribault, Minn., June 24 to 26, 1960, DAV delegates approved a number of resolutions dealing with commemoration of Veterans' Day, domiciliary care, disability benefits and related subjects.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these resolutions of the Minnesota department, Disabled American Veterans, be printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolutions were received, appropriately referred, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Committee on Finance:

"RESOLUTION REQUESTING THAT THE SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION LIBERALIZE THEIR INTERPRETATION OF PERMANENT AND TOTAL DISABILITY FOR THE PURPOSE OF FREEZING CREDITS

"Whereas it has come to our attention that many disabled veterans are not permitted to freeze their social security credits before attaining the age of 65 even though they are recognized as totally and permanently disabled by the Veterans Administration Federal Civil Service, private enterprise and insurance companies; and

"Whereas it appears that the Social Security Administration has set up certain requirements as to what constitutes permanent and total disability which are so rigid that it is impossible for many disabled veterans who are totally and permanently incapacitated to become eligible for social security benefits: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Disabled American Veterans, department of Minnesota, in annual convention assembled at Faribault, Minn., June 24, 25, 26, 1960, go on record requesting the Minnesota congressional delegation to immediately contact the Social Security Administration urging that the definition of total and permanent disability be liberalized, or that the law be amended to include a definition of total and permanent disability which will conform to the definition recognized by the Veterans' Administration and other government and private agencies.

"J. L. MONNAHAN,
"Department Adjutant."

To the Committee on the Judiciary:

"RESOLUTION ON COMMEMORATION OF VETERANS DAY

"Whereas November 11 was known for many years as Armistice Day, the day to commemorate the ending of World War I; and

"Whereas this day later became known as Veterans Day, a day presumably to commemorate the ending of various wars; and

"Whereas this Veterans Day is presently observed as a holiday by only Federal, State, and municipal employees; and

"Whereas most veterans for whom this day is named have to work on this semi-holiday: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That by means of this resolution adopted by the Disabled American Veterans assembled in convention in Faribault, Minn., June 24, 25, and 26, 1960, we petition the U.S. Congress to enact the necessary legislation to make Veterans Day, November 11, a national legal holiday to be observed by all as such; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to our Minnesota representatives in the U.S. Congress, and also all State departments of the Disabled American Veterans.

"J. L. MONNAHAN,
"Department Adjutant."

To the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"RESOLUTION ON DOMICILIARY CARE

"Whereas Minnesota has no domiciliary home under the Veterans' Administration; and

"Whereas there is a great need for beds for domiciliary and nursing care; and

"Whereas the Minnesota veterans who apply for domiciliary care are sent to other States, such as Milwaukee, Wis.; Hot Springs, S. Dak.; Clinton, Iowa, and Leavenworth, Kans.; and

"Whereas in some of the States the Veterans' Administration has taken over the State soldiers' homes and operated them as national domiciliary homes under the Veterans' Administration; and

"Whereas the capacity of the Minnesota Soldiers' Home is limited by lack of State funds: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Disabled American Veterans, department of Minnesota, in annual convention assembled at Faribault, Minn., June 24, 25, 26, 1960, That the Veterans' Administration should establish nursing and domiciliary care in Veterans' Administration installations for veterans in need of such care.

"J. L. MONNAHAN,
"Department Adjutant."

"RESOLUTION REQUESTING ADDITIONAL TERMINAL HOSPITAL BEDS

"Whereas this organization has been promised for the past 4 or 5 years that additional beds would be set up for terminal cases for those veterans who are suffering from severe long-term disabilities such as cancer, heart trouble, rheumatism, etc., and

"Whereas the Director of the Veterans' Administration has failed to keep his promise to provide additional beds for the reason, it is rumored, that terminal cases would freeze too many beds and curtail the care of surgical cases; and

"Whereas it is a known fact that many service-connected veterans who are in need of long-term care, regardless of whether or not the condition is service connected, are sent from the veterans hospital to rest homes and other institutions which provide little or no medical care, and

"Whereas there have been cases wherein the veteran has died within a few hours after being denied a bed at the veterans hospital or before arrangements could be made to place a veteran in a nursing home: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Disabled American Veterans, department of Minnesota, in annual convention assembled at Faribault, Minn., June 24, 25, 26, 1960, That we go on record requesting the Minnesota congressional delegation to immediately devise ways and means to set up at least 100 terminal beds at the Minneapolis Veterans' Hospital in order to take care of those veterans who are denied long-term care.

"J. L. MONNAHAN,
"Department Adjutant."

RESOLUTION OF LUTHERAN LAYMEN'S LEAGUE

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the 120,000 member Lutheran Laymen's League in its annual convention in Minneapolis, July 10 to 13, 1960, adopted a resolution expressing concern at the prevalence of violence, immorality and bad taste in mass media offerings.

I myself was cosponsor of the measure approved by the Senate in June establishing a Commission on Noxious and Obscene Matters which would provide the means for citizen consultation recommended in this resolution.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution of the Lutheran Laymen's League be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION 60–04

Resolution on immorality, violence, and bad taste in pictures, programs, and publications

Whereas decent citizens of the United States and Canada are becoming increasingly disturbed by the prevalence of immorality, violence, and bad taste in publications, motion pictures, television and radio programs, and in the mass communications media generally; and

Whereas the fundamental values of respect for God, for human life, for marriage, home and family, for property, for virtue, for good name and reputation are being degraded and eroded by these unwholesome influences and materials; and

Whereas these evils can be combated and rooted out only by the united and persistent efforts of all decent citizens; and

Whereas we Lutheran laymen, as followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, must be in the forefront of this battle for decency and morality: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Lutheran Laymen's League, assembled in convention in Minneapolis, Minn., from July 9 to July 13, 1960, hereby

(a) Commends and supports the producers of all acceptable publications, motion pictures and television and radio programs for recognizing and discharging their moral responsibilities in this respect;

(b) Commend the Postmaster General of the United States for his diligent efforts to clean up the mails;

(c) Encourage current efforts in the two Houses of the United States Congress to convene a conference of Federal, State, and local officials, together with representatives of other interested groups, to study this matter and make recommendations for ways and means to deal with the problem effectively;

(d) Take the necessary steps to have a delegate from the Lutheran Laymen's League and also a delegate from The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod participate in such a conference;

(e) Make a determined effort, as individuals and as a group, to see to it that none of these offensive influences come into our own homes by way of publications and television and radio programs, and that we and the members of our families pledge ourselves to choose our entertainment outside the home carefully and in accordance with God's Word;

(f) Pray fervently and frequently that Almighty God will strengthen each one of us, our families, our communities and our nations, so that we may overcome the dissemination of these unwholesome influences and lift our society to new and higher levels of morality, virtue and decency; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be released to the public press for publication and that copies be sent to the appropriate officials of the motion picture industry, the radio and television industries, the publishing industry, to members of the Congress and to other public officials and civic and religious leaders who are or should be interested in this matter.

RESOLUTION OF AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF PORT AUTHORITIES

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, it has been a matter of increasing concern to me to view the attempts by the Federal Government to take unto itself responsibilities clearly defined by the Constitution of the United States as within the province of the sovereign States of this Nation.

Recently, the American Association of Port Authorities, which represents every major port on the Atlantic, gulf, and Pacific coasts, adopted a resolution expressing grave concern and alarm over proposed action by a congressional committee toward officers of the Port of New York Authority in connection with a congressional investigation of the internal affairs of that local port authority.

I believe their position should be made a part of the public record, and so, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the resolution adopted by the American Association of Port Authorities, and urge that Members of this body give it their close attention.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the overwhelming majority of the departments, boards, authorities, organizations or other agencies exercising powers, jurisdiction, or authority with respect to the planning, development, construction, maintenance, or operation of piers, wharves, terminals, or other port or harbor facilities or improvements in the United States are, by reason of their creation by a sovereign State or a subdivision thereof, agencies of the several States rather than the Federal Government; and

Whereas each of said agencies, under the Federal-State system of government established by the Constitution of the United States, has been and should continue to be subject to the supervision and control of the State or the subdivision of the State which created it; and

Whereas attempts by the Federal Government to substitute Federal for State control of said agencies or to superimpose Federal control on State control thereof are in direct violation of the constitutionally established Federal-State system of government and will necessarily result in serious impediments to the provision by the States of necessary port and harbor facilities and improvements, to the detriment of the commerce of the United States and of the several States; and

Whereas the corporate members of the American Association of Port Authorities, Inc., from the United States enumerated on the list attached hereto and made a part hereof are State or municipal agencies or municipalities engaged in port and harbor activities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the board of directors of the American Association of Port Authorities, Inc., views with grave concern and alarm the recent actions of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives threatening to cite officers of the Port of New York Authority for contempt of Congress for declining, in obedience to the instructions of their superior officers; namely, the Governors of New Jersey and New York, to produce for congressional investigation detailed records as to the internal affairs of their local port agency; and be it further

Resolved, That the board of directors of this association hereby urges the House of Representatives not to act on the citation for contempt of the said local port officers if and when said citation is offered for consideration by the House; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each Member of the Congress of the United States.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PROXMIRE:

S. 3817. A bill for the relief of Helga G. F. Koehler; and

S. 3818. A bill for the relief of Krystyna Ratajczak; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BUTLER:

S. 3819. A bill for the relief of Mrs. William R. Zittle; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILEY:

S. 3820. A bill for the relief of Antonio Sanchez Morillo; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KEATING (for himself and Mr. SCOTT):

S. 3821. A bill to strengthen civil rights, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(See the remarks of Mr. KEATING when he introduced the above bill, which appear under a separate heading.)

By Mr. McGEE:

S. 3822. A bill to provide for the construction of the Savery-Pot Hook project; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

(See the remarks of Mr. McGEE when he introduced the above bill, which appear under a separate heading.)

RESOLUTION

Mr. MANSFIELD submitted a resolution (S. Res. 353) reaffirming U.S. policy in support of Inter-American Cooperation for the Welfare and Progress of the Western Hemisphere, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(See the above resolution printed in full when submitted by Mr. MANSFIELD, which appears under a separate heading.)

SAVERY-POT HOOK PROJECT

Mr. McGEE. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to provide for the construction of the Savery-Pot Hook project. I ask unanimous consent that a statement, prepared by me, relating to the bill, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 3822) to construct the Savery-Pot Hook project, introduced by Mr. McGEE, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

The statement presented by Mr. McGEE is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR McGEE

The Savery-Pot Hook reclamation project is one of the participating projects which was included in the Upper Colorado Storage Project Act passed in 1956. With several others, the Savery-Pot Hook project was designated to receive priority feasibility study by the Bureau of Reclamation. The feasibility study has been completed and was approved by the Secretary of the Interior on January 22, 1960.

The purpose of this bill is to transfer the Savery-Pot Hook project from section 2 of the Upper Colorado Storage Project Act to section 1, clause (2), so that it may be constructed, operated, and maintained by the Bureau of Reclamation along with the other participating projects which were authorized in the original act.

The second section of my bill would amend the act of 1958 which authorized the acquisition of lands and established the size of farm units on the Seedskadee project, one of those originally authorized by the 1956 act, to include the Savery-Pot Hook project.

As the demands of the future press upon us, it becomes more evident each day that resolute and forward-looking action is necessary to develop our water resources. The effect of this bill will be to move upper Colorado storage project one step further toward completion. It means bringing new economic life to an important section of Wyoming and Colorado which has labored under the tremendous handicap of a water supply which is both insufficient and unpredictable.

This bill has a direct relationship to the work being done by the Senate Select Committee on National Water Resources under the leadership of my colleague, Senator KERR. If the work of our committee has demonstrated one fact it is that there is a necessity for immediate action if we are to provide the water resource development which will enable us to fulfill our national objectives in the decades immediately ahead.

Therefore, I introduce this bill and recommend its early passage.

PUBLIC WORKS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1961—AMENDMENT

Mr. SCHOEPPEL submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H.R. 12326) making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army, certain agencies of the Department of the Interior, the Atomic Energy Commission, the Tennessee Valley Authority and certain study commissions, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

NOTICE OF HEARING ON NOMINATIONS OF ROY R. RUBOTTOM, JR., TO BE AMBASSADOR TO ARGENTINA, CHRISTIAN M. RAVNDAL TO BE AMBASSADOR TO CZECHOSLOVAKIA, AND HENRY S. VILLARD TO BE AMBASSADOR TO THE FEDERATION OF MALI

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I desire to announce that the Senate today received the nominations of Roy R. Rubottom, Jr., of Texas, to be Ambassador to Argentina; Christian M. Ravndal, of Iowa, to be Ambassador to Czechoslovakia; and Henry S. Villard, of New York, to be Ambassador to the Federation of Mali.

In accordance with the committee rule, the pending nominations may not be considered prior to the expiration of 6 days.

ADDRESSES, EDITORIALS, ARTICLES, ETC., PRINTED IN THE RECORD

On request, and by unanimous consent, addresses, editorials, articles, and so forth, were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. ROBERTSON:

Address entitled "Our Defense Posture," delivered by him at the annual banquet of the Virginia Court Clerks' Association, at the Hotel Chamberlin, Old Point Comfort, Va., August 5, 1960.

By Mr. WILEY:

Excerpts from address entitled "Citizens' Platform for the 1960 Campaign," delivered by him, and broadcast over Wisconsin radio stations.

Article on Boris Pasternak's last message to the world, written by Jhan Robbins, and published in This Week magazine on August 7, 1960; and excerpts from address on truth about United States relations with Cuba and Latin America, delivered by Senator WILEY and broadcast over Radio Liberty to people behind the Iron Curtain.

By Mr. YARBOROUGH:

Editorial entitled "Applause for Mr. YARBOROUGH," published in the Beaumont (Tex.) Enterprise of July 27, 1960.

TRIBUTE TO DAVID B. KARRICK

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, only 2 weeks ago, I had the great pleasure to salute and to congratulate a distinguished public servant, David B. Karrick, who was then upon the threshold of an expanded career of further service to his Nation.

The news that he was stricken by a heart attack almost upon the eve of his departure for Ecuador came as a shock to all of us, for if ever a man had the appearance of glowing vigor, it was he. His energy, his humor, and his conscientious devotion to duty were great assets to the District which he served as Commissioner. They would have stood us in good stead if he had served as an Ambassador. Certainly of him it can be said that, irrespective of party, his counsel was relied upon by those of us who were privileged to hear his testimony in behalf of measures affecting the welfare and progress of the District government.

Mr. President, both as chairman of the Public Health, Education, Welfare, and Safety Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, and as chairman of the American Republics Affairs Subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, I feel deeply the loss of a fine man and dedicated public official. I wish to extend to Mrs. Karrick and her family my deepest sympathy and condolences.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point my letter of July 22, 1960, addressed to the late Commissioner, and the article which appeared in the Washington Post on August 7, 1960, concerning his untimely death.

There being no objection, the letter and the article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 22, 1960.

Hon. DAVID B. KARRICK,
Board of Commissioners, D.C.,
District Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR COMMISSIONER KARRICK: Please accept my sincere congratulations upon your appointment as Ambassador to Ecuador. I know that you will bring to this important and challenging assignment the qualities of diligent effort, understanding, and high competence which distinguished your service as Commissioner.

It has always been a pleasure to work with you on District affairs for your frankness and your willingness to seek areas of agreement in the prompt solution of problems as they arose engendered confidence in the recommendations you proposed. These same qualities augur well for the future, in your new post in a critically important area of our foreign relations policy.

I wish for both you and for Mrs. Karrick every best wish and success in your tour of duty.

Cordially,

WAYNE MORSE.

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 7, 1960]

DAVID KARRICK DIES ON EVE OF NEW POST

(By James R. Carberry)

Former District Commissioner David B. Karrick was on the threshold of a new career when he died early yesterday.

Mr. Karrick, 67, was to have left Washington this month to serve as U.S. Ambassador to Ecuador. But death came in the form of a heart attack.

At 3 a.m., Mr. Karrick phoned his longtime friend and physician, Dr. B. W. Leonard. "I've got a pain in my chest," he said urgently. "Could you come over?"

Dr. Leonard, whose residence is about a mile from Karrick's home at 2438 Belmont Road NW., got there in exactly 12 minutes.

Mr. Karrick, wearing pajamas and slippers, was lying on a couch in his first-floor study. As Dr. Leonard rushed in he sighed deeply, sank back and died.

Mr. Karrick was alone in the house except for the family dog, Star, which was padding aimlessly in the study.

Dr. Leonard tried unsuccessfully to revive Mr. Karrick. A fire department ambulance squad also failed. The body was removed to Gawlers Funeral Home.

Mr. Karrick had returned Sunday from Europe, where his wife, Elizabeth, and two children, David, Jr., 16, and Lisa, 15, are spending a summer vacation.

Mrs. Karrick was notified of her husband's death yesterday by the consul general in Naples. A cable to the State Department here indicated air transportation would be arranged for a flight home today.

APPEARED HEALTHY

Mr. Karrick, a lean, silver-haired man who kept himself in top physical condition, had no history of a heart ailment. He had passed a thorough physical examination before being sworn in as Ambassador July 22, Dr. Leonard said, and the stroke was totally unforeseen.

Since stepping down last month as District Commissioner Karrick had been spending most of his time studying with the State Department for his diplomatic post.

Mr. Karrick had long hoped for an ambassadorship. He was fluent in Spanish, and often visited Latin America as a member of the Inter-American Bar Association. Only a few days ago he happily remarked, "It's a very stimulating experience I've got before me."

A table in his home was left littered with diplomatic working papers.

At the summer White House in Newport, R.I., President Eisenhower mourned Karrick's death as "sudden and tragic." The President said he and Mrs. Eisenhower "join his many friends in extending our deep sympathy to his family."

Secretary of State Christian A. Herter, at Marthas Vineyard, Mass., for the weekend, said:

"Mr. Karrick, who was sworn in as our Ambassador to Ecuador only a few days ago has had a distinguished career of service to his country.

"Because of his outstanding ability and and perception as well as his keen interest in Hispanic America I am confident that his services in this important post of Ambassador to Ecuador would have made a notable contribution to our relations with the Government and people of that country. His loss is deeply mourned by me and my colleagues in the Department."

Robert E. McLaughlin, who served with Karrick during all of the 4½ years he spent on the Board of Commissioners, added:

M'LAUGHLIN STATEMENT

"The people of the District—both those who knew him and those who did not—have lost a good friend. David Karrick served the interests of the poor and oppressed as a District Commissioner probably never has before.

"His untimely passing," McLaughlin said, "has deprived his country of a distinguished citizen who as its Ambassador would have contributed much to the peace of the world."

Former Engineer Commissioner A. C. Welling, now serving in Los Angeles, said: "I lost the finest and firmest friend I had in District government. It is a tragic loss for the country and for the District of Columbia."

As Commissioner, Mr. Karrick's chief responsibilities were the city's health, welfare, and corrections departments.

When Karrick took office, the administrative and medical staffs at District of Columbia General Hospital were at each other's throats. No headknocker, Karrick worked quietly and effectively to iron out the differences. Some officials have left, new ones have been brought in, and dissension at District of Columbia General has not been a front page topic for some time.

Mr. Karrick was impatient with verbosity, written or spoken. He liked people to come to the point quickly as he did.

In his first radio appearance after being named Commissioner in 1956, Karrick said bluntly the job didn't pay enough. The Commissioners then were paid $14,600 a year. Karrick said they deserved $22,000.

"As a newcomer," he said, "I am able to view the matter impartially and dispassionately. In so viewing it, my unbiased opinion is that the salary is not adequate compensation for the office." Now the Commissioners get $19,000.

On another occasion, so the story goes, Karrick was compelled to sit through an unctuous eulogy of himself by an after-dinner speaker. Among other things, the orator lauded Karrick's flaming patriotism for enlisting as a private in World War I. Finally the speaker finished and Karrick stood up.

"The real reason I enlisted as a private," he told the audience, "was because they told me that was the only way I could qualify for a commission." He ended the war a captain.

For all his plainspokenness, Karrick often showed genuine patience. Every few months, an elderly lady with a flowery hat and time on her hands used to come into his office and insist upon seeing the Commissioner.

"She always wants to talk about milk," Karrick would report afterward. "She doesn't know anything about milk. But she still wants to talk about it." He always heard her out.

An erect, perpetually ruddy man who wore excellently tailored suits, Karrick seldom failed to impress people meeting him for the first time. He particularly excelled in testimony before congressional committees.

At one hearing, Karrick sat through an overlong assessment of a bill's dubious virtues by the chief lobbyist for the measure. When it finally came his time to talk, Karrick began:

"Mr. ——— seems to think this bill embodies the Ten Commandments, the Beatitudes and all of the principles of the Christian religion. No bill can possibly do all things he says this one will do * * *."

REPORT CITED

One of Mr. Karrick's major undertakings as a Commissioner was the adoption of a more enlightened attitude toward criminal punishment. He headed the committee which issued the Prisons, Probation, and Parole Report in 1957. It recommended, in brief, that more use be made of probation and parole to rehabilitate offenders—and cut prison operational costs. Many of the recommendations have been carried out.

Mr. Karrick, who liked vests, steel-rimmed glasses, and an occasional cigar, was born in Boston, June 18, 1893. He attended Sidwell Friends School, received a bachelor's degree at Yale in 1914 and a law degree from George Washington University 3 years later.

After World War I he took over the presidency of Fidelity Storage Co., which his father founded in 1905. Mr. Karrick and his brother, James, also had sizable real estate interests, including the Valley Apartments at Belmont Road and Ashmead Place NW.

Mr. Karrick married the former Elizabeth de Blassis, an accomplished cellist and holder of a music degree from Yale, in 1932. Their son, David, attends the Brooks School in North Andover, Mass. A daughter, Lisa, is a student at the Potomac School in McLean.

POSITIONS HELD

Mr. Karrick, at one time or another, held the following positions: secretary of the board of the National Symphony Ochestra; vice president of the board of Garfield Memorial Hospital; trustee, Community Chest of Washington; vice president, board of the Washington Institute of Mental Hygiene; president, Kalorama Citizens Association; director, Washington Real Estate Board; director National Metropolitan Bank of Washington; president, Metropolitan Club; vice president, Chevy Chase Club, and member of the Yale, University, and National Press Clubs.

He also was a member of the St. Andrews Society and was a past master and 30-year member of Osiris Lodge No. 26 of the Masonic order.

Flags will fly at half staff throughout the city in memory of Karrick's passing. Funeral services are not yet definite.

KROCK ANSWERS OBJECTIONS TO ANTARCTIC TREATY

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, Arthur Krock, an eminent newspaperman and equally eminent conservator of American constitutional government, recently wrote an article supporting Senate confirmation of the Antarctic Treaty. Because the article specifically answers some of the most serious objections to the treaty, and because the Senate is scheduled to consider and act on the treaty within the next few days, I ask unanimous consent that the Krock article be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE IMPENDING SENATE ACTION ON ANTARCTICA

(By Arthur Krock)

WASHINGTON, August 4.—Just before the Senate recessed for the national conventions majority leader JOHNSON promised Chairman FULBRIGHT of the Committee on Foreign Relations that one of the first actions after the Senate reassembles on August 8 will be consideration of the Antarctic Treaty. The committee favorably reported this legislation on June 21.

Senator JOHNSON also promised opponents of the treaty sufficient time for full discussion of their objections, one being that the United States is giving away valuable mineral and other rights. Among these opponents, who include THURMOND of South Carolina and GRUENING of Alaska, is the very influential RUSSELL of Georgia, who made this statement to the Senate:

"I have very decided views on the subject, and I wish to have an opportunity to present them. I do not mean to suggest there will be a filibuster, but * * * I regard the treaty as of great importance and a very unfortunate step."

The vehemence of this opposition is surprising because of the great advantages of the treaty to the United States and the weight its rejection would give to a charge by the Soviet Union that the basic disarmament policy of this Nation is a sham. That policy is expressed by the standing offer of the United States to reduce armaments and ban nuclear explosions on a global scale if the compact is safeguarded by adequate inspection and control, a formula the Soviet Union accepted in signing the Antarctic Treaty.

ANOTHER FAVORABLE PROVISION

The treaty also reserves all United States territorial claims in Antarctica, and prohibits any signatory nation from making claims founded on its activities during the life of the treaty. This is a special restraint on the Soviet Union because its activities in the area are constant and second only to those of the United States. Moreover, if this nation were now to make a claim, its only clear title is to Marie Byrd Land, 20 percent of Antarctica and the least valuable area.

Furthermore, this action by the United States would be an implicit acceptance of the validity and priority of well-founded claims on the remainder by seven friendly governments. And it would reverse our historic position that sovereignty over unpeopled areas is acquired by discovery and exploration only when accompanied by an effective occupation. The latter is unattainable in a frozen terrain as large as the United States plus Europe.

By the requirement of effective occupation, while the United States remains free to continue exploration and scientific research throughout Antarctica, the treaty sets a precedent against Soviet claims of celestial sovereignty if its aeronauts should be the first to reach the moon or the planets. This is a vital defense policy in the space age. And the particular application of this provision to Antarctica is to bar the Soviet Union, which was one of its first discoverers and has been present in some force since 1956, from establishing missile bases. These, at a distance of 400 miles from Cape Horn and 2,000 miles from Melbourne, could command the Southern Hemisphere.

Treaty restraints on Soviet aggrandizement, in addition to the prohibition of claims based on activities during the life of the compact, are these:

NO LIMIT ON SURVEILLANCE

A ban on all military action, including nuclear explosions. A grant of unlimited and unilateral right of inspection and overflight to every signatory nation. This confers rights of entry to ships, aircraft, and bases for the purpose of assuring that the parties are conforming to all the provisions of the treaty.

The full Senate debate pledged by Senator JOHNSON will disclose the nature of the opposition to this great diplomatic achievement by the United States, whose chief negotiator was Herman Phleger, of San Francisco, then legal adviser to the Secretary of State. It was negotiated in a period when Soviet-American relations made it possible to gain Moscow's agreement to a compact which will demilitarize an entire continent and forbid nuclear explosions in an area where the winds would steadily blow fall-out northward over the entire Southern Hemisphere.

The present state of these relations is such that, if the Senate rejects the treaty, the progress it represents toward world peace will be canceled for the indefinite future.

THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN FOREIGN POLICY AND DOMESTIC POLICY

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, a common and generally misunderstood platitude as we move into the campaign is that foreign policy has become in almost every sense a more important issue than domestic policy, in the contest between the parties and their candidates.

In a recent article in the New York Times, a distinguished columnist who has devoted most of his life to foreign policy has made a beautiful analysis of the real relationship between foreign policy and domestic policy. He shows how domestic policy is, in a way, of more vital concern to the American people than ever before, because a strong and successful foreign policy depends, above all, on a domestic policy that assures strength and success at home. To lead the way to a just peace in this nuclear age will require, above all, a productive and strong America—strong morally, educationally, and economically, as well as militarily.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article by Mr. Sulzberger—which, incidentally, makes precisely the same point as does the Democratic platform—be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THERE IS ONLY ONE ISSUE IN THE END

(By C. L. Sulzberger)

Both parties seem agreed that foreign policy is the main issue of this year's election, but there is no widespread understanding of what this really means. To a degree not yet appreciated, our foreign policy is virtually a summation of all our policy.

The U.S. diplomatic posture is so directly tied to the Nation's strength and competence in other fields that it can no longer be regarded as a thing apart. We must plan for an integral whole. Foreign policy is merely one aspect of defense policy, economic policy, agricultural policy, and policy on civil rights, and vice versa.

It is still but dimly seen that we must limit our oversea commitments in relation to our abilities to fulfill them, or we must increase those abilities if we are to meet necessary commitments. For too long we insisted on negotiating from a position of strength without taking sufficient care to keep that position strong.

Farm policy produced gluts which foreign policy had to unload. Defense policy continued manufacture of outmoded weapons to equip foreign armies which sometimes used these weapons against our interests. And civil rights policy lagged as we preached civil rights to other lands.

For most of our national life foreign policy was regarded as a distasteful facet of Government. Politicians recalled that foreigners don't after all, vote; and only occasionally specific issues like war or tariff rates have intruded. But now, perhaps for the first time, both Republicans and Democrats recognize that survival depends on success in foreign policy.

One may hope the problem is approached intelligently and in its entirety. One may also hope that party leaders will explain in detail how important to our diplomatic effort are such matters as defense, agriculture and complete racial equality. Unfortunately, the campaign has begun with the usual bombast and a tendency to single out foreign scapegoats rather than to develop foreign policy.

THE EVER-PRESENT ENEMY

Both parties permit Khrushchev to figure in our private affairs to an embarrassing degree. It is somewhat humiliating to appeal to American voters to support a man only because he boasts he can deal with a Russian dictator. And it is ridiculous to have Democrats blame Republicans for all that went wrong in the past 8 years and, in reverse, to have Republicans still boasting that nothing indeed went wrong.

Each party certainly shares in the major miscalculations of two generations. Since 1917 we have misjudged the Russian revolution and since 1947 that of China. Dulles was always convinced that Soviet economic aid abroad was only a one shot effort. Republicans blamed the Democrats for losing China. Democrats blamed Republicans for almost losing the Middle East. In fact, we are just blaming ourselves as a nation. And the time for blame is past. Let us forget the mystiques of Truman and Eisenhower and the mistakes of Acheson and Dulles.

Let us ignore the distorted exorcisms of the keynote speakers, and adjust our policy to realities. We cannot, for example, continue to hypnotize ourselves into believing Taiwan represents 600 million Chinese when it doesn't even represent the majority of Taiwanese. We must leave behind our boastful "liberation" promises addressed to the people of Eastern Europe, having regrettably proven that we don't mean what we say.

We must completely apply domestic civil rights in order more sincerely to court the new nations of Africa and Asia and show them we truly believe in democracy. And we must pour more money into armament if we are to convince our allies and doubtful neutral states not only that we intend to protect them but that we are strong enough to do so. This is what foreign policy means. It means not only diplomatic leadership but the growth of our national product and our national intelligence.

The young men contending this election have already given signs they are prepared to throw off inherited superstitions. The American people recognize that everything is not going well for us in this, by no means best of worlds. Therefore, it is now up to our leaders to explain with a maximum of integrity and a minimum of platitude just what they hope to do about it. Foreign policy is not just the principal issue but the only issue.

WIDOW ON SOCIAL SECURITY HAS TO GIVE UP HOME; CANNOT AFFORD MEDICAL CARE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I call attention to another recent letter from a Wisconsin resident in support of better medical care for the aged. The letter shows how older people need assistance, so they will not lose their hard-earned dignity by having to ask for pauper's help from welfare agencies.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEAR SIR: I am writing in regard to the Forand bill. My mother-in-law was left a widow a few years ago. She collects about $54 a month social security. They owned their home, but now she has to give up the house because she cannot meet the expenses of repairs, taxes, and medicine she has to take because of high blood pressure.

She had to apply to the welfare board for help when my father-in-law lay ill for 4 years. The board is asking about $2,000 for the home which is, I believe, only about half of what the bill cost.

But I know there are a lot of people like her in need. That is why I would like to see the bill passed through Congress, and signed.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the President's message, which has just now been read to the Senate, shows very clearly, it seems to me, that, contrary to the views of many, in the next few weeks, this body will not be just a cockpit for partisan ambitions, but will be a place for the passage of responsible legislation.

The most significant aspect of the President's message is that both Republicans and Democrats are joined in regard to the fundamental objectives. Every item of legislation that has been advertised as being needed to be passed at this session is covered by the President's message, with the exception of housing legislation. I do not believe that is an insignificant omission from the message. In fact, I believe it is the most significant omission of any.

Mr. President, we may have our differences of opinion with regard to means; but I believe that with the President stating his own views and with the platforms of both of the major parties espousing all of these objectives, the measures we shall handle with respect to medical care for the aged, minimum wage, a farm program, and Federal aid for school construction are definitely laid down in the message.

Mr. President, let me refer to one other matter which is of tremendous importance: The President's message is one of movement and creativity. For example, we have a proposed Marshall plan for Latin America, where democracy is now very sadly beleaguered.

The President's determination that civil rights measures deserve top priority and should be dealt with even in a short session will be widely hailed, as will be his call for liberalization of our immigration laws. Civil rights measures are now items of high foreign policy, as well as issues of domestic tranquillity.

Mr. President, in the excitement of the moment, let us not forget that—as is always true—bipartisan support will be needed in order to enact any civil rights laws, even the two elemental measures which previously were omitted when the President's package was acted on, and which should be acted on now. Extensive Republican support is an indispensable element of the necessary bipartisan support. Therefore, the President's message, which I am confident has the backing of Vice President NIXON, is most welcome.

I should like to take this occasion to endorse the recommendations of the leadership conference on civil rights which calls for the passage at this session not only of the measures to which the President has called our attention, but also of a limited part III which will give the Attorney General statutory authority to act in representative school desegregation cases. In fact, we shall shall have an opportunity to deal independently with the aid to education bill; but I add that to the two measures the President has noted.

In addition, I state that it is a happy augury for the country that in a time of deep crisis, as the President has described it, we are entering into a period in which there will be not only bipartisan bickering and partisanship, which are part of the American scheme, but also fundamental agreement by Americans that the Congress should enact legislation which the country requires on these major issues.

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER'S MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, the President's message to this special session will, I hope, set the tone of all of our deliberations here. In the strongest terms, the President calls for sound legislation in a number of major areas, in which the 86th Congress has thus far failed to act.

There is nothing vindictive or flamboyant in what he says. But it is clear nonetheless that the President will not tolerate action by the Congress which is against the best interest of all Americans. In short, he will not stand idly by if the Congress attempts to play politics with destiny.

Let us review the President's program: He calls for new and much needed civil rights legislation "in keeping with the bipartisan support evidenced for these items last month" at our national political conventions.

He calls for immediate Federal aid for the construction of educational facilities at all levels.

He calls for realistic and equitable measures of assistance to senior citizens, to enable them to meet the health and medical needs of their retirement years.

He calls for minimum wage legislation to expand the coverage and raise the level of our Federal minimum wage.

He calls for farm legislation, the authorization of needed judgeships, the liberalization of our immigration laws, area redevelopment legislation, ratification of the Antarctic Treaty, and a number of other important bills presently before this Congress.

These are all serious and important national needs. Why has not the Congress enacted these measures up to now? One thing is clear: We had better get busy right now, for in the second session of Congress, some 6 months long, only one major bill was passed. I refer to the civil rights bill. Despite the fact that we passed an important civil rights measure just a short time ago, this measure does not go far enough. Both of our political parties at their national conventions called for expanded measures in this area. And today the President in his message tells us that "now"—and I want to stress his use of the word "now"—is the time to restore the sections of the original administration civil rights bill which were not included in the bill passed by the Congress.

I agree 100 percent that it is both realistic and just for the Congress to take advantage of this new atmosphere of agreement on civil rights measures, in order to pass additional legislation in this vital area.

The President's message, like his many previous messages to us, outlines a sound program for America. It is imaginative. It is vigorous. It calls upon us to move forward, not in reckless haste, but in a spirit of deliberate and realistic attention to the needs of every group of citizens in our Nation.

If we use the next 20-some days to pass all of these vital measures, all of which have been thought out and studied by committees of this Congress, we shall benefit our country immeasurably, and at the same time we shall strengthen all the nations of the free world.

I welcome the President's ringing challenge. I hope, as all Americans do, that we meet it.

ADDRESS BY FRANCIS CARDINAL SPELLMAN

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the distinguished Members of the Senate to the remarkable address delivered last weekend by Francis Cardinal Spellman, archbishop of New York, to the World Eucharistic Congress in Munich, Germany. In a sermon delivered to a congregation of 15,000 people, the cardinal warned that the whole world was living through "the most dangerous summer since 1939." Pointing to the crises which the Soviet Union has either caused or deliberately exaggerated in Latin America, in Africa, over the international waters of the Barents Sea, in East Germany, around the borders of Red China, and in Japan, the cardinal rightly pointed out that we live in a world divided between freedom and slavery.

This country faced a similar challenge exactly 100 years ago. At that time another great American, the founder of the Republican Party, also warned, in words that have won a permanent place in the annals of human freedom, that a house divided against itself cannot stand. Once again we are gathered here to face the challenge of a new slavery. We are trying to defeat the malignant efforts of international Communist conspirators whose promises, like piecrust, are made to be broken, and whose ultimate aim is the subjugation of all mankind to godless communism.

This task is not, as many people once thought, an easy one. In the one-third of the world that the Communists control, only the brave dare to show their continued love for freedom and reverence for God. Even in a neighboring country like Cuba, where the Communists have come very close to establishing themselves, it has required great courage for the Catholic Church to make the anti-Castro stand that it is now formulating. For the Cuban people who put their loyalty to God and their church above their fears of reprisal by a godless regime, we offer our deepest sympathy, respect, and admiration. For those people in Russia, Eastern Europe, and Asia who have seen their churches virtually swallowed up in the pagan rituals of communism, we offer our hope and faith that a brighter day will dawn for them in the future, that the vice of communism will some day be opened by the light of truth.

We in this country have a much easier time. Churches are open. Speech is free. Particularly in the free and easy exchange of arguments that characterizes a political campaign in this country, it is easy for us to forget the really serious nature of the challenge that is before all of us, Republicans and Democrats alike.

Mr. President, it gives me particular pleasure to ask to have the address by Cardinal Spellman printed in the RECORD. I think the words of Cardinal Spellman can remind us, perhaps better than the words of any political figure, of the grave struggle we face, and of the need to face that struggle with determination, with integrity, and with an abiding faith in the dignity of man and the power of the Almighty.

I ask unanimous consent that the sermon be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the sermon was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TEXT OF SERMON BY CARDINAL SPELLMAN

In these peaceless, imperiled times, daily we learn of new and more imminent Communist-promoted crises throughout the world—in Cuba and Latin America; in East Germany and the international waters of the Barents Sea; in China and the Congo—all ominous testimonials to the fast approaching possibility of the death-day to world freedom, the once fantastic, now realistic threat of Soviet Russia. Thus, in this, "the most dangerous summer since 1939," this International Eucharistic Congress, with its prayerful purpose to sustain the life of the world through dedication to God, is of vast and urgent import to all peoples all nations.

This Eucharistic Congress is a physical as well as spiritual symbol of the miraculous, indomitable power of perpetual prayer implemented by the strength of a people united by common principles and purposes—glorious testimonial to man's confidence in God and the ultimate victory of faith. For faith alone is the magical antidote to counteract the calculated cold-war gains of Communists' poisonous propaganda.

Pilgrims for peace, we have come from out many and far lands, with God's love in our hearts, countless witnesses to the ageless truth that deep, enduring practiced faith is an invulnerable defense against those whose avowed aim is to destroy God's image in man, provoke doubt and distrust among peoples of different nations and enslave the whole world.

Among us today are America's soldiers—representing every mother's son, every sweetheart, every husband, father, and brother still stationed at the outposts of the defense of America. They too are pilgrims for peace because theirs is the duty to protect civilization against Communist aggressors who for two decades have invaded nations, suppressing free peoples with steamroller precision, ruthlessly crunching and crushing their victims in the relentless grip of Soviet cruelties and tyrannies.

INTERNATIONAL TENSIONS HIGH

Our country's sons are here in Germany, as other thousands of America's sons are still stationed at different and distant free world bridgeheads, because international tensions have been heightened until they have reached today's imminently dangerous pitch.

We have been led down these perilous paths by our own apathy until once again we are faced with the probability of paying a terrible price for our complacency. Each Memorial Day Americans honor the men who fought other wars for us, men whose battles are over, men at rest but unforgotten. We have in our time, not the divided Nation the Civil War was fought to unite, but a divided world in which freedom and slavery are again the issue. We honor our dead only as we stand ready to defend the principles they died for; we dare not lose our sense of urgency. We and our allies, united in a partnership for peace, have no choice but to maintain an adequate guard against the grave dangers which threaten us.

An so, on the free world's bridgeheads our sons must continue to stand guard against the invasion of the Soviet enemy who has terrorized countless peoples and murdered other thousands because they dared to believe in God. Yet there are existing today in these subjugated lands, people of deathless faith whose heroic souls their craven Communists captors cannot enslave. Denied God's greatest gift—the holy sacrifice of the mass—faith still endures within their intrepid souls and sustains them in their agonies and griefs, an inspiration to us to receive with even greater gratitude and devotion, the sacred gift and grace of the Eucharistic sacrifice.

It is our privilege to fortify these anguished peoples through our remembering prayers so that they may know that we of the free world are beseeching our Lord in the blessed sacrament to deliver them from the doom that threatens to engulf them, praying God to restore to their own beloved homelands, His blessings of liberty and peace. We beg God to give them the strength to continue to stand firm within the protective mantle of their faith, for godless living will bear the bitter fruit that evil ever yields, and the time will come when the guilt-ridden Soviet masters of today will become the vanquished of tomorrow. But, until that tomorrow comes, we who are still free must not permit ourselves the smallest degree of indifference, procrastination or compromise; we must not lapse in our defenses, we must not falter in our faith, for there leads the road to disaster.

PRAYERS ARE FOR WORLD

We have made our pilgrimage as American Catholics but our intentions and our prayers are for the welfare of all our own countrymen and all the peoples of God's good earth. We know that, if in faith and love we pray with penitent hearts and follow God's commandments, graces from our Christ's sacred heart will flood and possess our own. We know this truth well, for there has ever been the light of our faith to guide us, faith which by God's grace is more important than life itself. I know that you, dear friends, even as I, can conceive circumstances in which we would willingly sacrifice our lives, but there is no conceivable circumstance in which we would be willing even to consider surrendering our faith.

Again and again the Soviet Union has intensified discord, stimulated anarchy, repudiated pledges in her determination to conquer the world through the war of nerves which she is waging against the whole free world. Under these chaotic conditions, the Soviets believe that the free world will collapse.

Only last month the Secretary General of the United Nations, Dag Hammarskjold, speaking of the crisis in the Congo, warned: "We are at the turn of the road where our attitude will be of decisive significance * * * not only for the future of the United Nations, but also for the future of Africa, which may, in present circumstances, mean the world." Then Mr. Hammarskjold added: "I do not use strong words unless they are supported by strong convictions." And it is my belief that men receive the stamina to stand strong in their convictions by living their faith.

No greater proof is there of this fact than the wondrous fact that, despite the spiritual treasons of our times, the faith of our citizens and our soldiers has held firm and fervent in the face of Communists who ruthlessly strive to kill men's souls by enslaving their hearts and their minds. Vividly I recall an experience here in Germany in October 1944. The Americans had already breached the Siegfried line and I was riding through a wooded section near Aachen with General Huebner, then commanding the 1st Infantry Division. As our jeep bumped and bounced over a corduroy road through a dripping fog, past the hulking specters of blown-up fortifications and overturned Nazi tanks, the General in his forthright way, said to me: "Archbishop, I do not say that only a religious man can be a good soldier, but I do say emphatically and challenge anyone to contradict, and the tribute we pay them would be meaningless if we cherished principle less today than they did yesteryear."

This truth is explicitly expressed by the Commander in Chief of the American Army in Europe, Gen. Clyde Eddleman, who last Memorial Day stated: "There is little hope for an easing of the tensions in the future. The soldier who lives up to his religion is a better man and a better soldier."

FAITH A SPIRITUAL YARDSTICK

Faith is the spiritual yardstick by which a man is ofttimes measured, whatever his vocation or profession may be. Even as the man who lives his life in faith is strengthened by the unique combination of its might, so a nation is fortified millionfold by the fearless faith of her citizenry. Never has the world had greater need for men of enduring faith than in these days when Soviet Russia, in a frenzied trend of new vilifications and violations, is testing the patience of peaceful peoples by setting on edge the nerve centers of the world.

Time after time until the years rolled into decades, we have seen the synthetic mask of friendliness melt away, exposing the contorted, fiendish face of the free world's worst enemy, from whose mouth thunders infamous insults, denunications and threats. Like a wild beast of the forest who has tasted the blood of its prey which it has stalked to its ultimate death, Soviet Russia's master Communists have become drunken with lust and power.

In England, Prime Minister Macmillan only 2 weeks ago also warned: "If the present trend continues, we may all of us find ourselves caught in a situation from which we cannot escape."

The festering poison of hatreds fostered by Soviet Russia in once friendly nations of the hemispheres is an integral part of the enemy's master plan to replace democracy with international communism—a dreadful, powerful weapon in the hands of belligerent, pagan peoples. But, no nation is more powerful, no nation mightier than a country fortified by God-revering, faith-loving people; and, against the outrages of a pagan enemy, only a country protected with the priceless endowment of a patriotic, prayerful people can long endure. By that spiritual standard of survival, there is no mightier nation than our own.

Dear pilgrims for peace, I beg you to unite your prayers with mine beseeching the Eucharistic King to forever keep our beloved America, a nation dedicated to the defense of its own free life and the protection of the life of the world through consecration to Almighty God.

NINETEEN HUNDRED AND SIXTY CIVIL AIR PATROL INTERNATIONAL AIR CADET EXCHANGE

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, more than 250 Civil Air Patrol cadets from the United States and 18 other nations are completing 3-week exchange visits this week. This most commendable venture in international exchange is an important people-to-people contact in which 130 U.S. cadets from 50 States, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia visit 18 nations and a similar number of cadets from these 18 nations have visited Washington and 19 of our States. Typical of the American participants are the five honor cadets who visited Denmark for 3 weeks under this program. The group was joined in Denmark by cadets from Belgium and Canada. In the group were Darrell J. Cook, of Pleasant Grove, Utah; Manuel Estela, Salas Arecibo, P.R.; James H. Hull, Jr., College Park, Md.; Ronald P. Patton, Lawrenceville, Ill., and James M. Roark, Merced, Calif. These boys were accompanied by Col. Barnee D. Breeskin, of Washington, and Maj. Claude B. Dodson, of New Haven, Conn.

The cadets spoke before many groups in their host countries and at some points in their tour were within 40 miles of Soviet-dominated East Germany. In Denmark, as guests of Danish families, the boys visited local industries and farms and met with flying groups.

Mr. President, as a sample of the activities of these exchange cadets, I ask unanimous consent that the schedule of activities during their visit to Denmark be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the schedule was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, the President of the United States, in a recent speech, mentioned that there were, in addition to the programs of the two major political parties, a third platform, which was the platform of the President of the United States, representing the program which the President has sought for a long time to have enacted into law.

The President has asserted his firm leadership and has reiterated his views, with which I believe most Americans agree, that this session of the Congress ought to act solely in the interest of the people—and I may add, parenthetically, not in the sole interest of any one personality or individual. In pursuit of the President's desire, for the public welfare, for the enactment of the legislation which he has responsibly suggested and in which he has again reasserted his leadership in his message he, first of all, reminds us that the Congress has cut severely the mutual security program in the pending bill by more than half a billion dollars. The President rightly asks Congress to restore the appropriation for mutual security.

Both parties at their conventions earnestly supported the principle of mutual security, and they now have an opportunity to show to the country that they actually meant what they said; and the President has given them that opportunity.

The President makes a new proposal for an authorization of the magnitude of $600 million, to be granted to help our Latin American neighbors strengthen their social and economic structure and improve the status of their individual citizens. This is a program demonstrating leadership, and deserves to be acted on favorably. The President points out that if the Congress delays too long in that measure, the effect sought by the program will be considerably vitiated in view of the fact that the Economic Conference of the American Republics will convene at Bogotá on September 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUSH in the chair). The time of the Senator from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent to have an additional 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, the President of the United States has also proposed that there be presented before the General Assembly of the United Nations an American plan for greater use of our combined agricultural abundance to help feed the hungry of the world.

The President has also called attention to the fact that only one major measure, of all those on which he asked for action in his message of May 3, had been passed. That was the civil rights measure, which had two major deletions, which he now hopes may be restored by bipartisan support. Congress will be given an opportunity to restore those two items, as the President of the United States has requested.

I have further comments to make on the President's message, but I will defer them until later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, at the conclusion of morning business, I wish to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? There appears to be none, and morning business is closed.

Mr. RUSSELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I have conferred with the minority leader. I should like to make a very brief statement for the information of the Senate. First, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its deliberations today it stand in adjournment until 12 o'clock tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS DURING SENATE SESSIONS—LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Foreign Relations, because of the special problems which face them, have permission to sit during the sessions of the Senate for the remainder of the session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, we have discussed this matter. There is an authorization request for mutual security in the message from the President, which will require meetings by the Committee on Foreign Relations. There are also requests with respect to the so-called interest rate ceiling and the Medicare bill, which are pending before the Committee on Finance. Obviously that committee will have to meet, in case the Senate should convene early. If the Senate meets at noon it will offer no great difficulty, but I apprehend there will be days when we shall convene quite early. The committee very manifestly could not do any business, or consider these measures which have come from the House of Representatives, unless the committee were privileged to sit.

I think I should amplify my statement by saying that requests with respect to the other committees, as they are made, will be considered from day to day.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. That is agreeable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposal of the Senator from Texas regarding the two committees? The Chair hears none; and, without objection, the request is agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I wish to say, for the information of all other committee chairmen and all other members of committees, in the event there is a desire to have the other committees meet during the sessions of the Senate for the remainder of this session of Congress, we should follow the procedure we have heretofore followed; namely, there should be filed a request with the secretary of the minority or the secretary of the majority, and such requests will be cleared with the leadership on an individual committee basis.

Mr. President, I should like to add to the statement that we expect to have evening sessions. We expect to have Saturday sessions. We expect to convene early and to stay in session late. I should not wish to be arbitrary about the time of a recess in the evening or the time of convening in the morning, but after having had conversations with the minority leader about the matter, in view of the fact that 437 of our colleagues in the other body are up for reelection and I have no desire to keep the people from seeing them and hearing them and having them debate the issues of the day, in view of the fact that some 30 of our Members are up for reelection, and in view of the fact that we shall have a presidential election this year it is imperative that we conclude the important business as early as possible. I know my colleagues will wish to be cooperative. I do not anticipate any obstruction.

I wish to inform the Senate that, generally speaking, we shall plan to come in at 9:30 or 10 o'clock in the morning and to work until 9:30 or 10 o'clock in the evening. This will include Saturdays. I hope that the Members of the Senate will adjust their schedules accordingly.

We have returned 1 week earlier than the House of Representatives is to meet, in the hope that we can complete action—at least committee action—on some of the measures which the House acted upon before we left, such as the medical care bill. We have the minimum wage bill on the calendar. The Antarctic Treaty is scheduled for consideration. The public works bill is on the calendar. We expect to consider all those bills at an early date.

At the moment the Senate should know that appropriation bills will have priority. Conference reports, of course, are privileged.

Second, we will consider the Antarctic Treaty. It is the pending business.

Third, we shall consider the minimum wage bill.

Fourth, when and if reported we shall consider the medical care bill; and then, perhaps, the situs picketing bill.

Those are the matters as to which the House has already taken action or anticipates taking action.

Other measures will be considered. I would not expect us to be able to announce at this time exactly how many additional measures will be considered, or when, but the calendar will be called from time to time. When, as, and if committees report proposed legislation, which has been thoroughly considered, the appropriate policy committees of the respective sides will give the bills thorough and diligent consideration.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to my friend.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think I can assure the majority leader from this side of the aisle—and I believe I can assure him so far as all the affiliates of our party are concerned—that it is not in the tradition of the Republican Party at any time to obstruct or to thwart, but instead we wish to carry out the great tradition of putting the emphasis on the national interest. The President made that abundantly clear in his message.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the Senator will permit, I should like to finish one thought.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I simply wish to make it abundantly clear that I did not intend in any remark I made to imply that the minority would obstruct.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I do not believe they will. I intended to speak affirmatively.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DIRKSEN. We certainly will keep foremost at all times the national interest. That has been emphasized over and over again by the President.

I am sensible of the fact that the President has submitted very considerable agenda in the message which came to the Senate today. Much of the program, of course, is old ground. Hearings have been held as to many of the measures involved, such as area assistance, housing, the interest ceiling, and so forth.

How much we can achieve in this session remains to be seen, but we shall be only too glad to cooperate to the fullest. We have no objection to meeting early. We have no objection to Saturday sessions, for, as the President indicated, the business before Congress is an unfinished task and we should stay on the job until it has been consummated. In that spirit we shall approach our responsibilities in this session.

We would ask, of course, that this be done in complete fairness, and I am sure it will be, because all those who are in this body—our national party managers and our candidates—I am sure will cooperate and be present during the consideration of these things which are so vital to the public.

I assure the majority leader that that will be the spirit in which we shall approach our duties and responsibilities.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank the Senator for his very kind statement.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the majority leader advise us whether he is prepared to give us all the assistance possible in connection with depressed areas legislation, on which I understand the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], doubtless plans to hold hearings beginning Thursday? The President has indicated that there are certain forms of area assistance legislation which he would be glad to approve, and I am sure that all of us are desirous of seeing that those areas with chronic labor surpluses receive some recognition of their serious plight during this session of Congress. What assurance can the majority leader give us as to that proposed legislation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Senator from Texas can give assurance only for himself and for the majority of his party that he has consistently supported and advocated legislation in this field; and if the President had seen fit to sign the measures that we passed, we would have had area assistance legislation some time before.

As I recall, the Senator from Pennsylvania was one of the real leaders in the passage of this type of legislation and attempted to prevail upon the President to sign some bills that were vetoed.

I am not familiar with the exact form of bill which will be presented by the Senator from Illinois, but I can assure the Senator of my concern for the need of the proposed legislation, which is evident from the active interest which I have displayed.

I do not mean to imply that the Senator from Pennsylvania has not such concern because, as I recall, he personally called on the President and urged him to sign a bill which Congress had passed. I will certainly keep an open mind and do anything I can consistent with the program of the session.

As the Senator from Pennsylvania knows, we felt, even with the sterling leadership of the minority, that it would be impossible to pass four appropriation bills, the minimum wage bill, the medical plan for the aged bill, and the situs picketing bill, and dispose of the Antarctic Treaty and still get to the conventions. Some of us wanted to go to the conventions.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; I was aware of that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. We evolved the best plan we could, and it was our intention to return and complete action primarily on the bills that were passed by the House, the four appropriation bills, minimum wage bill, which was passed only a few days before adjournment; the medical plan for the aged which was passed only a few days before adjournment; and the public works bill, which was passed only a few days before we adjourned.

We had no opportunity really to consider those measures. That is why we returned. But we indicated our intention to our colleagues then, and we still hope that we can give high priority to the measures which the House has passed, and adjourn by Labor Day, because it would be unfair to Members of the House, and to at least a third of the Members of the Senate, to ask them to remain here and deprive their constituents of an opportunity to observe them in action.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. I am a little disappointed at the inference that I read into the Senator's remarks, that since an area assistance bill has been vetoed by the President, perhaps there may be no due consideration to the area assistance legislation which the President has again requested in his message. In the message he says he will approve such legislation if it is directed toward meeting the needs and is free of the objectionable provisions which the other bill contained. I believe that the President had requested 27 items of general welfare legislation, of which only 6 have been passed by this Congress. Instead of the rather narrow agenda proposed by the distinguished majority leader, I hope that some consideration will be given to the request of the President that this Congress dispose of the unfinished business which he again calls to our attention, and with respect to which he asks the serious attention of this Congress. I note that the President has nothing to say about our getting away by Labor Day, because I suspect the President has plenty of time, and since he has plenty of time, I am perfectly willing to go along with him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank the Senator for his observations. I am not able to speak about what the President does with his time. We have passed two area assistance bills, as I recall, and the President has vetoed both of them.

I observe that a good many of the recommendations the President made today have heretofore been acted upon by the Senate. Early in February the Senate passed a bill for Federal assistance to schools. I never comment on the procedures of the other body. That is a matter for them. But if the President is as persuasive with the Republican members of the Rules Committee as we were with members of the committee in the Senate in connection with the passage of the school bill, a rule can be obtained on that bill, and I am sure some action will be taken on it.

The bill for assistance to the elderly is the next item. The administration had some difficulty making up its mind, I might say, in complete frankness, as to what kind of program it wanted. Many conferences were held with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the Secretary asked that action be delayed. He finally returned with a plan. In the closing weeks of the session the Departments of Labor and Health, Education, and Welfare came forward with the administration plan. The House has acted upon the measure, but I do not think anyone contends that the Senate has had adequate time to consider it.

There has passed the House—and it has been placed upon the calendar—a fair labor standard coverage bill, namely, the minimum wage bill.

We were told that some Members of the minority would offer a number of amendments to that bill. I believe it was said that 20 or 30 amendments would be offered to the bill. Consideration of the amendments would require a good deal of time. For that reason we knew we could not get final action on that bill before the conventions. We placed high priority on that bill. We want nothing to jeopardize its passage, even if 20 or 30 amendments are offered.

The farm problem is mentioned in the President's message. We passed 3 or 4 farm bills that have been vetoed. We passed the overall farm bill some time ago and the President vetoed it. We appeared on television and explained it.

Then we passed a tobacco bill, as I recall, and the President vetoed it.

Then we passed a wheat bill, and he vetoed that.

I do not know what kind of farm legislation, if any, we shall be able to get that meets with the approval of Secretary Benson. I am willing to try. I am genuinely in earnest in trying to find a solution, and I told the minority leader within the hour that we would explore the situation.

I do not blame the Secretary of Agriculture, Ezra Taft Benson, for all the farm mess. I do not think any single man could get us in as big a mess as we are in in that field. After all, Secretary Benson did not appoint himself. He has had the collaboration, if not the cooperation, of the President and the Vice President in his efforts. Some of the minority Members, including the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], have really worked to try to get a farm program. However, it seems that we cannot get one that will satisfy the administration. We have passed three and they have been vetoed.

In connection with the area assistance program, I believe we passed two measures, both of which have been vetoed. My colleagues can correct me if I am in error. I know one was vetoed this year and one was vetoed previously. Many vetoes have been threatened.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I will not yield until I finish.

Mr. SCOTT. We have not passed a good one yet.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I want to go through the list of items in the President's program, because I think it is rather tragic that, in the twilight of his career, after 7½ years, the President, upon his return from Newport should set out all the items that are embraced within the Democratic platform. I am glad he was reminded of the needs of the country. I wish that he had exercised the same kind of leadership during the past 7 years. If he had, I think most of the proposing measures would have been passed. I would not include the subject of the judiciary, because I think some patronage is involved in the request for 40 new judgeships. We have made studies of that need. I think some additional judgeships are needed. I would support a bill to create some additional judgeships. I asked the Judiciary Committee to consider the problem, and I think the committee reported a bill which provided for some, but we have never been able to get an agreement that would justify bringing such a measure before the Senate. I do not believe that we can consult the necessary political committees in the States, then have the FBI review the character and experience of all the nominees, make a determination, and then send the recommendations to the Judiciary Committee, which would hold hearings on the recommendations, and then actually get the nominees confirmed so that their services would be of much value between now and January. That may be a matter to be deferred, in the light of important measures such as minimum wage, medical care, situs picketing, and so forth.

The highway modernization program. The airways modernization program. Both of those measures must originate in the House, because they are revenue measures. I of course am not able to speak for the House.

There is the proposed repeal of the interest rate limitation on long term Treasury bonds. We believe that the interest rates are high enough, and we are not in favor of repealing the limitation. We have been against this proposal and against high interest rates, and we are against them in our platform. We believe that such a proposal is totally unjustifiable. Congress has been wise, in our opinion, to refuse to let the sky be the limit. Every time an election is held—as one recently was in North Dakota—the people seem to back us on that stand, and seem to confirm it.

I know that there are many things in the platform with which every Member does not agree. The platform is something like a bill that is passed by Congress. Some like some of the things in it and do not like others. In performing our function we must weigh the good against the bad and do what is the best for all concerned.

The people of the country have not had an opportunity to pass on the platforms. A few changes were made in the Republican platform during the last days prior to the convention. The people are not completely familiar with it, and do not know just how far it goes. I am pleased, however, that the President, in the twilight period of his administration, has enthusiastically and dramatically come out for this program. If he can influence some members of his party to favor such proposed legislation, we will have a better chance next year to pass it.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the Senator——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I do not yield at this time. The next item in the President's list is a postal-rate increase. A measure to carry out that proposal must originate in the House, and that body must give first consideration to it. I do not believe I can speak with complete certainty, but certainly I would not want consideration of such a measure to interfere with the consideration of a minimum wage bill, a medical care bill, the Antarctic Treaty, the appropriation bills, the situs picketing bill, and the other matters that are on our agenda, on a majority of which the House has already completed action and is awaiting our action.

The next item refers to a continuation of the long-established authority for the President to reorganize the executive branch. I do not know what plans the President has to reorganize the executive branch of the Government. He has had the authority for a long time. He has had ample opportunity to reorganize anything in the executive department he wanted to reorganize.

Some complaint has been made by members of the armed services that he has not taken steps to cut out fat in defense and put into it some muscle. I am not one to be arbitrary about it. If we can get action in that field without delaying the medical care bill, which is important, the minimum wage bill, which is important, and the situs picketing proposal, which is important, the appropriation bills, which are important, and other bills which are important, and still give us an opportunity to engage in the campaign, I would not object to it.

The President then mentions the Antarctic Treaty. That is the pending business before the Senate.

The President refers, next, to a liberalization of the immigration laws. We have made attempts to do that. We brought a bill to the floor of the Senate. I should be glad to have further meetings with the appropriate committees on that subject. I have talked to the minority leader about it several times. I have discussed with him the matter of the liberalization of the immigration laws on several occasions. I should be glad to contribute anything I can to see to it that consideration is given to that subject.

I believe that covers generally the items the President mentions. I now yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, of course I do not have the time now to catalog—in view of the parliamentary situation—any disagreement with the Senator from Texas. It is my firm hope that, while the Senator from Texas expresses concern for the twilight of the President's service, the Senator from Texas is not similarly in the twilight of his senatorial services.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I would hope not.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to point out that with respect to farm legislation the President has not asked for it at twilight, but has asked for it at dawn. He asked for it many times. He asked for it again in January. The President points out that he made one further attempt to resolve the issue and that he urged Congress to work its will. The President told the leaders of both bodies, "You pass the legislation. Pass it within certain broad guidelines, and I will approve it." Neither body has done so. The Secretary of Agriculture is not the majority leader of the Senate and he is not the majority leader of the House. The President has, in effect, said, "In an effort to get along with you, I throw up my hands. You send me a bill."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I do not know what Secretary Benson is in favor of.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not know what kind of bill is favored by the majority leader.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I will not make a personal attack on the Secretary of Agriculture while he is in Europe. I observe that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry time and time again asked the Secretary to make specific recommendations.

I observe that time and time again Congress passed bills, only to have them vetoed by the President.

I am inclined to the view that any objective and serious and well-intentioned person would not be optimistic about passing an overall farm bill which would serve the American farmers and still get the approval of Secretary Benson, because we have tried to do it for some time.

Still farm mortgages have been going up and up and up, from $14 billion when Secretary Benson took over, to $21 billion, an increase of 50 percent. Farm income has been going down and down and down. There has been a 20- to 30-percent reduction in farm income.

Now we are just a few weeks before the campaign. Most Senators know that we will not be able to pass many measures which the House has not already passed. We cannot get them out of committee, if we are to follow the committee procedure, with hearings, and so forth.

I do not believe anyone wishes to stop a minimum wage bill from being enacted. Senators can stop it if they throw in a great many other bills. I do not know of anyone who would wish to stop a medical plan for the aged. That can be stopped, if Senators wish to stop it. I do not know of anyone who wants to stop the four appropriation bills, with the public works bill containing great conservation features, to harness our streams with dams, to provide more power and energy for our people. Those bills can be held up if other matters are brought in.

However, if the Republicans will take the President's recommendations on page 4 of his message and, with the exception of the interest rate recommendation and two or three other items, which must begin in the House, and if they will join us in January—if they are still here in January—I am sure that we of the Democratic Party will do our part.

The Democratic Party is willing to pass a school bill. We showed that we were ready to do so in the Senate in February. We are willing to pass a minimum wage bill. We passed one a few years ago which was 10 cents higher than the President had recommended. He had recommended 90 cents, and we set the rate at $1.

I am sure we are ready to pass a farm bill. We have already passed three of them which the President has vetoed.

I am sure we will pass an area assistance bill. We have passed one, and the President has vetoed it.

I am sure we can pass a bill to create new judgeships. Such a bill has been reported. It may not go as far as some persons want it to go, because there are certain patronage considerations which we do not want to go into.

I am sure we will act on a liberalization of the immigration laws.

The Antarctic Treaty is ready to be acted on now. So if the Senator will help us with the program we have come back to complete, namely, to act upon bills which the House has passed; namely, appropriation bills for the next fiscal year, bills which have the highest priority; if the Senator will help us to pass a medical plan bill, a minimum wage bill, a situs picketing bill, to act on the Antarctic Treaty, and other general measures, then we shall be glad to consider whether or not we should remain in session longer to consider some other items, if it is the will of the majority, and of course the majority can do that.

I simply point out that we have had 7½ years to receive this inspiration and this stimulus. Now that the President has given it to us, I hope Senators will digest it.

I do not know whether some of my colleagues have observed it, but it appears that the Republicans, because of the North Dakota elections and other elections, are getting frightened, the closer we come to the general elections. Who would have thought that in August we would get a strong program like this? It reads like the Democratic platform. [Laughter.] I am not sure that it was not compared with the Democratic platform.

Mr. SCOTT. If it does read like the Democratic platform, the Senator from Texas should be in haste to have it enacted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Senator from Texas is in haste to act, but the Senator from Texas will proceed in an orderly manner. We shall proceed in an orderly way to the consideration of a minimum wage bill, to a situs picketing bill, to a bill providing medical care for the aged.

We shall proceed in an orderly manner to the consideration of a public-works bill to provide for conservation. We shall proceed in an orderly way to a consideration of important executive treaties. We shall proceed in an orderly way to a consideration of other matters affecting the Nation's welfare. We shall not preclude the consideration of any of them.

I point, in frankness, to the bills upon which the House has already acted, bills which we have some reasonable assurance, as realistic people, of enacting.

We know that Congress will not stay around until November, even if the President does say he would like to have all these matters considered. If he does, and if he makes any imprint and impression upon the Members of Congress, we can consider them early in January, regardless of who is elected, and pass some of them.

I shall not foreclose the consideration of any matter on the list, but we shall take them up in order, and preferably in the order in which the House has passed them.

I have had a gentlemen's agreement with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], who is always delightful to work with. He is always fair. I commend him for his cooperation. He and I have foreclosed the consideration of nothing, but we have outlined what is at the head of the list, what the House has already acted upon, and what is already, in some instances, on the Senate Calendar.

We have made provision for the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Finance to meet, so that they can consider those measures on which the House has acted.

I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I simply wish to thank the Senator from Texas for his eloquent plea in confession and avoidance.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for his admission that I was eloquent. I welcome the Senator's support. If the Senator can prevail on his President to sign some of the measures we have passed, I hope he will be more successful than he was in connection with the area redevelopment bill.

Mr. SCOTT. If we pass good bills, the President will sign them.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I am sure that as time goes on, my distinguished and beloved friend from the greatest unfrozen State of the Union will have to be a little more precise. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I would remind the Senator from Illinois that I come from the largest State in the Union south of the North Pole. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. When I say "precise," I should correct the RECORD to the effect that, first, there was the tobacco bill, and it was signed by the President.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The tobacco bill of last year was vetoed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It was signed because, in part at least, I did my very best, in view of the interest of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER] and the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JORDAN], to get that bill signed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. If the Senator will read the RECORD, he will see that one tobacco bill was vetoed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. One was vetoed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. So much opposition broke loose that it was necessary to act on another tobacco bill, and the President signed that one. I commend the Senator from Illinois for getting the President to correct the mistake he had made.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Secondly, still speaking in the semantic field of precise language, the Senator from Texas said, "When the campaign begins." I thought the campaign had begun quite a long time ago. [Laughter.]

I apprehend that from time to time there will be political intrusions in this great deliberative body. It would be rather strange if that were not so. But always we shall cooperate in the best of grace and good spirit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. There is nothing in my life of which I am more certain than that the Senator from Illinois will cooperate. If I said that the campaign had not begun, I should have said that the campaign had not begun so far as I was concerned. I did not intend to include the presidential nominee of the party of the Senator from Illinois, because that nominee has already made some trips. I had planned to go ahead and try to transact the people's business and get it behind us, and then officially to open our campaign. I am certain there are those who will attach political motives to everything we do.

The Senator from Illinois has spoken for 10 minutes, we have covered a variety of subjects, and we have had complete agreement. So far as I was aware, politics did not enter into our discussion; neither did the convention nor the election. I believe it will be that way throughout this session, so far as the Senator from Illinois and I are concerned.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am sure of that. I would add to that, of course, a commendation of the majority leader for his diligence during the last session. He was here; there is no question about it. We have an understanding that if I am absent, he will give me a pair; and if he is absent, I shall give him a pair. That arrangement had to be exercised only once, as I recall, in the course of the last session. So I commend the Senator from Texas for his diligence.

However, I must make one comment concerning Secretary of Agriculture Benson. When the Senator observed that no one man could develop quite the dilemma and quite the problem which confronts the wheat farmers of the country, that statement is absolutely true.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to permit me to make one comment?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I wish to return the compliment of the Senator from Illinois. He, too, was here. I know of no Member of the Senate who spent more hours in the Senate than did the Senator from Illinois. He and I are not necessarily presiding on the respective sides from time to time, but we are usually here. When we are not here, we are always prepared to let each other know of the reasons, and they must be very compelling for either of us not to be here. So I commend the Senator from Illinois for his diligence and his leadership of his party.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the Senator from Texas. Returning to my statement concerning Secretary Benson, one man could not have developed this predicament.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. DIRKSEN. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will wait until I have made my observation.

That predicament was developed by preceding Congresses, in which the present majority in both the House and the Senate also had majorities. There was no change in philosophy, and the Secretary of Agriculture became the administrator of policies which were laid down, and which Congress has refused to change.

The President spoke of the whole case in his message, when he said that the problem was deadlocked. So it is. Therefore, it was not Mr. Benson who caused the predicament; it was simply Mr. Benson as an instrumentality in carrying out what other Congresses had put on the books and refused to change.

Now I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I wish to correct the last statement. We have passed bill after bill, and the bills have gone to the President's desk. Then the President joined with Mr. Benson and vetoed them.

The only agricultural commodity which is in any kind of good, worthwhile economic condition at present is tobacco. Does the Senator from Illinois know why that is? It is because when President Eisenhower took office, there was on the statute books a 3-year law on which the farmers of the Nation had just voted. It remained in effect, and it was working so well at the end of the 3 years that the administration simply had to let it continue longer. They did not fool with it.

Every other commodity which the administration has fooled with is in an awful condition. The farmers of the Nation are in poor condition. Everyone realizes that Benson did not do it all, but he did make recommendations to the President, and the President vetoed the bills which Congress passed, thus putting the farmers in the condition in which they now find themselves.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The only difficulty with that observation is that after our experts went abroad and surveyed our export market, they concluded that in 7 years we would have no tobacco export market left. The President was thinking in terms of the long range future of the tobacco growers when he took the firm stand he took.

But when it comes to sending bills to the President, I refer to the area assistance bill to which the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK] has alluded. The bill which the Senate passed provided $389 million.

The administration bill, which I introduced, called for $53 million. The conference version of the bill called for $251 million. And the President was so basically correct when he said there were provisions which would fritter away the people's money, and he had no choice except to veto the bill which went to him.

The majority leader is correct in what he said about medicare. That bill, along with a dozen amendments of the Social Security Act relating to disability and disability age and benefits for the beneficiaries under the social security system, and so forth, was, in the main, without objection. The only difficulty lies in the medicare proposal.

I submit to the Senate that, in addition to the Mills bill, there are presently in the Finance Committee eight substitutes. There is one by the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON]; there is one by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS]; there is one by the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA]; there is one by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY]; and there are others. So, when someone says the President has not been able to conclude on some of these things, I point out that the Congress has not been able to conclude. Look at the vote on the wheat bill: 44 voted for it; 36 voted against it; 20 did not vote. Of the 20, 6 were on this side of the aisle. So if we want a classic example of disagreement on a bill, I could cite nothing better than the wheat bill which was passed by the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHOEPPEL in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the Senator state the day when the President first sent to Congress his message outlining the administration's detailed plan for a medical program for the aged?

Mr. DIRKSEN. First, it came up in a state of the Union message; and then he referred to so many of these items in the message he sent to Congress in the first week of May.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Does the Senator mean May of this year?

Mr. DIRKSEN. He then alluded to what he had said before with respect to this subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes.

As I understand, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare said the administration had considered and reconsidered; but the President has not really until this moment spelled out the details of his plan in a message to the Congress. After all, he has been in office 7 years and 7 months.

The point I want to make is that I am hopeful and encouraged and pleased that, after 7 years and 7 months, the President should embrace a program of this type. I only hope that in the next 3 months my colleagues on the other side of the aisle who will return in the next session will embrace it also, because I believe that under a new President we can enact a substantial part of it.

We have this problem of giving assistance to older people, to enable them to meet the expenses of serious illnesses; and we have had a Democratic bill pending for some time. But, what I deplore is that in the House it has met resistance from the minority all along the way. I think it has been in only the last 2 or 3 months that the President's Secretary ever presented a plan that he would endorse. After 7 years and 7 months in office, it comes rather late; and, as the Senator says, the subject is a big one.

So I hope they will bear with us and will permit us to take a little time. I believe we can pass such a bill before this session ends.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I must remind the Senator from Texas that from time to time, the President has sent messages to Congress; he has done so over a long-range period, certainly going back to the state of the Union message of January 1959. As an example, Mr. President, the minimum-wage bill was introduced in January 1959. All this time it has been in a House committee. It has just now gotten out of the House committee and out of the House. But, when it did get out of the House, the House had so completely transformed the bill that the parent or the author of the bill, a distinguished Member of the House of Representatives from California, would not have recognized the bill, even with its great "blooper" that took 14 million people out from under the Fair Labor Standards Act. We have wrestled with this subject all this time, and we have been patient about it. But it cannot be said that the President did not manifest his interest in the matter.

As regards a minimum wage bill and an area redevelopment bill, I have pointed out what the score was, and also in regard to a highway development bill. The President asked for an increase in the gasoline tax, but the Congress did not see fit to give it to him.

The President asked for an increase in the postal rates, and I introduced that bill in the Senate. But the bill was defeated. So the Congress said, in effect, "No, you shall not have it."

With respect to the aid-to-education bill which is pending in the House Rules Committee, our side does not have a majority of the membership of that committee. One need only examine the Congressional Directory to ascertain which party has a substantial majority of the membership of that committee. If the bill is not brought out of that committee, one cannot properly ascribe to the President, and certainly not to the minority party in the Congress, that failure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. But a majority of the Republican members of that committee are opposed to bringing out the bill. I believe I am correct in saying that every Republican member of the committee opposes bringing out the bill. I should think that if the President would prevail on even one or two of the Republican members of that committee—not on a majority of them, but on only one or two—that would make it possible to bring the bill out of the committee. But that is something we can determine.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I have before me the list of members of the House Rules Committee, as set forth in the Congressional Directory. There are eight majority members and four minority members. So with the aid of only the majority members, that bill—or any other bill—could be brought out of the committee.

So I do not believe the minority members or the Republican Party should be charged with laches or negligence or nonfeasance of duty or anything of the sort.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I do not make such a charge. I merely said that I do not believe one Republican member of the committee is in support of an aid-to-education bill. If the Senator disagrees, I shall be glad to have him make his explanation.

Can the Senator tell me the name of one Republican member of that committee who is in favor of the aid-to-education bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know. I would assume that all of them are opposed to the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Senator's assumption is correct.

So I hope the President's message will be persuasive with them; and perhaps then he can get one Republican member of the committee to vote in favor of having it report the bill. If his message results in just one vote by a Republican member of the committee, it will be well worth while.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But if the majority party will get only two additional votes from the Members on their side, that will get the job done. The majority party is in charge and is steering all the legislation. We freely concede that fact; we admit it. Of course, we do only what is incumbent on the minority—namely, to assert our cause, to offer our modifications and amendments to any proposed legislation, and in that respect to utter our convictions and do our duty. But in that respect we are a minority.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. But I hope the Republican Members will follow their leader and will get just one of the Republican members of the Rules Committee to vote to follow their leader. Their leader wants an aid-to-education bill passed by Congress. If the bill is brought to the floor and can be acted on——

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does the Senator from Texas want an aid-to-education bill passed?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. We passed one in February.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. The Senator from Texas wants an aid-to-education bill passed by Congress, and the Democrats have a majority of the members of that committee. Why does not the Senator from Texas get the Democratic members of that committee to report the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Because we have the opposition of all the Republican members, whose leader wants an aid-to-education bill enacted into law. Some of them claim they want such a bill enacted into law, but all of them vote against it.

Some of our members vote against it; but I believe the division among them is perhaps 6 to 2—six Democratic members in favor of the bill and two Democratic members opposed to the bill. But we cannot get a single one of the Republican members to vote in favor of reporting the bill.

So I hope the President's message will influence at least one Republican member of the committee sufficiently to cause him to vote to follow the leadership of the man who has been in office 7 years and 7 months, and now has come to us with a message in which he appeals for immediate action.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the majority leader could state to me the name of one more majority member of the Committee on Rules from his side who would vote to report the bill we could still get a bill. Of course, what the bill seeks to do is in the platform.

I should not have said that, because that brings politics into this discussion. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I will say this: It is difficult to avoid the feeling that these specific programs do appear important in an election year. I am willing to leave it to the good judgment of the American people as to which party, the Democratic Party or the Grand Old Party, is more desirous of providing assistance for schools; assistance for older people, raising the minimum wage, as we did 10 cents above what was asked last time; area redevelopment, which has been vetoed; liberalizing the immigration laws; and measures generally in the conservation field. I am willing to leave that to the instinctive judgment of the American people, because I think their memory is not so short but what they can remember the slogans, "Stand Pat With McKinley," and "Stay Cool With Coolidge." Now it is "No New Starts."

I think this message departs from that philosophy somewhat. If the President is really sincere and genuine in his statement that he wants some of these measures passed, it comes late, after 7 years and 7 months; but we are going to pass as many of them as is possible and perform our duty to the American people.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I have one other observation to make. I recognize that what has been referred to is a very substantial agendum, and no mention has been made as yet of the two items on civil rights that the President requested, which we had taken out of the program. So when we put all of these measures together, and include a farm bill, we have a very considerable agendum of proposed legislation. But I do make the special point that the President has not been lacking in diligence. He has asserted over and over again, in his state of the Union message, in the special messages that have come to Congress at this session and at the other sessions of the Congress, and to the prior Congresses, what his interest is. So this is not a Johnny-come-lately request. This is nothing more than going over the ground he has asserted over and over again as being, in his judgment, in the national interest.

I like to put it, and I like to keep it, on that high ground, for, as I said earlier today, that is in keeping with the great tradition of the Republican Party.

It was 100 years ago in May of this year that our convention assembled in Chicago, and there we nominated the man from Illinois, Abraham Lincoln. There was a short platform. There were 17 items in it. The opening paragraph of the platform stated:

> Resolved, That the delegated representatives of the Republican electors of the United States in convention assembled, in discharge of the duty we owe to our constituents and our country, unite in the following declarations.

They put their campaign on that high ground a hundred years ago. I think we have kept it on high ground in the intervening century. It is on high ground now. As the President says in his message, the national interest cannot be adjourned: it is exactly that simple.

So, consonant, of course, with the available time, we will achieve as much as we can. I recognize the difficulties that are inherent because of the time factor, and I reassure the majority leader that I will cooperate to the full, in the hope that this will be a constructive and fruitful session, and not an abortive one.

With that, I have paid my tribute to the President's message, and also to his deep, unswerving, abiding, and consistent interest in the public well-being from the day he held up his hand on the portico of this Capitol and took the oath as President of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I shall not take this debate from the high ground upon which the distinguished minority leader desires to conclude; but since he has quoted from the first Republican President, I should like to end what I have to say by quoting from the first Republican President: "You cannot fool all the people all the time." And I do believe that, if there had been any real determination and dedication and desire to drive through a program of this nature, under the leadership of our popular President, all this could have been done in 7 years and 7 months; and I pledge to the minority leader what he has pledged to me—complete cooperation in the remaining days left to enact as much of this legislation as may be possible. And I pledge to the American people that, if I am given an opportunity to participate in the deliberations of our Government after next January, I shall continue my efforts to see written into law the fine principles and generalities presented in this message today.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, at this point I would add only one thing to what the majority leader has said. Suppose the President had omitted all the matters mentioned in the message, and a message had come to the Senate reciting perhaps three or four matters he thought could be compressed into the time period. What do you think, Mr. President, would have been the reaction? And what would have been the reaction perhaps over on the other side of the aisle? And I say that in all kindliness? They would have said, "Evidently he has no further interest in these matters. It was only an opportunistic and expedient interest that now languishes, because he said nothing further about it."

The President had to include those matters, because those are the articles of faith by which he has conducted his office, and they have been sent here from time to time; and they come quite within the compass of something which has always been close to the President's heart. It comes out of the first Republican President's lexicon, for Lincoln said the legitimate object of government is to do for the people what needs to be done—and I emphasize the words "what needs to be done"—but which they in their separate and individual capacities cannot do at all or so well for themselves.

That has been a pole star for the President; and all these items which have been mentioned—area assistance, medical care, the foreign aid program—go to the well-being of the whole segment of our people. He has not only kept his endeavors on high ground, but he has reasserted it, so that if he sends no more messages to the Congress, at least he will have reaffirmed to the American people that he has never lost sight of those items which he thought were in the national interest.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not have the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I have the floor. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Throughout the discussion the majority leader has been engaged in, relative to the President's program and to his own, I heard him refer to situs picketing. I cannot find such a bill on the calendar, and I see no mention of it on the President's list.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GOLDWATER. To what does the Senator refer?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I did not refer to that as a part of the President's program. I referred to that as a matter to which I expected Congress would give consideration, although I believe the minority leader informed me the President did recommend such a program 3 years ago. Is that not correct?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is correct.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. May I have the response?

Mr. GOLDWATER. I heard the Senator answer in the affirmative.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am asking the minority leader. Did not the minority leader tell me the President did make such a recommendation?

Mr. DIRKSEN. He did make such a recommendation, in a sheaf of recommendations.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I wished to be sure that I was correct.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I might refer my friend from Texas, on that point, to the fact that the President did have a recommendation in that regard, and the proposal was never considered in the subcommittee or in the full committee. The President's bill contained reference to situs picketing; it was offered as an amendment in the subcommittee, and it was turned down; and it was offered as an amendment in the full committee, and it was turned down; and it was offered on the floor of the Senate, and it was rejected.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is one other thing. It was not included in the state of the Union message in 1960.

Mr. GOLDWATER. The bill to which the Senator from Texas refers was introduced on September 3 of last year. Four days of hearings were held on the bill immediately prior to the recess. It is now in the process of being reported to the full committee.

I am wondering why, all of a sudden, the majority leader has taken this switch on situs picketing. On at least three different occasions he has had a chance to lead his side into helping the President get a situs picketing bill. We find he did not do it. Now, for some strange reason which I find it not too difficult to understand, he is interested in a situs picketing bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, some people never have difficulty understanding things they wish to understand.

I will say to my friend, I do not know what kind of a bill on situs picketing will be reported from the committee, if any. I was informed earlier in the day that the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare desired to have a meeting tomorrow. Unless the Senate went over until 12 o'clock, the committee could not have a meeting. I worked out an arrangement with the Senator from Illinois, and we are coming in at 12 o'clock tomorrow.

The purpose of the meeting of the committee, as I understand, is to consider an agreement which was entered into by the leadership on both sides of the aisle during the consideration of the Kennedy-Ervin bill and subsequently the Landrum-Griffin bill. At the time we acted upon the conference report the leadership agreed that when and if the situs picketing bill were reported we would place no obstruction in the way of bringing it before the Senate or the House of Representatives. I was informed that an attempt would be made to get the committee to consider that bill. Whether the committee will report a bill I do not know. What the bill will contain I do not know.

I raised a question some time ago with the minority leader. I was informed that the President had recommended the bill 3 years ago, and had not recommended it in his state of the Union message this year. That is my recollection of the matter.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But in order to make the record complete——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I do not know what the President's position is. The President felt one way 3 years ago, and perhaps feels another way now. That may have an influence on the committee. I do not know what the committee is going to do about the matter. The committee is going to meet on the question.

I desired to have the Senate know this is a bill which, if it is reported by the committee, will be taken up on motion, because the leadership on both sides of the aisle publicly pledged—as I recall, the Senator from Arizona joined us in that agreement—that if we took the provision out of the bill at that time——

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. The Senator from Arizona did not agree to anything like that. In fact, I am at a loss to understand where the agreement came, supposedly, in the conference. I am told that we were in agreement in the conference. I was in that conference. Certainly I made no pledge to organized labor that I would bring this up or act on it at any time in trade for anything.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I was under the impression the Senator was on that committee. I withdraw the statement. I thought, standing at the door, we had the problem of bringing in a conference report, and that we agreed with the Senator from Illinois, and I thought with the Senator from Massachusetts and with the Senator from Arizona, that we would proceed with the conference report, and the next year, if a bill were reported by either of the committees, the leadership would offer no obstruction but would be committed, in effect, to make a motion to take the bill up for a decision by the Members of the Senate.

It is immaterial whether we agreed or not. Any Senator can offer such a provision as an amendment to any bill, if he desires to do so. But I think the RECORD will show I said that. If I misunderstood the Senator, I withdraw the statement from the RECORD, because I know what the Senator says is correct, if he says so.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona had no reason to enter into any kind of an agreement or trade, because this particular section in regard to situs picketing was removed from the conference report by a ruling—I will not say a "ruling," but as a result of a statement by the Parliamentarian of the House of Representatives that if the section remained in the bill when the bill was returned to the House it would be stricken because of non-germaneness.

There was no reason to make any agreement.

I remember, although I have not been able to find it in the RECORD, that the majority leader and the minority leader likewise, I understand, did agree that should the matter come to the floor it would receive attention.

The Senator has been wondering about consistency and inconsistency, and I invite his attention to the fact that——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I have not referred to consistency and inconsistency.

Mr. GOLDWATER. We had three opportunities to pass the situs picketing provision, with an opportunity for full debate on the floor, in the committee, and in the subcommittee, and the provision was rejected each time, because the majority of the Senator's side was against it.

The reason why I rose to ask the questions was that the bill is not on the calendar. I wondered if the Senator from Texas had some prior knowledge as to whether this bill would come from the committee tomorrow or not. I am a member of the committee, and I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Senator stated he had agreed with the Senator from Illinois that the Senate would meet at 12 o'clock tomorrow so that the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare could meet. I was informed that the committee desired to meet to consider the matter. That is the extent of the information of the Senator from Texas on this matter.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KUCHEL. So that there may be no misunderstanding as to the facts with respect to the position which the President has taken on situs picketing, let the record show that consistently since 1954 President Eisenhower has repeatedly recommended to the Congress of the United States that legislation in the field of situs picketing be enacted into law.

Let the record further show that the Secretary of Labor, representing the President of the United States, in his last appearance before the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, likewise iterated and reiterated that position.

I simply wish to have the record clear on this point.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I do not think my good friend from California was alluding to the state of the Union message of this year, in which the President did not mention situs picketing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. If the Senator from Arizona has concluded, I will yield to my friend from California to answer the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I thought the majority leader was indicating that there had been a change in the position of the President. I merely wished to say that on a number of occasions, in state of the Union messages, the President did make that recommendation.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KUCHEL. In the hearings held this year by the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare the Secretary of Labor reiterated the recommendation, which previously and repeatedly had been made by the President.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I wish to have the record show that I do not criticize the President's position. As a matter of fact, I am not quite sure what it is. For that reason I asked the minority leader to restate the position. I recall that the minority leader said to me—and I repeated it—that the President did recommend it strongly 3 years ago, but this year he did not include it in his message.

Mr. KUCHEL. Through the Secretary of Labor, I will say to my friend, he repeated the position precisely. The bill was written by the administration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I accept the Senator's explanation. I was simply quoting the minority leader. I have enough difficulty getting the people on this side of the aisle to agree on things. I am not going to try to get the minority leader to agree with the assistant minority leader, and to get both of them to agree with the very able Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I wish to reply to the Senator from California. I was not referring to any inconsistency on the part of the President. I was referring to inconsistency on the part of the Democrat Members of this body, and particularly to their leader, who had a chance to pass this measure three different times and did not do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I assume that was not distasteful to the Senator from Arizona.

I observe he drops the last two letters of my party—the Democratic Party. I am not going to drop any letters from his party, because I still wish to conclude this debate on the very high plane on which it began.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. As the Senator was inventorying everything he was doing in this respect in connection with the President's message and the program, has the Senator from Texas clarified his own policy decision, or is he going to seek a policy decision from his side on what the President asks on the subject of civil rights?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am not quite positive as to what the President has asked. I have read his message very closely. I have foreclosed consideration of nothing. I have given a list of priorities. If the Senator is interested in his No. 1 subject, the subject of civil rights, I say that so far as the majority leader is concerned, he is willing to confer with the leadership of both bodies and the chairmen of the committees of both bodies and the majority members of both bodies, on both sides, in an attempt to ascertain their desires.

We have passed one civil rights bill this year. We spent about 2 months in connection with that bill. It was a bill which was acceptable to the President. It was a bill which was acceptable to the Attorney General. It was a bill which was authored by the distinguished Member of the House from New York [Mr. CELLER]. It was a substantial advancement in that area.

I realize it is a very difficult area in which to legislate. I remind the Senator that he is aware of how difficult it is, because when his party was in control of the Senate, they did not even attempt to pass one. During 1953 and 1954, the years of the great crusade, the first 2 years of the Republican administration, when they had complete charge of the House, the Senate, and the executive department, they passed no bill at all. But we have been able to make advances. We have passed two bills.

I am willing to consider the suggestions of all the Members of both bodies, including the leadership of both bodies. I do not think that one can say with any certainty at this moment whether we could get a majority to agree to accept a bill, the form of which we do not know, which the committee has not reported nor acted upon. I certainly would say that in an attempt to wrap around myself whatever credit might come from passing a second civil rights bill in 1 year, I would not want to have the blood on my hands for killing or postponing proposed minimum wage legislation, for killing or postponing the medical plan to the aged, or for killing or postponing the public works and conservation bill.

No one I think has demonstrated a greater interest in civil rights than has the distinguished Senator from New York, unless it is his colleague.

I am going to proceed to act upon the measures which the House has already passed, and if the Senator with his great ingenuity and his deep devotion to this cause and his great ability in this field can evolve a plan that will appeal to a majority of the House and the appropriate committees of that body and a majority of the Senate, then it is a matter that should be carefully looked into, and that will be done.

But I am not going to use it as a wedge to kill off all the other proposed legislation that we have not acted upon in 7 years and 7 months.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President——

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield first to the Senator from Montana, and then I will yield to the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS], and then the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. MANSFIELD. I believe the distinguished majority leader has hit the nail on the head. Are we going to bring in extraneous legislation at this time, in this circumscribed session, which will tend to defeat medical care for the aged, which covers peoples of all races, all creeds, and all origins?

The same situation applies to housing measures; the same statement applies to school construction; the same suggestion applies to minimum wages; the same thing applies to the omnibus housing bill. If we are going to kill all that proposed legislation, then I think we ought to get up and say so instead of bringing in something extraneous, which has already been considered and passed on on two occasions, by two Congresses, under the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I wish to observe that I am not going to foreclose the consideration of any subject. I am a realistic man. I wish to think I am an idealist and a realist at the same time. I realize it is necessary for us to legislate and make advances in a great many fields.

I like to have my record judged by the coonskins on the wall, by the record of achievement, and we have much that the House has already achieved, that it has passed, and that we are going to take up in an orderly manner.

However, if through the suggestions and recommendations of others the leadership is willing and able to see a possibility of passing anything that is in the national interest on any subject, the Senator from Texas assures the Senate that he will look into the matter and carefully consider it and try to work out an agreement that will be satisfactory to his colleagues.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I wish to yield first to the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS], then to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BUTLER], and then to the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND]. Then I should like to yield the floor so I can go to lunch. I have a 2:30 appointment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I shall be very brief. I wish to pinpoint the two things which I understand the President has asked for as being the statutory base under the committee which deals with discrimination among Government contractors.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. As I understand, that is the committee that is now chairmaned by the Vice President and is operating under an Executive order.

Mr. JAVITS. Exactly; also the question of technical assistance to school districts seeking to desegregate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The request was not spelled out in the message. I knew of one, and have already said I thought it was. I did not know what the other one was. I think it is a matter to which the appropriate committees will wish to give consideration, and I will explore the matter with the leadership of the other body, with the other committee, and with the membership after we get through with the proposed legislation that we have under consideration.

Mr. JAVITS. I merely wish to say to the Senator from Texas that I hope civil rights will not have a price on its head. I do not think it would be fair to picture it as seeking to kill off other legislation, because we know very well where the entrenched opposition would come from that would threaten to kill off other legislation. I think the Senator knows me well enough to know that I am a firm believer in bipartisanship on the subject of civil rights, and I can assure the Senator that so far as I am concerned, that is the way I will conduct myself in this session.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am sure I would not attribute the Senator's interest in civil rights in the slightest to any political motive.

Mr. JAVITS. What I was trying to do today, since the Senator from Texas was cataloging the various positions of proposed legislation, as I had hoped he would, and which he has done quite frankly, was to ask him to give us some indication of his position on this very major issue.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I have an education bill in the Committee on Health, Education, and Welfare that I am very anxious to see considered at this session, but I have said to my constituents that I would not think it fair to take up that measure ahead of the other measures which the House has already acted upon, because I think they have the highest priority, and I am not going to foreclose the consideration of any other subject.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. BUTLER. If I may be excused from making this comment, I gathered from the statement of the majority leader that he cannot control his own party on the subject of civil rights, situs picketing, or almost anything else.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I will say to the Senator that I do not control anyone except myself. I am glad that I live in a country where leadership is voluntary, based upon reason rather than control.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not heard it in that way from the other side. I have not heard of that voluntary leadership too often.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I realize I am completely impotent to compel anyone to do anything, and I never try to compel.

We have had some disagreements on this side of the aisle. We have them in the daytime and we have them in the evening. We have differences of opinion.

Mr. BUTLER. I realize that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. We settle them without an army and without missiles. We settle them by reasoning together. There are disagreements on the other side of the aisle too. I rather think that there will be differences on both sides of the aisle before the President's program is acted on.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not like to hear the Senator from Texas admit in open session that the program to which his party is committed—as it was in Los Angeles—if an attempt were made to enact it, would delay or kill other legislation that may be of benefit to the country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. No; I merely wish to see first things come first.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; first things should come first. The Kennedy platform is first. Then the American people can wait. I say that is not the way in which we should legislate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I know of nothing in that program that the President has not recommended. I have given only the highest priority to the measures the President has recommended and that the House has already passed. Those are the four appropriation bills, the minimum wage bill, which the President has recommended; the medical care bill, which the President finally has recommended. I should like to have those disposed of before we get out. "Beyond that, deponent sayeth nothing."

Mr. BUTLER. "Beyond that, deponent sayeth nothing." Why? Perhaps the Senator has not gotten the word yet.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I cannot visualize how long it will take. I believe we will have enough to do if we have as many amendments on the Republican side to the minimum wage bill as we are told we will have, and if we will have as many substitutes for the medical care bill as we are told we will have; and I am sure we will have a great deal of discussion of the four appropriation bills. I know that we will have considerable opposition to the Antarctic Treaty. Those are matters that at least have had committee consideration.

I do not believe that anyone contended before we left that there was any politics connected with any of these matters. However, we will not foreclose the possibility of acting on perhaps two bills or three bills or four bills on certain subjects. That will depend upon the will of the majority of the Senate. However, the priority that the minority leader and the majority leader have agreed on are the appropriation bills, the medical care bill, the minimum wage bill, and the Antarctic Treaty.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I have the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. No; I have the floor. I am yielding to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BUTLER. How did the Senator from Texas obtain the floor?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I had it.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHOEPPEL in the chair). The regular order is that the Senator from Texas has the floor. He has yielded to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I am glad the Senator from Texas has yielded to me.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to know whether the Senator from Texas can obtain the floor by any other means than the regular order. He may not parcel the floor out to other Members.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the majority leader for yielding to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas may yield only for a question.

Mr. HOLLAND. I commend the majority leader's decision to dispose of matters which have already been passed upon by the other body and which are of great importance. I believe that he has already answered, at least in part, a question which I had intended to address to him. It is this: Among the matters ready for consideration, and which have passed the House, would the majority leader care to give us in their order the measures which he expects to take up? I realize that he cannot fix a day certain at this time for the consideration of each one.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank the Senator. I believe I know what he has in mind. I believe I can do that. I have discussed the matter with the minority leader, who is very cooperative. Most of the discussion with reference to a civil rights bill has to do with a bill on which no hearings have been held, and which is not on the calendar. With respect to the matters that are on the calendar, first, there is the Antarctic Treaty. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations was urging that the treaty be brought up for consideration by the Senate when we recessed in July. We said we would act on these specific matters, and that is in the RECORD. First, there are the appropriation bills, which at all times have priority.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Does that mean that after we dispose of the Antarctic Treaty the distinguished majority leader will call up for consideration in the Senate the public works appropriation bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The majority leader would have called up the public works appropriation bill now if it had not been for the fact that certain Members of the Senate were not present. As soon as we dispose of the treaty, we will take up the public works appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLLAND. That is the second measure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. After that, what is the pleasure of the distinguished majority leader?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Then we will take up the minimum wage bill.

Mr. HOLLAND. I am glad to have that understanding. I should like to tell the distinguished majority leader that all the amendments to be proposed on that bill will not come from the other side of the aisle.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. So I understand.

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator from Florida expects to offer some amendments. Does the Senator wish to go further as to the order in which the other measures will be taken up?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The mutual security appropriation bill will have to be reported, but that will be taken up. I do not know about the conference reports on the appropriation bills, but they are always privileged. The medical aid plan is in committee. I do not know when that will be ready for consideration, or whether it will be offered as an amendment on the floor by a Senator.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thoroughly approve the attitude of the majority leader in postponing, until after those bills have been disposed of, the matter of taking up any civil rights legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am not postponing anything. There is no civil rights bill that I know of that has been introduced so far, or that is on the calendar, or on which any hearings have been held. The other body has not acted on such proposed legislation. It was a matter that was born after the convention.

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator from Texas could not be more accurate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I do not want to foreclose anything that is in the national interest. However, I pledged before I left here, as did also the minority leader, that we would come back and take care of this program.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the majority leader. He has shown fine judgment. I approve of his judgment thus far. I would go a good deal further in stating the hope that the so-called civil rights matter will not come up at all. I believe he is adopting the only tenable course, which is to dispose of, first, the necessary measures which have already been passed, namely, the appropriation bills; second, measures of great importance which have already passed the other body. I agree with him. I will not oppose that course, although I may be opposed to some of the measures themselves.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Perhaps I was not on the floor when our majority leader mentioned this subject. He may have covered my inquiry in his earlier remarks. I would appreciate advice as to the legislative schedule on Saturdays. Does he feel that weekends will be devoted to sessions of the Senate?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I would hope—and the minority leader has agreed with me about it—that we would have Saturday sessions, and that we would like to look forward to a sine die adjournment by Labor Day, at least.

Mr. RANDOLPH. It is my feeling that the peoples' business must be given priority over political and/or partisan considerations. This must apply to personal campaigning as well. I commend our esteemed leader for his dedication to duty.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Does the Senator desire to address a question to me? If not, I should like to leave the floor, because I have an appointment at 2:30.

Mr. ALLOTT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. ALLOTT. As I understood the majority leader's remarks with respect to the judgeships, which was skipped over rather quickly, he does not anticipate any action at this session upon the new judgeships. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I would not want to foreclose the possibility of some action on it. I merely evaluated the situation as I saw it, namely, the necessity of getting a bill through the House, the necessity of going to conference on the bill, the necessity of getting the President's signature to the bill, and then the necessity of reviewing, with the various political committees and with the Senators involved, the prospective nominees. I thought it unlikely that that could be done, that judges could be appointed, and that FBI investigations could be concluded by the time we planned or hoped to recess 3 weeks from now.

Mr. ALLOTT. I simply call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the fact that the judicial conference has, time after time, recommended the appointment of these additional judges.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am aware of that.

Mr. ALLOTT. I am unable to speak for other States, except as other Senators, both on the Senator's side of the aisle and on my side of the aisle, have told me about the situation in their own States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I said earlier that I recognize the need for the appointment of judges in many States. However, many Senators believe that the number recommended is excessive, and they do not believe anything can be gained during this session. They are willing to let the new President handle the problem.

Mr. ALLOTT. I may say to the Senator from Texas, with all deference, that this is a matter which has been held over for a couple of years. In the opinion of some of us, the deprivation of a man of access to the courts is just as important as any other piece of proposed legislation which is on the program the Senator from Texas has spoken of or the program to which the President has referred.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I agree with the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ALLOTT. I know that hundreds of people in my own State are being denied access to the courts. It is my hope that the majority leader, with his great powers of persuasion, will be able to devise some means by which those people will not be deprived of access to the courts. They are now being deprived of legal remedies. They are now being deprived of some of the most fundamental rights to which they are entitled. I think it is most important that this matter be given prompt attention.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am aware of some situations close to home which are similar to those which the Senator from Colorado has described. I have used whatever capacity and ability I may have, if any, to attempt to convince the persons most concerned of the necessity for this legislation. I must say that we have not been completely successful as yet. I agree with the Senator that no one should be deprived of justice, as frequently happens, by the delays which are encountered. I shall be glad to give the matter further consideration.

Mr. ALLOTT. I thank the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Texas and I had some colloquy this morning about the timing of some of the proposed legislation. At that time I had not mentioned civil rights legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I assure the Senator from Pennsylvania that that subject has been thoroughly covered.

Mr. SCOTT. I am sure it has, but not as to one phase, however. There was coverage of civil rights in the President's message. However, I wish to refer to a prior Presidential message and ask the Senator from Texas if he would tell me whether he believes this proposal can be carried out.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I should like to study the message. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will refer it to me and let me give it thought, I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to read a very brief quotation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. If the Senator, for other reasons, desires to read it, I shall be glad to have him do so.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator does not wish me to read it——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I have an engagement to keep, and I had hoped to keep it.

Mr. SCOTT. The earlier Presidential message——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. When was this message delivered?

Mr. SCOTT. I am coming to that. It reads:

> Finally I wish again to urge upon the Congress the measures I recommended last February to protect and extend basic civil rights of citizenship and human liberty. A number of bills to carry out my recommendations have been introduced in the Congress. Many of them have already received careful consideration by congressional committees. Only one bill, however, has been enacted * * *. I believe that it is necessary to enact the laws I have recommended in order to make the guarantees of the Constitution real and vital. I believe they are necessary to carry out our American ideals of liberty and justice for all.

I take it the Senator from Texas finds no objection to that language.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am not familiar with the situation to which the Senator from Pennsylvania refers. Let me state my feeling about the entire subject. I have discussed this subject with the President a number of times. I have found him to be a very fair and very reasonable man in connection with the matter, a man who believes in protecting human rights.

I have certainly felt that, under my oath of office, it was my duty to see to it that every person's constitutional rights were protected at all times. Anything I can do in the way of enacting legislation to the end that every person shall be assured the full and adequate protection of his constitutional rights, I shall be glad to do.

I have not read the message to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. SCOTT. I have read from the message. The Senator from Texas asked me the date of the message. I certainly do not want to mislead the Senator. The date of the message is July 27, 1948. The words are taken from the message of President Truman, asking Congress to enact civil rights legislation within 2 weeks. I am glad to know that the Senator from Texas believes as he does on this subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I will let the Senator's statement speak for itself. When I am dealing with the Senator from Pennsylvania, I am always careful, because I know he is always precise in his statements. I was under the impression that he was reading a statement by President Eisenhower.

Mr. SCOTT. I referred to a prior Presidential message.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I was under the impression that the Senator was reading from a message by President Eisenhower.

Mr. SCOTT. I am sure that makes no difference to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Whether it was President Truman, President Eisenhower, or President Roosevelt, all those men are great men. All of them, I believe, have been interested in their fellow human beings.

I think all of us can agree on one thing; namely, whether we are northerners or southerners, easterners or westerners, we are all Americans, and all of us want to see every person absolutely protected and afforded his full constitutional rights.

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the Senator from Texas.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] and myself, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to strengthen civil rights, and for other purposes.

The bill is intended to state in legislative terms the findings and proposals set forth in the recently adopted platform of the Democratic Party. It contains six separate titles. Title I restates in the form of congressional findings virtually the entire Democratic platform statement on civil rights. Titles II, III, IV, V, and VI contain the specific provisions necessary to enact into law the legislative proposals made in the platform.

The following is a brief outline of each title of the bill:

Title I, findings and purposes:

Section 101 (1) to (23): This section sets forth in 23 subsections the text of the platform with such grammatical and other minor changes as are necessary to convert the planks to congressional findings.

Title II, civil injunctive suits: This title contains language modeled after part III of the administration's original Civil Rights Act of 1957 to authorize and direct the Attorney General to bring injunction suits in all civil rights cases and not just voting cases as under the present law.

Title III, establishment of a Fair Employment Practices Commission: This title is modeled after the New York State and Pennsylvania fair employment practice laws and is designed effectively to secure for everyone the right to equal opportunity for employment.

Title IV, abolition of literacy tests and payment of poll taxes as requirements for voting: The language of this title is patterned after the language of previous bills to abolish poll taxes only.

Title V, technical and financial assistance to school districts: This title contains the text of the provisions of the administration's 1959 civil rights bill providing for a program of technical and financial assistance to school districts seeking to institute desegregation plans.

Title VI, Civil Rights Commission: This title makes the Commission a permanent body and authorizes it, in addition to its present functions, "to provide assistance to communities, industries, or individuals in the implementation of constitutional rights in education, housing, employment, transportation and the administration of justice."

The vagueness with which some of the platform pledges are stated has made it necessary to exercise some judgment in drafting the specific legislative proposals.

In such cases, we have given the language of the platform its most moderate interpretation in view of the defeat of strong civil rights legislation at this session of Congress, just this year. If in any way the platform has been misconstrued—and I concede that some of the language is open to more than one construction—we shall be happy to accept the necessary modifications in the language of the bill.

Our sponsorship of the bill does not mean that we favor every provision in the Democratic Party's platform. We take serious exception, for example, to the statement in the platform that "every school district affected by the Supreme Court desegregation decision should submit a plan providing for at least first-step compliance by 1963, the 100th anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation." In our opinion, this may serve only as an invitation to many of the school districts involved to delay compliance with the desegregation decision for 3 more years. More than 6 years already have elapsed since the Supreme Court, in its historic decision, ordered an end to school segregation—with all deliberate speed. I believe that the Great Emancipator would be more interested in securing prompt compliance with the Court's decision than in postponing the event until the 100th anniversary of his historic Proclamation.

We also seriously doubt the wisdom of abolishing all literacy tests as requirements for voting. It does not appear unreasonable to us to require literacy of a prospective voter so long as the standards are fair and are fairly applied. In this regard, we must prefer the legislation proposed in the Republican platform to make the completion of six primary grades in a State-accredited school conclusive evidence of literacy for voting purposes. Such a provision would be a complete safeguard against abuses in the administration of literacy tests.

The overriding reason for our preference of the Republican platform is that it contains specific provisions for changing the present filibuster rule which in the past has been the most substantial obstacle to civil rights legislation. The Democratic platform simply states the need for improved congressional procedures to safeguard majority rule. We agree with this statement so far as it goes. It is incorporated in the bill which we have offered. But we know of no reason to hedge on this subject or to deal in vague generalities with such a well defined problem. The Republican platform refers specifically to the need to change rule XXII—the filibuster rule—which is certainly a much more forthright position on the issue, and is the principal reason why we characterize the Republican platform as much the stronger of the two on this subject.

Despite our preference for this and other provisions in the Republican platform, and our willingness to support either platform, we recognize the practical fact that only the platform of the Democratic Party has any possibility of acceptance in this Congress, in which the Democratic Party hold almost a 2-to-1 majority. Moreover, although we reject some of the premises of the Democratic platform, we readily concede that its enactment would strengthen civil rights in our Nation. For these reasons, we consider it a happy privilege to be able to offer to the Congress an opportunity to carry out the pledges of the Democratic Party at an early date, and we sincerely hope that our bill will be warmly embraced by Members on both sides of the aisle who are interested in this problem.

We shall ask that the bill lie on the table for 3 days, in order to permit Members who desire to cosponsor the bill to have an opportunity to do so. We are writing to all Members of the majority party in the Senate who voted for the civil rights bill in April of this year, to invite their cosponsorship, but we welcome cosponsorship by any Member who will support our bill. Our future course will have to depend to some extent on the response we receive to our invitation for cosponsors. We are realists enough to acknowledge that this bill cannot be enacted without the active support of the Members and leadership of the majority party in the Congress.

I want to make it clear also that this bill will not in any way be used to obstruct action on other vital issues before the Congress. If there is any obstruction during this session, it will not be the result of action on the part of the sponsors of this measure. Indeed, it will be our objective to do everything possible to expedite the consideration of civil rights measures and other legislation at this session of Congress.

I have read and heard disquieting reports that the new leadership of the majority party may not regard civil rights as a proper subject for consideration during this special session of Congress. Today it was said this is an extraneous issue. On the other hand, I have read and heard a great deal that the people's business would be given first priority, and that active campaigning would be postponed, if necessary, to allow time for completion of our legislative tasks. I hope the latter information is a more accurate reflection of the sentiments that prevail, and that we shall not adjourn this session until the gaps in our laws to protect the civil rights of all Americans are closed.

It was a great comfort to me that the platforms of both parties this year so adequately recognized the urgency of enacting additional legislation to strengthen human freedom. I was particularly pleased to note that several of the recommendations made time after time by President Eisenhower, but which failed of enactment in both 1957 and 1960, had such strong support in the Democratic National Convention, as well as in the Republican National Convention.

President Eisenhower in his strong and forthright message today has called for action now on the deletions from his civil-rights program. Let me read, once again, that paragraph of the President's message:

> Only one major measure—civil rights—had then been passed—
>
> Referring to the situation as of May 3—
> and this had two major deletions which I hope will now be restored in keeping with the bipartisan support evidenced for these items last month.

I applaud the President's leadership on this subject, and I hope that Congress will respond to his plea by enacting at least two key provisions to which he referred—provisions which would speed the process of desegregating our schools and would further the attainment of the objective of securing equal job opportunities for all Americans.

I apprehend that there will be introduced here—perhaps before the session today ends; and, if not, tomorrow morning—a bill which will have strong sponsorship and will place in legislative form the two provisions the President has asked the Congress to pass now. I hope it will be possible for those two provisions—both of which have been the subject of endless discussion in committee and of debate at great length here on the floor—to be considered at this session without reference to a committee which might sound their death knell; thus, I hope it will be possible for them to be placed immediately on the calendar.

These legislative issues have been studied and debated for so many years that there is certainly no need for extended hearings or debate during this session. Even our bill contains very little that is new.

There will have to be cooperation if this bill is to get anywhere. I hope that the spirit which prevailed at each convention on this issue will be manifested in the ensuing weeks in this great Chamber.

Here is a chance to attend to the people's business by giving the people results, not just issues to wrangle over. I hope this chance will be seized upon by those dedicated to this task. If it is, all of us will leave this session knowing that we have in a bipartisan manner taken care of the civil rights problems in this country, and have done so without partisanship, and thereby have removed this whole qustion from political discussion in the fall campaign.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill introduced today by me, on behalf of myself and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], be printed in the RECORD following my remarks, and that the bill lie on the table until the close of the session on Thursday, August 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD, and will lie on the desk, as requested by the Senator from New York.

The bill (S. 3821) to strengthen civil rights, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. KEATING (for himself and Mr. SCOTT), was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I

Findings and purposes

SEC. 101. The Congress hereby finds that—

(1) We should seek to create an affirmative new atmosphere in which to deal with racial divisions and inequalities which threaten both the integrity of our democratic faith and the proposition on which our Nation was founded—that all men are created equal. It is our faith in human dignity that distinguishes our open free society from the closed totalitarian society of the Communists.

(2) The Constitution of the United States rejects the notion that the rights of man mean the right of some men only. We reject it, too.

(3) The right to vote is the first principle of self-government. The Constitution also guarantees to all Americans the equal protection of the laws.

(4) It is the duty of the Congress to enact the laws necessary and proper to protect and promote these constitutional rights. The Supreme Court has the power to interpret these rights and the laws thus enacted.

(5) It is the duty of the President to see that these rights are respected and the Constitution and laws as interpreted by the Supreme Court are faithfully executed.

(6) What is required is effective moral and political leadership by the whole executive branch of our Government to make equal opportunity a living reality for all Americans.

(7) In every city and State in greater or lesser degree there is discrimination based on color, race, religion, or national origin.

(8) If discrimination in voting, education, and administration of justice or segregated lunch counters are the issues in one area, discrimination in housing and employment may be pressing questions elsewhere.

(9) The peaceful demonstrations for first-class citizenship which have recently taken place in many parts of this country are a signal to all of us to make good at long last the guarantees of our Constitution.

(10) The time has come to assure equal access for all Americans to all areas of community life, including voting booths, schoolrooms, jobs, housing, and public facilities.

(11) The administration should use the full powers provided in the Civil Rights Act of 1957 and 1960 to secure for all Americans the right to vote.

(12) If these powers, vigorously invoked by the Attorney General and backed by a strong and imaginative President, prove inadequate, further powers will be sought.

(13) We should support whatever action is necessary to eliminate literacy tests and the payments of poll taxes as requirements for voting.

(14) The administration should also use its full powers—legal and moral—to insure the beginning of good faith compliance with the Constitutional requirement that racial discrimination be ended in public education.

(15) We believe that every school district affected by the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision should submit a plan providing for at least first-step compliance by 1963, the 100th anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation.

(16) To facilitate compliance, technical and financial assistance should be given to school districts facing special problems of transition.

(17) For this and for the protection of all other Constitutional rights of Americans, the Attorney General should be empowered and directed to file civil injunction suits in Federal courts to prevent the denial of any civil rights on grounds of race, creed, or color.

(18) The administration should support Federal legislation establishing a Fair Employment Practices Commission effectively to secure for everyone the right to equal opportunity for employment.

(19) In 1949 the President's Committee on Civil Rights recommended a permanent Commission on Civil Rights. The administration should broaden the scope and strengthen the powers of the present commission and make it permanent.

Its functions should be to provide assistance to communities, industries, or individuals in the implementation of Constitutional rights in education, housing, employment, transportation, and the administration of justice.

(20) In addition, the administration should use its full Executive powers to assure equal employment opportunities and to terminate racial segregation throughout Federal services and institutions, and on all Government contracts.

(21) Similarly the administration should take every possible action to end discrimination in Federal housing programs, including federally assisted housing.

(22) To accomplish these goals will require Executive orders, legal actions brought by the Attorney General, legislation, and improved Congressional procedures to safeguard majority rule.

(23) Above all, it will require the strong, active, persuasive, and inventive leadership of the President of the United States.

TITLE II

Civil injunctive suits

SEC. 201. Part III of the Civil Rights Act of 1957 (71 Stat. 637) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 123. (a) The Attorney General is authorized and directed, upon written complaint or information on oath or affirmation of any person who is subject to or threatened with the loss of his right to equal protection of the laws by reason of race, color, religion, or national origin, and who is unable because of financial inability or other reason effectively to prosecute a Federal civil proceeding on his own behalf, to institute for or in the name of the United States, a civil action or other proceeding for preventive relief, including an application for an injunction or other order, against any person or persons acting under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage of any State or territory, or subdivision or instrumentality thereof, or who conspires with such person or persons, to deprive or threaten to deprive any person of his rights to equal protection of the laws by reason of his race, color, religion, or national origin.

"(b) The Attorney General is hereby authorized and directed, upon written request of the duly constituted authorities of any State or territory, or municipality, subdivision, or instrumentality thereof, to institute for or in the name of the United States, a civil action or other proceeding for preventive relief, including an application for an injunction or other order, against any two or more persons who conspire through violence, threats, or otherwise to prevent or hinder such duly constituted authorities from giving or securing to any person his right to equal protection of the laws.

"(c) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of proceedings instituted pursuant to this section and shall exercise the same without regard to whether any administrative or other remedies that may be provided by law shall have been exhausted. In any proceeding hereunder the United States shall be liable for costs the same as a private person.

"(d) Nothing in this section shall impair any right secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States, or any remedies already existing for their protection and enforcement."

TITLE III

Establishment of a Fair Employment Practices Commission

FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 301. (a) The Congress hereby finds that, despite the continuing progress of our Nation with respect to protection of the rights of individuals, the rights of some persons within the jurisdiction of the United States to employment without discrimination because of race, color, religion, or national origin are being denied, and that such infringements upon the American principle of freedom and equality of opportunity are destructive of the basic doctrine of the integrity and dignity of the individual, upon which this Nation was founded and which distinguishes it from the totalitarian nations, force large segments of our population into substandard conditions of living, foment industrial strife and domestic unrest, deprive the United States of the fullest utilization of its capacities for production, and thereby adversely affect the interstate and foreign commerce of the United States. The Congress recognizes that it is essential to the general welfare that this gap between principle and practice be closed; and that adequate protection of such rights of individuals must be provided to preserve our American heritage and prevent serious damage to our moral, social, economic, and political life, and to our international relations.

(b) The Congress, therefore, declares that the right to employment without discrimination because of race, color, religion, or national origin is a right of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States, and that it is the national policy to protect the right of the individual to be free from such discrimination.

(c) The Congress further declares that the succeeding provisions of this title are necessary for the following purposes:

(i) To remove obstructions to the free flow of commerce among the States and with foreign nations.

(ii) To insure the more complete and full enjoyment by all persons of the rights, privileges, and immunities secured and protected by the Constitution of the United States.

(iii) To promote universal respect for, and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race or religion, in accordance with the undertaking of the United States under the United Nations Charter, and to further the national policy in that regard by securing to all persons under the jurisdiction of the United States effective recognition of certain of the rights and freedoms proclaimed by the General Assembly of the United Nations in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Definitions

SEC. 302. As used in this title—

(a) The term "person" includes one or more individuals, partnerships, associations, corporations, legal representatives, trustees, trustees in bankruptcy, receivers, or any organized group of persons and any agency or instrumentality of the United States, including the District of Columbia, or of any Territory or possession thereof.

(b) The term "employer" means a person engaged in commerce or in operations affecting commerce having in his employ 50 or more individuals; any agency or instrumentality of the United States, including the District of Columbia, or of any Territory or possession thereof; and any person acting in the interest of an employer, directly or indirectly; but shall not include any State or municipality or political subdivision thereof, or any religious, charitable, fraternal, social, educational, or sectarian corporation or association, not organized for private profit, other than a labor organization.

(c) The term "labor organization" means any organization, having 50 or more members employed by any employer or employers, which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of collective bargaining or of dealing with employers concerning grievances, wages, hours, terms or conditions of employment, or for other mutual aid or protection in connection with employment.

(d) The term "commerce" means trade, traffic, commerce, transportation, or communication among the several States; or between any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia and any place outside thereof; or within the District of Columbia or any Territory or possession; or between points in the same State but through any point outside thereof.

(e) The term "Territory" means Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

(f) The term "possession" means all possessions of the United States, and includes the trust territories which the United States holds as administering authority under the United Nations trusteeship system, and the Canal Zone, but excludes other places held by the United States by lease under international arrangements or by military occupation.

(g) The term "Commission" means the Fair Employment Practice Commission, created by section 305 hereof.

Exemption

SEC. 303. This title shall not apply to any employer with respect to the employment of aliens outside the continental United States, its Territories and possessions.

Unlawful Employment Practices Defined

SEC. 304. (a) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer—

(1) to refuse to hire, to discharge, or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to his terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's race, color, religion, or national origin; and

(2) to utilize in the hiring or recruitment of individuals for employment any employment agency, placement service, training school or center, labor organization, or any other source which discriminates against such individuals because of their race, color, religion, or national origin.

(b) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for any labor organization to discriminate against any individual or to limit, segregate, or classify its membership in any way which would deprive or tend to deprive such individual of employment opportunities, or would limit his employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee or as an applicant for employment, or would affect adversely his wages, hours, or employment conditions, because of such individual's race, color, religion, or national origin.

(c) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for any employer or labor organization to discharge, expel, or otherwise discriminate against any person, because he has opposed any unlawful employment practice or has filed a charge, testified, participated, or assisted in any proceeding under this Act.

The Fair Employment Practice Commission

SEC. 305. (a) There is hereby created in the executive branch of the Government a commission to be known as the Fair Employment Practice Commission, which shall be composed of five members who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. One of the original members shall be appointed for a term of one year, one for a term of two years, one for a term of three years, one for a term of four years, and one for a term of five years, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of five years each, except that any individual chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he shall succeed. The President shall designate one member to serve as Chairman of the Commission, and one member to serve as Vice Chairman. The Chairman shall be responsible on behalf of the Commission for the administrative operations of the Commission. The Vice Chairman shall act as Chairman in the absence or disability of the Chairman or in the event of a vacancy in that office.

(b) A vacancy in the Commission shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the Commission and three members thereof shall constitute a quorum.

(c) The Commission shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

(d) The Commission shall make an annual report to the Fair Employment Practice Commission, which shall be its activities during the preceding fiscal year, including the number and types of cases it has handled and the decisions it has rendered; and shall report to the President from time to time on the causes of and means of eliminating discrimination and make such recommendations for further legislation as may appear desirable.

(e) Each member of the Commission shall receive a salary of $17,500 a year, except that the Chairman shall receive a salary of $20,000 a year.

(f) The principal office of the Commission shall be in the District of Columbia, but it may meet or exercise any or all of its powers at any other place and may establish such regional offices as it deems necessary. The Commission may, by one or more of its members or by such agents as it may designate, conduct any investigation, proceeding, or hearing necessary to its functions in any part of the United States. Any such agent, other than a member of the Commission, designated to conduct a proceeding or a hearing shall be a resident of the judicial circuit, as defined in title 28, United States Code, section 41, within which the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred.

(g) The Commission shall have power—

(1) to appoint, in accordance with the Civil Service Act, rules, and regulations, such officers, agents, and employees, as it deems necessary to assist it in the performance of its functions, and to fix their compensation in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended;

(2) to cooperate with regional, State, local, and other agencies;

(3) to pay to witnesses whose depositions are taken or who are summoned before the Commission or any of its agents the same witness and mileage fees as are paid to witnesses in the courts of the United States;

(4) to furnish to persons subject to this title such technical assistance as they may request to further their compliance with this title or any order issued thereunder;

(5) upon the request of any employer acting in good faith, whose employees or some of them refuse or threaten to refuse to cooperate in effectuating the provisions of this title, to assist in such effectuation by conciliation or other remedial action;

(6) to make such technical studies as are appropriate to effectuate the purposes and policies of this title and to make the results of such studies available to interested governmental and nongovernmental agencies; and

(7) to create such local, State, or regional advisory and conciliation councils as in its judgment will aid in effectuating the purpose of this title, and the Commission may authorize them to study the problem or specific instances of discrimination in employment because of race, color, religion, or national origin, and to foster through community effort or otherwise good will, cooperation, and conciliation among the groups and elements of the population, and make recommendations to the Commission for the development of policies and procedures in general and in specific instances. Such advisory and conciliation councils shall be composed of representative citizens residents of the area for which they are appointed, who shall serve without compensation, but shall receive transportation and per diem in lieu of subsistence as authorized by section 5 of the act of August 2, 1946 (5 U.S.C. 73b–2), for persons serving without compensation; and the Commission may make provision for technical and clerical assistance to such councils and for the expenses of such assistance.

Prevention of Unlawful Employment Practices

SEC. 306. (a) The Commission is empowered, as hereinafter provided, to prevent any person from engaging in any unlawful employment practice as set forth in section 304. This power shall be exclusive, and shall not be affected by any other means of adjustment or prevention that has been or may be established by agreement, code, law, or otherwise: Provided, That the Commission is empowered by agreement with any agency of any State, Territory, possession, or local government, to cede to such agency jurisdiction over any cases even though such cases may involve charges of unlawful employment practices within the scope of this title, unless the provision of the statute or ordinance applicable to the determination of such cases by such agency is inconsistent with the corresponding provision of this title or has received a construction inconsistent therewith.

(b) Whenever a sworn written charge has been filed by or on behalf of any person claiming to be aggrieved, or a written charge has been filed by a member of the Commission, that any person subject to the title has engaged in any unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall investigate such charge and if it shall determine after such preliminary investigation that probable cause exists for crediting such written charge, it shall endeavor to eliminate any unlawful employment practice by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. Nothing said or done during and as a part of such endeavors may be used as evidence in any subsequent proceeding. Any written charge filed pursuant to this section must be filed within 1 year after the commission of the alleged unlawful employment practice.

(c) If the Commission fails to effect the elimination of such unlawful employment practice and to obtain voluntary compliance with this title, or in advance thereof if circumstances so warrant, it shall cause a copy of such written charge to be served upon such person who has allegedly committed any unlawful employment practice, hereinafter called the respondent, together with a notice of hearing before the Commission, or a member thereof, or before a designated agent, at a place therein fixed, not less than 10 days after the service of such charge.

(d) The respondent shall have the right to file a verified answer to such written charge and to appear at such hearing in person or otherwise, with or without counsel, to present evidence and to examine and cross-examine witnesses.

(e) The Commission or the member or designated agent conducting such hearing shall have the power reasonably and fairly to amend any written charge, and the respondent shall have like power to amend its answer.

(f) All testimony shall be taken under oath.

(g) The member of the Commission who filed a charge shall not participate in a hearing thereon or in a trial thereof, except as a witness.

(h) At the conclusion of a hearing before a member or designated agent of the Commission, such member or agent shall transfer the entire record thereof to the Commission, together with his recommended decision. The Commission or a panel of three qualified members designated by it to sit and act as the Commission in such case, shall afford the parties an opportunity to be heard on such record at a time and place to be specified upon reasonable notice. In its discretion, the Commission upon notice may take further testimony.

(i) With the approval of the member or designated agent conducting the hearing, a case may be ended at any time prior to the transfer of the record thereof to the Commission by agreement between the parties for the elimination of the alleged unlawful employment practice on mutually satisfactory terms.

(j) If upon the record, including all the testimony taken, the Commission shall find that any person named in the written charge has engaged in any unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on such person an order requiring him to cease and desist from such unlawful employment practice and to take such affirmative action, including reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without back pay, as will effectuate the policies of the title: Provided, however, That interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the person or persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the back pay otherwise allowable. If upon the record, including all the testimony taken, the Commission shall find that no person named in the written charge has engaged or is engaging in any unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue an order dismissing the said complaint.

(k) Until a transcript of the record in a case shall have been filed in a court, as hereinafter provided, the case may at any time be ended by agreement between the parties, approved by the Commission, for the elimination of the alleged unlawful employment practice on mutually satisfactory terms, and the Commission may at any time, upon reasonable notice and in such manner as it shall deem proper, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding or order made or issued by it.

(l) The proceedings held pursuant to this section shall be conducted in conformity with the standards and limitations of sections 5, 6, 7, and 8 of the Administrative Procedure Act.

Judicial Review

SEC. 307. (a) The Commission shall have power to petition any United States court of appeals or, if the court of appeals to which application might be made is in vacation, any district court or other United States court of the territory or place within the judicial circuit wherein the unlawful employment practice in question occurred, or wherein the respondent transacts business, for the enforcement of such order and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order, and shall certify and file in the court to which petition is made a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding, including the pleadings and testimony upon which such order was entered and the findings and the order of the Commission. Upon such filing, the court shall conduct further proceedings in conformity with the standards, procedures, and limitations established by section 10 of the Administrative Procedure Act.

(b) Upon such filing the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon such respondent and thereupon shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein and shall have power to grant such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper and to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Commission.

(c) No objection that has not been urged before the Commission, its member, or agent shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances.

(d) If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, its member, or agent, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission, its member, or agent and to be made a part of the transcript.

(e) The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order.

(f) The jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same will be subject to review by the appropriate United States court of appeals, if application was made to the district court or other United States court as hereinabove provided, and by the Supreme Court of the United States as provided in title 28, United States Code, section 1254.

(g) Any person aggrieved by a final order of the Commission may obtain a review of such order in any United States court of appeals of the judicial circuit wherein the unlawful employment practice in question was alleged to have been engaged in or wherein such person transacts business, by filing in such a court a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Commission and thereupon the aggrieved party shall file in the court a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding certified by the Commission, including the pleadings and testimony upon which the order complained of was entered and the findings and order of the Commission. Upon such filing, the court shall proceed in the same manner as in the case of an application by the Commission under subsection (a), and shall have the same exclusive jurisdiction to grant to the petitioners or the Commission such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper, and in like manner to make and enter a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Commission.

(h) Upon such filing by a person aggrieved the reviewing court shall conduct further proceedings in conformity with the standards, procedures, and limitations established by section 10 of the Administrative Procedure Act.

(i) The commencement of proceedings under subsection (a) or (g) of this section shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

Investigatory Powers

SEC. 308. (a) For the purpose of all investigations, proceedings, or hearings which the Commission deems necessary or proper for the exercise of the powers vested in it by this bill, the Commission, or any member thereof, shall have power to issue subpenas requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of any evidence relating to any investigation, proceeding, or hearing before the Commission, its member, or agent conducting such investigation, proceeding, or hearing.

(b) Any member of the Commission, or any agent designated by the Commission for such purposes, may administer oaths, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

(c) Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such evidence may be required, from any place in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession thereof, at any designated place of hearing.

(d) In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to any person under this title, any district court of the United States as constituted by chapter 5, title 28, United States Code (28 U.S.C. 81 et seq.), or the United States Court of any territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States within the jurisdiction of which the investigation, proceeding, or hearing is carried on or within the jurisdiction of which said person guilty of contumacy or refusal to obey is found or resides or transacts business, upon application of the Commission shall have jurisdiction to issue to such person an order requiring him to appear before the Commission, its member, or agent, there to produce evidence if so ordered, or there to give testimony relating to the investigation, proceeding, or hearing.

(e) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing documentary or other evidence in obedience to the subpena of the Commission, on the ground that the testimony or evidence required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying. The immunity herein provided shall extend only to natural persons so compelled to testify.

Enforcement of Orders Directed to Government Agencies and Contractors

SEC. 309. (a) The President is authorized to take such action as may be necessary (1) to conform fair employment practices within the Federal establishment with the policies of this title, and (2) to provide that any Federal employee aggrieved by any employment practice of his employer must exhaust the administrative remedies prescribed by Executive order or regulations governing fair employment practices within the Federal establishment prior to seeking relief under the provisions of this title. The provision of section 8 shall not apply with respect to an order of the Commission under section 309 directed to any agency or instrumentality of the United States, or of any territory or possession thereof, or of the District of Columbia, or any officer or employee thereof. The Commission may request the President to take such action as he deems appropriate to obtain compliance with such orders.

(b) The President shall have power to provide for the establishment of regulations to prevent the committing or continuing of any unlawful employment practice as herein defined by any person who makes a contract with any agency or instrumentality of the United States (excluding any State or political subdivision thereof) or of a territory or possession of the United States, or of the District of Columbia, in any amount exceeding $10,000. Such regulations shall be enforced by the Commission according to the procedure hereinbefore provided.

Notices To Be Posted

SEC. 310. (a) Every employer and labor organization shall post and keep posted in conspicuous places upon its premises a notice to be prepared or approved by the Commission setting forth excerpts of the title and such other relevant information which the Commission deems appropriate to effectuate the purposes of the title.

(b) A willful violation of this section shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500 for each separate offense.

Veterans' Preference

SEC. 311. Nothing contained in this title shall be construed to repeal or modify any Federal, State, Territorial, or local law creating special rights or preference for veterans.

Rules and Regulations

SEC. 312. The Commission shall have authority from time to time to issue, amend, or rescind suitable regulations to carry out the provisions of this title. Regulations issued under this section shall be in conformity with the standards and limitations of the Administrative Procedure Act.

Forcibly Resisting the Commission or Its Representatives

SEC. 313. Whoever shall forcibly resist, oppose, impede, intimidate, or interfere with a member, agent, or employee of the Commission while engaged in the performance of duties under this title, or because of such performance, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both.

Separability Clause

SEC. 314. If any provision of this title or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance shall be held invalid, the remainder of this title or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.

TITLE IV

Abolition of literacy tests and poll taxes

SEC. 401. The Congress finds that the requirement that a literacy test or a poll tax or other tax be paid, or that any property qualification be met, as a prerequisite for voting or registering to vote at primaries or other elections for President, Vice President, elector for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Member of the House of Representatives is not and shall not be deemed a qualification of voters or electors voting or registering to vote at primaries or other elections for said officers, within the meaning of the Constitution, but is and shall be deemed an interference with the manner of holding primaries and elections for said national officers, an abridgment of the rights and privileges of citizens of the United States, a tax on such rights and privileges, and an obstruction of the operations of the Federal Government.

SEC. 402. It shall be unlawful for any State, municipality, or other governmental authority or any subdivision thereof, or for any person, whether or not acting on behalf of any State, municipality, other governmental authority or subdivision thereof, to require any literacy test or to levy, collect, or require the payment of any poll tax or other tax or to impose a property qualification as a prerequisite for registering to vote or voting in any primary or other election for President, Vice President, elector for President or Vice President, or Senator or Member of the House of Representatives, or otherwise to interfere with or prevent any person from registering to vote or voting in any such election by reason of such person's failure or refusal to take a literacy test or to pay or assume the obligation of paying any poll tax or other such tax or meeting any property qualification.

TITLE V

Technical and financial assistance to school districts

SEC. 501. (a) The Congress recognizes that (1) prior to May 17, 1954, the Constitution of the United States has been interpreted as permitting public schools to be segregated on racial grounds provided such schools afforded equal educational opportunities; (2) on May 17, 1954, the Supreme Court of the United States ruled that under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution segregated education is inherently unequal; (3) the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States is the supreme law of the land; (4) State and local governments and agencies which had relied upon the "separate but equal" doctrine are now obligated to take steps toward the elimination of segregation in their public schools; and (5) many of these governments and agencies are faced with serious financial and educational problems in making the necessary adjustments in their existing school systems.

(b) It is therefore the intent of Congress and the purpose of this title to assist State and local governments and agencies in carrying out their constitutional obligations by sharing certain of the additional expenditures directly occasioned by desegregation programs and by providing information and technical assistance in connection therewith.

Authorization of Appropriations

SEC. 502. (a) For the purpose of assisting State and local educational agencies which, on May 17, 1954, maintained segregated public schools to effectuate desegregation in such schools in a manner consistent with pertinent Federal court decisions, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as the Congress may determine.

(b) Appropriations under this section shall be available for grants to help finance:

(1) costs incurred by local educational agencies in the provision of supervisory or administrative services, pupil placement, school social worker, or visiting teacher services, and other special, nonteaching, professional services, the need for which is occasioned by the desegregation of their public schools, and

(2) costs incurred by State agencies in developing and carrying out State policies and programs for desegregation in public schools, including technical assistance to local educational agencies in connection therewith.

Allotments and Payments to States

SEC. 503. (a) The Commissioner of Education (hereinafter called the "Commissioner") shall for each fiscal year allot to each State, from the sums appropriated pursuant to section 502 for such year, an amount which bears the same ratio to such sums (or to such larger sum as may be specified in the Act making the appropriation) as the number of students who attended segregated public schools in such State during the school year 1953–54 bears to the number of students who attended such schools during such year in all the States. The number of students who attended segregated public schools in each State during the school year 1953–54 shall be estimated by the Commissioner on the basis of the best available data on the average daily attendance of local educational agencies during such school year.

(b) From a State's allotment under subsection (a) for a fiscal year the Commissioner shall, except as otherwise provided in section 505, pay to such State an amount equal to one-half of the expenditures of local educational agencies in carrying out the purposes specified in section 502(b)(1) under applications approved by the State agency (designated as provided in section 502(a)(1)) pursuant to the State plan approved under section 704, and one-half of the expenditures of such State agency in carrying out the purposes specified in section 502(b)(2) under such plan, including its expenditures in administering the State plan. Payments under this section (and section 505) shall be made from time to time by the Commissioner on the basis of estimates of amounts to be expended in a quarter or other period or periods determined by him, with necessary adjustments on account of any overpayment or underpayment for any prior period or periods.

State Plans

SEC. 504. (a) A State plan shall be approved by the Commissioner for purposes of this title if such plan—

(1) designates the State educational agency to administer or supervise the administration of the plan, or designates another single agency of the State for such purpose and in such case provides methods for effective coordination between such agency and the State educational agency;

(2) sets forth the methods and criteria for approving applications of local educational agencies for funds under this title, and describes the activities to be carried on by the State agency with the aid of funds under this title;

(3) provides such accounting, budgeting, and other fiscal methods and procedures as are necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan;

(4) provides that the State agency will make such reports to the Commissioner, in such form and containing such information, as are reasonably necessary to enable the Commissioner to assure expenditure of grants under this title solely for the purposes for which made and otherwise to perform his functions under this title.

(b) Whenever the Commissioner, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising administration of the State plan approved under subsection (a), finds that—

(1) the State plan has been so changed that it no longer complies with any of the requirements of subsection (a), or

(2) in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any such requirement, the Commissioner shall notify such State agency that no further payments will be made to the State under this title (or, in his discretion, that further payments to the State will be limited to parts of or programs under the plan not affected by such failure), until he is satisfied that there will no longer be any failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied, the Commissioner shall make no further payments to such State under this title (or shall limit payments to parts of or programs under the State plan not affected by such failure).

Local Agency Applications

SEC. 505. If the Commissioner determines, with respect to any State for which an allotment has been made under section 503(a) for any fiscal year, that such State will not for such year submit and have approved a State plan under section 504, and either (a) that such State has consented to the making of applications by local educational agencies pursuant to this section, or (b) that such State has indicated that it assumes no responsibility with respect to the desegregation of public schools, the Commissioner shall, notwithstanding the provisions of section 503(b), pay to local educational agencies, with applications approved by him under this section, one-half of the expenditures of such agencies during such year in carrying out the purposes of section 502(b)(1), but such payments may not exceed, in the aggregate, the State's allotment for such year. The Commissioner shall by regulation prescribe criteria and procedures, for approval and withdrawal of approval of applications under this section, which will, in his judgment, best effectuate the purposes of this title.

SEC. 506. For purposes of this title—

(1) The term "public school" means a public school which provides elementary or secondary education, as determined under State law, but does not include a school of any agency of the United States.

(2) The term "segregated public school" means a public school to which students on May 17, 1954, could not, under the constitution or laws of the State in which such schools are located or under ordinances or rulings of the appropriate local educational agency pursuant to such constitution or laws, be admitted without regard to race or color.

(3) The term "State educational agency" means the State board of education or other agency or officer primarily responsible for the State supervision of public schools, or, if there is no such officer or agency, an officer or agency designated by the Governor or by State law.

(4) The term "local educational agency" means a board of education or other legally constituted local school authority having administrative control and direction of free public education in a city, county, township, school district, or political subdivision in a State; and includes any State agency which directly operates and maintains public schools.

Federal Administration

SEC. 507. (a) The Commissioner shall collect and disseminate such information on the progress of desegregation in the public schools in the several States as may be useful to educational and other public officials, agencies, and organizations in effecting desegregation in such schools.

(b) The Commissioner shall, upon request, provide information and technical assistance to State or local officials, which will aid them in developing plans and programs for effecting desegregation in public schools, and, upon request of such officials, shall initiate or participate in conferences dealing with the educational aspects of problems arising in connection with efforts to comply with applicable court desegregation decisions or decrees.

(c) The Commissioner may delegate to any officer or employee of the Office of Education any of his powers and duties under this title, except the promulgation of regulations.

(d) No appropriations may be made pursuant to section 502 for any fiscal year ending after June 30, 1961. Prior to the close of January 1961, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall submit to the Congress a full report of the administration of this title, together with his recommendations as to whether it should be extended and as to any modification of its provisions he deems appropriate.

TITLE VI

Civil Rights Commission

SEC. 601. Section 104(a) of the Civil Rights Act of 1957 is further amended by adding the following new subparagraph at the end thereof:

"(4) provide assistance to communities, industries, or individuals in the implementation of constitutional rights in education, housing, employment, transportation, and the administration of justice."

SEC. 602. Section 104(b) of the Civil Rights Act of 1957, as amended, is further amended to read as follows:

"The Commission shall submit reports to the President and to the Congress at such times as either the Commission or the President shall deem desirable."

SEC. 603. Section 104(c) of the Civil Rights Act of 1957 is repealed.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, at this time I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I request recognition.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield the floor?

Mr. KEATING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for recognition. I think the Senator from New York ought to remember we had an agreement, under which I decided not to ask for recognition provided the Senator was recognized. I desire recognition now. Then we will have a quorum call.

Mr. KEATING. I know that the Senator from Montana keeps all his agreements, and I want to be in the same position. It was my understanding, after the conference with the Senator from Delaware, that the various Senators who wished to speak would be recognized in their own right, and that the Senator from Montana had agreed to that. It is true, as the Senator from Montana has stated, he and I had such an agreement as he refers to; and if it has not been abrogated by the later reference made by the Senator from Delaware, I will certainly adhere to our original agreement.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield the floor?

Mr. KEATING. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] if he wishes to make a statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. There is no misunderstanding as to what the Senator from Montana said.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I now suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NEW HORIZONS FOR THE AMERICAS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, the pending business before the Senate is the Antarctic Treaty. I intend to say something on it later, but before I do I should like to make a few remarks relative to the situation which affects our relations with Latin America, the Republic of Cuba, and the consideration of an aid program for that general area.

Before proceeding to the main body of my remarks on inter-American relations, I believe it would be well to recall some of the principal declarations and treaties through which the historical evolution of these relations is expressed. They are a strong antidote to quixotic reactions here or abroad to intra-American difficulties and a powerful call to the constructive action that needs to be taken. They represent both deep hopes for hemispheric cooperation and binding and solemn commitments on the part of this Government and the other American Republics to act together for the security and welfare of the Americas.

Lest the remembrance of these common American hopes and commitments grow dim in the glare of the present Cuban-U.S. crisis, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the conclusion of my remarks the text of the following inter-American documents:

First. That excerpt from the President's message to Congress, December 2, 1823, known as the Monroe Doctrine.

Second. The text of the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance, September 1947, commonly known as the Rio Treaty.

Third. The Charter of the Organization of the American States, signed at Bogotá in 1948.

Fourth. The Declaration of Caracas, adopted March 28, 1954.

Fifth. The Declaration of Solidarity for the Preservation of the Political Integrity of the American States against International Communism adopted March 28, 1954.

Sixth. The Declaration of Santiago de Chile, adopted August 1959.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibits 1 through 6.)

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, there has recently appeared in the New York Times a series of articles by the distinguished correspondent, Mr. Tad Szulc, on the situation in Cuba. They represent immensely informed, dispassionate, and objective reporting of the finest kind. They contain a vast wealth of facts, organized and evaluated in a most illuminating fashion. I commend them to the Senate for their great educational value, their perspicacity, and their detailed analysis of the situation in Cuba.

I ask unanimous consent that the articles referred to be printed in full at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 7.)

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of my remarks, one of the finest, if not the finest, reports ever issued on Latin America, a report by Senator GEORGE D. AIKEN, on a study mission of the countries of Venezuela, Brazil, Peru, Bolivia, and Panama, be incorporated in the RECORD at the conclusion of the previous incorporations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 8.)

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, in his message President Eisenhower indicated that he will seek a $600 million authorization for Latin American aid during this session. Press reports had previously indicated he might ask $500 million. This change does not prompt any alteration in the advanced text of my remarks on Latin America which I made available to the press and the State Department last Friday. On the contrary, now that it is clear that a specific authorization is to be sought, I am compelled to introduce a resolution as an alternative to the President's proposal. Originally, I had intended to consult with administration spokesmen on the text of this resolution prior to doing so, but the President's reference to a specific figure suggests to me the desirability of introducing it at the conclusion of my remarks today. In that fashion, the Senate shall have before it an alternative when it considers this matter.

In relation to the President's statement that his proposed Latin-American program should "include further assistance for the rehabilitation of devastated Chile," I want to say I am in wholehearted accord with his request, but I would suggest that he not confuse rehabilitation assistance for Chile with the need for an inter-American development program. He can seek the necessary assistance for Chile through an enlargement of his contingency fund under the Mutual Security Act appropriations which will be considered in the Senate shortly—very possibly later this week.

ADMINISTRATION'S NEW AID PROGRAM FOR LATIN AMERICA

It has been reported in the press that the administration intends to ask Congress during this session to provide $600 million in special aid for Latin America. There is no doubt of the need for some new action with respect to that area. Goodwill mission after goodwill mission to Latin America during the past decade has come back talking of little else. Ideas along these lines have been expressed in Congress and by leading statesmen throughout the hemisphere.

The question is not one of need. The question is whether the administration's program, as reported, meets the need. And further, the question is whether it is appropriate at this moment to bring forth a new plan of aid to Latin America.

If we may judge from the press reports—and more recently the President's message—Congress is going to be asked to approve some kind of blanket authority for the administration to make available $600 million for Latin America. The reports do not indicate that a new approach to aid is to be anticipated. The reports suggest merely more of the same sort of thing which we have been doing all over the world for the past decade under the mutual security program.

Is this the sort of action that is needed? Will it bring about an end to the steady erosion in hemispheric relations? Quite the contrary, Mr. President, I believe that this new gesture in the old pattern, particularly at this time, may cause further damage to those relations.

INTEGRATED ECONOMIC ACTION NEEDED

What is needed, what has long been needed in inter-American relations is an integrated effort to develop this hemisphere's great resources for the benefit of all of its peoples. It seems to me that we require, first, a reasonable meeting of minds in the Americas as to what needs to be done and how it can be done. We require a specific understanding with the other American nations which will make clear how much is to be spent over how many years, in what very specific ways, and for what very specific, measurable ends. We need a plan which involves more than U.S. grants. We need a plan which is financed by all the participating Republics in this hemisphere in rough proportion to their capabilities and, I add, if some nations cannot contribute cash to the pool, they can certainly contribute skills, commodities, and labor. We need a plan, most of all, which involves a large measure of initiative on the part of individual governments in mobilizing the enthusiasm, cooperation, and sacrifice of their own peoples. The approach should include, if we would deal with the need in its full dimensions, not merely financial and technical aid, but also action on inter-American commodity and trade problems. In this connection, I should like to suggest that the approach should not omit consideration of the possibilities of a hemispheric common market. As the Senate knows, Central American nations have been moving toward a regional trade grouping. So, too, have some of the largest of the South American states and Mexico. Before the hemisphere is split further into regions within regions, it would be wise to consider action which brings all the American nations together for marketing and other economic purposes in common.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. CHURCH. I commend the distinguished Senator from Montana for the scope of the proposal he makes.

I wonder if it would be accurate to say that what the Senator is proposing is an evolution from what we have heretofore referred to as our good neighbor policy into what might be called a good neighborhood policy for all the Americas, embracing their active participation, and extending beyond unilateral loans and grants to the field of cooperative economic planning.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes. I would say the Senator has stated it better than I. It is, in effect, an accentuation of the good neighbor policy as it was envisioned in its beginnings. It would bring about a departure from the unilateral extension of aid and assistance of various kinds emanating from Washington, D.C., New York—or the United States—and instead would replace it with an integrated community approach comprising all the Americas on a basis of equality and on a basis of mutual participation, sacrifice, and interest.

Mr. CHURCH. I thank the Senator. I am in full accord with the Senator that a program of this dimension is called for by the present crisis in the Americas. I commend the Senator for making this proposal in so timely a way, on the opening day of this session.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I wish to extend my thanks to the distinguished Senator from Idaho for his kind remarks.

I could be misinformed, Mr. President; it may be that this is the type of program which the administration expects to present to the Congress in the near future. I hope that such is the case. If it is, I am confident that the Senate will be disposed to give it the most careful consideration.

TIMING OF NEW AID PROGRAM

I should still be compelled, however, to question the timing, if a new aid program, however impressive it may be, is presented for action during the few remaining days of the 86th Congress. It is no secret, after all, that we are engaged in a serious and a bitter dispute with Cuba at this time. It is no secret that this dispute is to be aired with the other American Republics in the Organization of the American States, which is to meet within a matter of days in Costa Rica.

I am sure—I am positive—that the administration had no desire to tie together the two matters—that is, a new aid program for Latin America and this dispute. But it amazes me that the administration would permit this coincidence to occur.

We must ask ourselves, in all honesty, how does this coincidence look to the rest of the hemisphere? I am afraid, Mr. President, it looks very bad. It looks like a callous attempt to purchase favor in Latin America at a time when we are especially desirous of obtaining it. If we are honest with ourselves, we will recognize that the announcement coming at this time produces an erroneous impression. It suggests that dollars are being dangled before Latin America in the same manner that the Russians of late have been waving rubles before Cuba. Is that impression in keeping with the dignity of this Nation? With the dignity of the other American Republics?

The need for action on hemispheric development stands on its own. So, too, does the need for a settlement of the dispute with Cuba. We must act on both, but we must act in a fashion which makes it clear that we do not link them—the two matters—in any fashion.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. I ask the Senator from Montana if he has seen the reports I have seen in the newspapers, to the effect that the President's new proposal is being labeled in some Latin American countries as the Castro plan?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. CHURCH. Thus reflecting the very reaction to which the Senator refers in his speech, due to the bad timing.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes. I would say that what the Senator from Idaho has said is one of the rumors now going around, a rumor tied especially to the fact that after the Congress passed a law giving the President discretionary authority in the application of the Sugar Act the administration announced a $500 million aid program to Latin America.

I think we ought to emphasize, as I have tried to do in the course of these remarks, that there was absolutely no connection between the action taken by the Congress vis-a-vis the Sugar Act, in giving discretionary authority to the President, and the later aid program which was announced. While the aid program was and is indefinite as to what it entails, we know, of course, that long before Mr. Castro came into power this administration was considering ways and means by which assistance could be rendered to Latin America, based in large part on recommendations by such men as Milton Eisenhower, the President's brother; Secretary Roy R. Rubottom, Jr., the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs; Secretary Thomas C. Mann, the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs; and others. Most important, plans were being drawn up based on a tremendous and an impressive plan advanced by President Juscelino Kubitschek, almost 2 years ago, and known since its inception as Operation Pan America.

Unfortunately, what the administration has proposed up to this time does not have the vision contemplated by Operation Pan America. In my opinion it is only a first step—and a halting one—in the type of effort which must be put into operation in accord with the wishes, the knowledge, the desires, the techniques, and the know-how of all the Latin American nations along with us, so that from this effort can come some sort of integrated development to which, in one way or another, all the nations would make their just and fair contribution.

SUITABLE CONGRESSIONAL ACTION

To keep these questions separate and distinct, I would strongly urge the administration not to try to ram through an aid program for Latin America of a specified amount during the few remaining days of this Congress. If the administration feels it would be useful, I can see no objection to a resolution which would put this Congress on record—in the manner of the Vandenberg resolution some years ago—as backing fully a common effort with other American nations of the kind I have just described. I should, personally, be happy to join in sponsoring such a resolution. Then, let the spokesmen of this administration go to the scheduled meeting of hemispheric economic ministers in Bogotá in September equipped with new specific proposals. Let them go prepared to listen with new attention to old ideas such as those advanced by President Juscelino Kubitschek of Brazil in his proposed Operation Pan America, to the ideas of Premier Pedro Beltran of Peru, and of other distinguished Latin American leaders. Let them hammer out, in concert, over the next few months, the integrated approach which is needed to replace the tattered pattern of more unilateral technical aid as usual, more unilateral loans as usual, more unilateral grants as usual. Let them put together a plan which will lift the sights of all the Americas to a new concept of hemispheric cooperation. Let them look toward new horizons.

If that is done, if American participation is equitable and just and, if it is adequately explained to the people of the United States, I would anticipate that the next Congress will be prepared to cooperate fully with the new administration in its realization.

In the interim more loans from existing sources in the fashion of two credits recently negotiated with Peru can be helpful. In July, $2,150,000 was made available to Peruvian Building & Loan Association for low-cost housing and $54.2 million for land development and farms. These should prove of great value to Peru which under the enlightened leadership of Prime Minister Pedro Betran is acting with great energy on its internal problems. This constructive action owes its origin, in great part I believe, to the missions of the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] who last year visited Latin America and brought back the best report and the most useful observations on the situation there ever to come to my attention.

Let us, then, use the possibilities of expanded lending out of existing resources and eschew new aid announcements, which are not new at all, until after the economic meeting in September can point the way to a really significant attack on the hemisphere's economic problems.

In that fashion, too, Mr. President, I believe we can avoid any confusion of the new aid undertaking with the United States-Cuban dispute which should be faced on its own merits in the Organization of the American States.

THE CUBAN DISPUTE

As for that dispute, there are some matters of which we need to speak frankly and honestly at this time. The dispute cannot be swept away. Its implications will not disappear by beating the drums for a new aid program. On the contrary, unless this dispute is faced and solved it may well nullify any effort for the economic advance of the hemisphere.

If we are to deal with this dispute in the only context in which solution now seems possible, that is, in the larger context of inter-Americanism, we will have to recognize that the attitudes of many Latin Americans will invariably include a measure of sympathy for Cuba and its revolution, regardless of sentiments respecting its present Government, regardless of the facts of the dispute. There are complex historical roots for these attitudes and they will not change overnight. We must anticipate that voices will be raised in the Latin American countries, as was the case recently in Mexico, in emotional support of Cuba. But that ought to be a cause neither for alarm nor condemnation in Mexico or the United States. One must question the wisdom of the administration in calling in the Mexican Ambassador some weeks ago to explain a speech of this kind in the Mexican Congress. After all, it is customary for Members of this body and the other House to express their feelings, emotions, and thoughts on Cuba and on other matters in no uncertain terms. And I am sure we would not look kindly on the summoning of our Ambassadors by other governments to justify remarks whenever they are made. We can hardly censure in others what we extoll as a virtue in ourselves.

I am confident that if we exercise restraint with respect to the emotional attitudes which the Cuban dispute has engendered, we can anticipate that the issues of the dispute will be considered by the OAS on their merits. They will be considered with objectivity and with full attention to the larger interests of the hemisphere.

By the same token, I do not believe that the administration in its approach to this dispute ought to be confused by the loudest and most emotional voices here at home. I do not and cannot believe there is any widespread desire in this Nation to throw away the remaining fruits of the good-neighbor policy by a unilateral military intervention in Cuba. This administration is to be complimented for making it clear, as Secretary Herter did in a recent press conference, that he had "never talked with the President about military intervention in Cuba," nor had the Department "made any such plans or preparations." What is at stake is larger than Cuba and Castro and any hot feelings in our own midst however noble and righteous they may seem to those who are possessed by them. What is at stake is hemispheric solidarity and that measure of peace and reasonable security and the highly fruitful commercial and other contacts which this solidarity has yielded over the years.

If the national attitude of this country could be expressed on Cuba, I daresay that it would be less one of militant hostility than one of incredulity and dismay that relations have deteriorated to their current unhappy state. Further, there would be indignation at the incomprehensible calumny which has been heaped upon us. Finally, there would be a firmness which I am sure is shared by other American states that the Soviet Union shall not fish in the troubled waters of the Caribbean or meddle in the family affairs of the Americas, or unnerve us by waving its missiles.

U.S. POSITION IN THE OAS ON CUBAN DISPUTE

It is a little late now to retrace events to the particular stones on which United States-Cuban relations have stumbled. Mistakes have been made and they have been made on both sides. We have tried on a bilateral basis to set these relations straight and we have not succeeded. The dispute has come before the United Nations and that body has wisely referred the matter to the Organization of the American States. In short, the U.N. has placed great trust and responsibility on the Americas to meet an American problem. The nations of the hemisphere can perform a great service by isolating the basic issues between Cuba and this Nation, by soberly considering these issues, and by acting to meet them.

It seems to me that this Nation ought to bring to the impending consideration of the dispute more than mere justifications for its present firm attitude with regard to Cuba. That attitude needs no justification in view of the hostility of the government in Havana. What is needed is a clear position which illuminates what it is, specifically that we deplore and what it is that we seek in our relations with Cuba.

If we are to have that kind of position we must go beneath the angry words. We must start with a recognition that the revolution of the Cuban people was not only unavoidable but to be welcomed, given the oppression to which they had been subjected by the previous regime. Indeed, at the United Nations, Ambassador Lodge has stated the position of the United States and the only official position on this matter most clearly when he noted the understanding and sympathy of the United States for the aims of the Cuban revolution.

We must recognize, further, that the promise of the Cuban revolution was changed and that our own citizens and other outsiders with significant interests in Cuba can hardly be insulated from that change. Mr. Lodge has set forth the official views of the administration on this point. At the U.N. he quoted the President directly as recognizing the right of the Cuban Government "to undertake those social, economic, and political reforms which with due regard for their obligations under international law, they think desirable." We must recognize finally that, except as the actions of the Castro government grossly outrage the conscience of the American Republics or threaten their common security, the nature of the changes in Cuba is a matter solely of concern to the Cuban people. That is the crux of national independence which the Cubans hold as dearly as do we.

It seems to me, however, that in respecting Cuba's national rights we also have a right to expect from a people for whom we have had only the friendliest sentiments a willingness to minimize the adverse repercussions of change on our citizens and to provide equitable treatment for them and their interests. We do have a right to object most vehemently to the subjection of the good name of this country to inflammable charges and slurs by the Cuban Government and its spokesmen; charges and slurs which are as unnecessary as they are inaccurate.

Finally, we do have a right—any American nation has a right—to bring to the attention of the OAS, threats to the tranquillity and security of this hemisphere and to seek common action to meet them.

If these premises, Mr. President, constitute a basis for good neighborly relations, as I believe they do, then it follows that our position in the dispute with Cuba before the OAS should be built around the following points:

First. We should recognize the right of the Cuban people to make such internal changes as they desire and insist only on just, nondiscriminatory treatment for our nationals and compensation for damage to their legitimate interests on terms which take into consideration Cuba's present economic and financial capacities.

Second. We should recognize Cuba's right, as a sovereign nation, to trade or otherwise deal with any nation in the world and, equally, our own right to do the same, as regards sugar or any other commodity. Equally we should make clear that we are prepared at all times to consider changes in our present economic policies, on a mutual basis, which may be of benefit to the Cuban people and to ourselves.

As it is now, the OAS could not do more than condemn such a government. We suggest, later, that it ought to have the power to act against such a government.

Third. We should reiterate the doctrine of nonintervention in the national affairs of Cuba or any other American nation insofar as any unilateral action on our part is concerned and scrupulously adhere to it, and see to it that all agencies and private citizens adhere to it. But if the OAS by due process concludes that the actions of any particular government outrages the conscience or threatens the tranquillity and security of all the Americas, we should follow whatever course of hemispheric action the OAS may prescribe by due process. It is for the administration alone which, alone, is in possession of all the facts and has the constitutional responsibility to decide when, if at all, to ask the OAS to condemn and to act against any government on these counts and to make the case in support of it.

Fourth. If the need arises, we should seek common hemispheric action of whatever kind and degree may be necessary to prevent the establishment of military bases by nations not of this hemisphere in any American Republic.

Fifth. We should welcome conciliatory efforts by the President of the Council of the OAS, Ambassador Vicente Sanchez Gavito, who, incidentally, with his colleague, Ambassador Antonio Carillo-Flores, forms one of the finest diplomatic teams in the Capital, in isolating and in finding solutions to the specific difficulties between Cuba and this Nation.

Whatever the outcome of the dispute with Cuba, I think we had better face the fact that there will be no victory for one side or the other. The fact is that the dispute has already caused serious damage to Cuba, to the United States and to the Western Hemisphere. It is to be hoped, therefore, that we will begin this consideration before the OAS not with a desire to win Pyrrhic debates on TV, but, rather with a clear determination to seek a solution to the problem and with clear ideas as to what constitutes an acceptable solution to the problem. It is to be hoped further, that Cuba will do the same. And it is to be hoped, finally, that the other American states will exert every effort to bring about a solution that is just and equitable, to the end that this danger to the hemisphere may be removed.

STATE OF INTER-AMERICAN RELATIONS AND POLICY

Looking beyond the Cuban dispute, Mr. President, I believe that we will do well to recognize frankly that inter-American relations are not good and they are not getting any better. Lest this observation outrage those whose political antennas in these political times may be especially sensitive, let me hasten to add that it is made without political motive. In retrospect and, in all honesty, it is clear that the schisms in inter-American relations began to appear even before this administration took office.

Be that as it may, it does not serve the national interests to offer empty assurances now that all is right with the inter-American world or to imply, as this recent announcement of a new aid program does, that there is nothing wrong that cannot be cured by a fresh injection of aid dollars.

The difficulties go deep. Insofar as they arise on our part I believe they stem from a failure to recognize and appreciate the enormous accumulation of forces for change in Latin America since World War II and, hence, our failure to reshape our attitudes and our policies accordingly during the past dozen years. It is out of this accumulation that the revolution in Cuba was spawned and it is doubtful that that revolution is an isolated phenomenon. The same upheaval may well reappear in reasonable facsimile in large segments of the region to the south unless action is taken in time by the governments directly involved and by the hemisphere as a whole, to deal resolutely with the social and economic conditions which are the breeding grounds.

What of our responsibilities to ourselves and to the hemisphere in the lights of these vast pressures for change? For anyone who knows the countries to the south and looks to the present and future rather than to the past, I believe it is apparent that change is as desirable as it is inevitable. I do not think acquiescence in unnecessary misery and vicious repression and exploitation find any echo in the finest traditions of this Nation. A determination, elsewhere, in the Americas to dispense with such acquiescence is to be welcomed by this Nation. It follows that our relations with the other American states must be alined with progressive change rather than against it. Further it follows that the institutions of inter-Americanism which we did so much to bring into being should be used to encourage this change by evolutionary means in order to avoid, if possible, the human tragedies which inevitably accompany change by revolution.

I believe our policies in concept accept these premises. In a halting and inadequate fashion, moreover, we have sought to build on these premises. But what is needed, what has been lacking for years has been that dedicated and perceptive initiative in inter-American policy and relations which would breathe new life into the premises and inject new energy into the institutions of inter-American action. As the most powerful and the oldest free Nation in this hemisphere, it is our responsibility to ourselves and to the Americas to provide that initiative. I say that in all humility, with the belief that our Latin American neighbors will recognize that it is said without boast but only because it is the obvious reality and it must be said to awaken us to our responsibilities. A new birth of initiative, of leadership, is essential if the irresistible and rapid changes which are already under way in this hemisphere are to redound to the security and welfare of ourselves and the other American peoples. Unless it is forthcoming, hemispheric solidarity and the institutions through which it is served may both be overwhelmed by opportunistic forces within the Americas in concert with militant intrusions from without.

If we are to reshape the course of inter-American relations in a fashion equal to the present and future needs of the Americas and ourselves as a part of them, it seems to me we must begin to act, as must the Latin Americans, with new insights and a new appreciation of one another. We must act with new policies, pursued by a more effective and dynamic administration of our relations. I know of no way to bring about these necessary changes except by an enlightenment of public understanding of the need and by a responsible leadership, which is able and willing to consider and to act on new ideas.

NEW INSIGHTS

I should like to set forth, at this time, certain specific thoughts on how the present and future needs of inter-American relations may be met, insofar as they can be met by this Nation. I need hardly remind the Senate that these relations are two-sided and that regardless of what we do, it will not be enough unless the Latin American nations carry their share.

On the need for new insights:

First. That the present and the next administration seek the active and intense cooperation of the press, motion-picture industry, and other communications media in a concerted effort to bring up to date the 19th century comprehension of Latin America widely held in this country and the 19th century comprehension of this country still largely held in Latin America.

Second. That the present and the next administration seek the active and intense cooperation of educational institutions in this country to expand rapidly the studies of Latin America and the languages of its Republics. Conversely, that wise and liberal use be made of the stagnating local currency accumulations abroad in consultation with Latin American authorities, for a similar expansion of the studies of the United States and the English language in Latin America.

Third. That serious efforts be made to act on various proposals previously advanced looking to the establishment of a University of the Americas in Puerto Rico or some other suitable place, perhaps with faculties located in various American nations; and, again, that wise and liberal use be made of accumulating local currencies to this end.

Fourth. That inter-American exchanges of persons in all the professions be expanded in numbers and in scope; and again, that wise and liberal use of accumulating local currencies be made to this end.

Fifth. That inter-American tourism be encouraged in every feasible way, particularly through the prompt completion and improvement of the inter-American highway.

Sixth. That the President-elect—no matter whom he may be—make a get-acquainted visit to the other Latin American Republics prior to his inauguration in January. Further, assuming that an inter-American plan of development and economic cooperation is devised, that the new President, shortly after his inauguration, invite all the American Presidents to meet in Washington to initial it.

NEW POLICIES

On the need for new policies:

I have already mentioned in detail what I believe to be the key changes that are required. I reiterate them now:

First. Full acceptance in our policies of the inevitability and the desirability of change, change in the direction of an end to unnecessary misery and of repression wherever these conditions may exist in the Americas.

Second. An end to one-sided haphazard aid in the old pattern in favor of a carefully conceived, shared-cost, specific, measurable plan of hemispheric action for development and economic cooperation.

Beyond these key changes, Mr. President, I believe we need a reappraisal of the policies by which this Government has sought to stimulate the flow of private capital into Latin America. We have got to face the fact that Latin Americans do not necessarily always see the ingress of foreign capital as an unmixed blessing, and that such capital is not infrequently one of the primary targets of revolutions in those nations. It seems to me that in the year ahead private capital will perform its greatest service on behalf of its own long-range interests and the total interests of this Nation by integrating its foreign investments and operations as rapidly as possible into the other American nations. In short, U.S. private capital should nationalize itself, in the sense of immersing itself in the life of the nations in which it operates. If it does so, the constant threat of involuntary nationalization may decline. There are instrumentalities and techniques for achieving this end, and some of the most farsighted U.S. companies are already putting them into practice in Latin America. They do so by mixing U.S. capital with local capital, by choosing their managers—and their families—for Latin America on the basis of their suitability to live as well as to work in other nations, by rapid transfer of skills through extensive training programs of local inhabitants, and by maximum use of local employees on the basis of equality with its home employees in the management of enterprise. It seems to me that even as this Government seeks, as it now does, by its actions and policies which commit us all, to aid U.S. business in Latin America, it must also act to stimulate the incorporation of progressive practices into U.S. business in Latin America since their absence affects us all.

Mr. President, I have already suggested that the broad and vast interests of this Nation in inter-American relations cannot be served by unilateral military intervention in the internal affairs of any American nation. Yet I do not believe that the doctrine of nonintervention, as it now stands, is adequate to the present and the future needs of the Americas. There are acts which can be committed by a government which grossly outrage the conscience of the Americas. There are policies which can be pursued by one nation in this hemisphere which gravely jeopardize the security of all the American nations. When these acts occur, when these policies are pursued, the doctrine of nonintervention, in my opinion, is not adequate to the need. The American nations have already moved and should continue to move in the direction of new concept of hemispheric political cooperation. Call it the Doctrine of Hemispheric Concern, if you will. What is implicit in it, however, is the need of the American nations to act in common against any member government which grossly outrages the conscience of the hemisphere by its behavior or actions or which clearly endangers the security of the hemisphere by its policies. To take this step, Mr. President, to modify the doctrine of nonintervention is a most serious matter but these are most serious times. I, for one, am persuaded that the nations of this hemisphere are prepared to take it in their common interest and I am persuaded that, with the proper safeguards in the OAS system, a Doctrine of Hemispheric Concern will be invoked neither lightly nor inequitably.

NEW ADMINISTRATIVE METHODS

Finally, Mr. President, I should like to turn to the needs of administration within our own Government, in terms of inter-American relations. Regardless of the adequacy of our concepts with respect to these relations, regardless of our willingness to revamp our policies, we are not likely to do what needs to be done, given the present administrative structure for the conduct of these relations. Apart from a serious lack of outstanding citizens dedicated and skilled in inter-American affairs, we are seeking to act through a creaky, confused, and jumbled machinery of administration. In Latin American affairs, as in others, the State Department, under the President, has theoretical reponsibility; it is there to blame if things go wrong. But in inter-American affairs, as in others, policies are determined or influenced not only by the President and the Secretary of State, but also by various other sources of power in the executive branch, from the National Security Council on down, without adequate central control and direction.

The first need in the administration of inter-American affairs is to make certain that policies originate and flow from the President through the Secretary of State and that these policies are carried out by all agencies concerned under State Department and ambassadorial control. To that end, all bilateral aid activities, and all informational and exchange activities with respect to Latin America should be made subject to full and decisive control of the Secretary of State. Furthermore the U.S. representatives on the International Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank, and the various United Nations agencies, and all other agencies with a greater or lesser degree of influence on the course of inter-American relations should be fully responsive to the effective guidance of the Secretary of State.

Second, to reinforce this line of authority, it seems to me most desirable that any new funds appropriated by the Congress for economic and related purposes in Latin America should be appropriated to and through the Department of State.

Third, it should be our policy and part of our essential initiative to make every effort to strengthen the OAS and its subordinate agencies by stimulating common American action through that organization and by encouraging personnel policies which will equip that organization for new and heavier responsibilities.

Mr. President, it is true that any President should have a large measure of discretion in the administrative structure through which he seeks to conduct the foreign relations of the Nation. But Congress, which provides for this establishment and influences the nature of it by legislation, cannot remain indifferent when that structure gets out of hand, when it tends by its very nature to dissipate and waste the resources of the people by duplication, inadequate coordination, and a confusion of responsibility.

It is a truism that men are more important than machinery in effective foreign relations. It may be that the suggestions I have made, which look to the concentration of authority as well as responsibility in inter-American affairs in the Department of State, will not act to increase effectiveness. But if they do not, at least we shall know where to begin to look for the difficulty and where to make the adjustments. As it is now, the administrative structure defies an honest fixing of responsibility, no matter how much the Secretary of State may be held responsible, and no matter how often—and often unjustly—he may be berated for the failures.

It is my hope that the next President will act promptly on this problem. I, for one, as chairman of the relevant Subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee intend to bring this problem to the attention of the committee; and I would welcome an opportunity to cooperate with the administration on any necessary legislation to deal with it.

CONCLUDING COMMENTS

I do not desire to detain the Senate much longer. It is my intention to take up other aspects of the international situation and our policies before the session closes. My purpose in these remarks today is to bring to the fore the question of inter-American relations as it is interwoven with the Cuban dispute and aid programs. These questions cannot be sidetracked by either silence or slogans until next January. They will be very much with us in the immediate days ahead. We need to face them now. We need to turn the light of discussion on them now, to the end that we may lay the basis for the kind of action which must come with the next administration, the kind of action appropriate to these times, the kind of action which will inspire the American Republics to proceed together to a rededication to the common security and progress of this hemisphere.

Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution calling for intensification of cooperation in Latin-American relations; and I ask that the resolution be read and be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. 353) reaffirming U.S. policy in support of inter-American cooperation for the welfare and progress of the Western Hemisphere, submitted by Mr. MANSFIELD, was read, and was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas the United States shares with the other American Republics a common interest in the freedom, tranquillity, welfare, and progress of the Western Hemisphere, and

Whereas the safeguarding of this interest requires an increase in inter-American cooperation and more effective use of the instrumentalities of hemispheric solidarity: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate reaffirm the policy of the United States in support of inter-American cooperation for the common benefit of the peoples of the Western Hemisphere and that the President be advised of the sense of the Senate that this Government by its constitutional processes should pursue, particularly, in its relations with the other American Republics:

(1) The development of agreements, setting forth specific plans of action designed to foster economic progress and improvements in the welfare and level of living of all the peoples of the Western Hemisphere on the basis of joint aid, mutual effort, and common sacrifice.

(2) The development of long-range agreements to facilitate the marketing and to insure an equitable price for the principal commodities entering into trade among the nations of the Western Hemisphere and, further, to encourage the gradual emergence of a common market among the American Republics.

(3) The development of uniform standards and practices with respect to the operation, rights, and responsibilities of private capital which flows across national boundaries within the Western Hemisphere.

(4) The consolidation of the public institutions and agencies of inter-American cooperation, insofar as feasible, within the structure of the Organization of American States and the strengthening of the personnel, resources, and authority of the Organization in order that it may play a role of increasing importance in all aspects of hemispheric cooperation.

(5) The development of a more accurate and sympathetic understanding among the peoples of the Western Hemisphere through a greater interchange of persons, ideas, techniques, and educational, scientific, and cultural achievements.

(6) The safeguarding of the tranquillity of the hemisphere by joint action by due process in the Organization of the American States to foreclose the establishment of military bases in this hemisphere by any nation not of this hemisphere and to curb by all necessary means any American nation whose policies and actions grossly outrage the conscience or threaten the security of the Americas.

MONROE DOCTRINE: WHAT IT SAYS

The statement of U.S. policy, known as the Monroe Doctrine, was enunciated by President James Monroe in his message to Congress, December 2, 1823, in which he declared:

"* * * The American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European powers.

"In the wars of the European powers in matters relating to themselves we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy so to do. It is only when our rights are invaded or seriously menaced that we resent injuries or make preparations for our defense. With the movements in this hemisphere we are of necessity more immediately connected.

"We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it * * * we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition to the United States.

"It is impossible that the allied [European] powers should extend their political system to any portion of either [American] continent without endangering our peace and happiness; nor can any one believe that our southern brethren, if left to themselves, would adopt it of their own accord. It is equally impossible, therefore, that we should behold such interposition in any form with indifference."
